Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes. They had a formula. It was on a capacity basis. It was 10 cents a bushel, and then so much more if the bin had been recently painted. The sales price for grain bins during this period was 10 cents per bushel of rated capacity, plus $25 if the bin had been recently repainted. Most of the grain bins had a capacity of 2,730 bushels.

The contention has been made that some of these bins were deteriorating and were sold because they were deteriorating. Some of these wooden bins were apparently deteriorating to the point where they were not useful for any other purpose than to house human beings. I have in my hand a letter from a man in Nebraska offering to send me pictures of homes that have been made out of these storage bins. Apparently they were not good enough and were deteriorating so rapidly and to such an extent that grain could not be stored in them, so they started to house human beings in them.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. I was on the conference committee and followed this bill very closely last year. I know that the gentleman did the same. I cannot remember at any time this issue being raised before our committee of a possible shortage of storage, nor can I remember that issue being raised in conference. Can the gentleman recall anything of that kind?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; as a matter of fact, it was well known in the committee last June when we passed this bill that at that time it had been the purpose, and it still is the purpose, of the Commodity Credit Corporation to dispose of surplus bins. The only issue before the committee at that time was whether the Government should be given authority to socialize the grain elevator and warehouse industry and if there is anything that I will ever be proud of in my life, it is the contribution that I have made toward preventing the socialization of that or any other segment of our American economy.

Mr. KUNKEL. Some of the conferees representing the other body were outstanding agriculturalists, is that not correct?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, yes; the conferees on the part of the other body, of course, were all agriculturalists. Although the Committee on Banking and Currency had jurisdiction of it in this body, the Committee on Agriculture had jurisdiction in the other body. The conference was with members of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and, as I remember it, the report was unanimous.

Mr. KUNKEL. Does the gentleman know of any legal opinion being given in the Department of Agriculture which indicated that the Commodity Credit Corporation did not have the power to furnish this storage?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; no such opinion was ever given. I might say that the administration had to apply to this language the narrowest interpretation that has ever been applied by any bureaucrat or any bureau to any language that ever passed this body. We have had the experience—or at least in the 18 years that I have been here, and for every year that we had these controls, we had to review the controls and spell them out in a little more understandable language, because of the loose interpretation and the very broad interpretation which the bureaus placed on them. If they sought power to do something they usually found the language to justify their actions. Every year, constantly, we have had to amend language to offset the breadth of the interpretation which bureaus and bureaucrats have put upon the congressional language. They put the narrowest interpretation on this, of any language that I ever knew of, to find excuses for not having furnished adequate storage facilities themselves.

Mr. KUNKEL. If memory serves me correctly, the final conference report on the Commodity Credit bill was adopted unanimously. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman is absolutely correct; both as to the conferees on the part of the House and of the other body, and, if I recall correctly, by the House itself.

Mr. HOEVEN. I believe I am correct in stating that during the discussion of the bill on the floor of the House last year no objection was raised on the part of the administration leaders, and the President signed the bill without comment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; but he did make a comment 3 or 4 days later when the Agricultural bill was signed by him. When he signed that bill, he commented on the CCC bill.

Mr. HOEVEN. But not at the time he signed this bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No protest was made at that time.

Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize these two major problems, which we have before us today. First, by amending this charter in respect to the board of directors, for all practical purposes, we, in effect, turn over the administration of the Commodity Credit Corporation to the Secretary of Agriculture and keep the corporate entity only for the purpose of issuing notes, bonds, and debentures to raise the money for the Secretary of Agriculture to use.

Secondly, we make it possible for the Secretary of Agriculture, through the use of this $4,750,000,000, or as much of it as he needs, to purchase every grain-storage facility, every tobacco-storage facility, every cotton-storage facility, every cold-storage plant—to buy every one of them in the United States, and thereby socialize that part of this very important industry, the industry upon which our agriculture depends, thereby eventually effectuating total socialization of agriculture.

I know, Mr. Chairman, there is a large—I hope not too large—segment of this House which has shown a disposition to socialize other segments of our economy; but as long as I am in the Congress of the United States, whether it be agriculture, whether it be industry, whether it be any other important segment of our economy, I am going to fight to the best of my ability to prevent the socialization of those different segments of our economy, because I like this form of government of ours and I will fight as hard as I can to protect it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has again expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 14 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this bill. It is an effort to again reestablish the Commodity Credit Corporation as an effective, reliable agency for the support of farm prices. I think it has been the most valuable tool that the Congress has had to raise the level of farm income in the United States.

It has helped do away with those violent fluctuations of farm prices that have led to feast and famine, but more often to famine for the farmers of this country.

This agency was virtually crippled on June 18, 1948, when the Republican leadership suspended the rules and in 40 minutes' debate passed the present bill. It was not subject to amendment or clarification, and it virtually did away with the principal arm that the Commodity Credit Corporation has always had to help maintain a decent level for farm prices.

Those two amendments were prohibition against acquiring its own additional storage facilities in areas of production or even securing new leases on land on which to place storage bins; and, second, the removal of the control of the Corporation from the Secretary of the Agriculture into an independent board. It thus created a divided line of authority that would certainly handicap and cripple the mandate that the Congress had placed upon the Secretary of Agriculture to support farm prices at 90 percent of parity.

This bill reinstates the method as it has been since 1938 when it has worked so effectively, and, incidentally, without any complaint as to any socialistic tendency or any effort to interfere, compete, or to seriously disturb any private business element of our country.

Through fear and the demand of the pressure groups, the House crippled this principal instrument in supporting farm prices through loan programs. No crop price-support program can work well without a loan program, and no loan program is possible unless the crop can be stored.

Much has been said by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], that during the period that we were having difficulty on the storage of these crops the Department of Agriculture sold storage bins. Look at the record. About 10 percent of their old, worn-out, deteriorated, wooden storage bins were sold during the period of time in question.

Yet this is cited as sole proof that the Department of Agriculture did not know what it was developing and was careless to the interests of the farmer for grain storage. These old wooden bins, built during the war in many cases, were in many cases badly placed. Often they were placed not where there was a glut expected in corn or wheat, but they were placed in far-off areas where emergencies did not exist; and yet the prohibition in the act the Congress had passed did not even delegate to the Corporation the right to move these wooden bins to new locations on leased land where gluts were occurring. I do not see how in the world you can claim that their action in disposing of the old bins indicates that the Department was unfamiliar with the situation.

I should like to read a portion of what Secretary Brannan said:

> Secretary BRANNAN. If the information or your thinking, Mr. WOLCOTT, is by disposing of them we destroy storage capacity, that is the point I want to correct specifically. In selling these we actually were taking steps to maintain the existing storage capacity at its maximum level. We were putting it in the hands of farmers who spend the time and money to keep the facilities in good shape. We were hoping that some day we would be able to replace them with uniform types of more durable storage. We have not sold any of the steel bins.

And yet they are criticized because they disposed of these, of a type, I grant you, that thrifty farmers or good handy men could have made into housing, but they were not the best type of storage. It was the part of wisdom for the Government to get out of the tremendous expense of maintaining this type of storage.

The argument of the former chairman of our committee that this bill did not prohibit the Department of Agriculture, the Commodity Credit Corporation, from acquiring storage and leasing sites and that the attorneys who interpreted this law were entirely too careful, is certainly a new line of argument to hear from the Republican side.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. Briefly.

Mr. KUNKEL. I should like to know where there is any interpretation or legal opinion that has been given on this question.

Mr. MONRONEY. Every attorney for the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Department of Agriculture held that they would be violating the mandate of the law that we passed if they did not construe the law as it was plainly written.

Agricultural leaders on the gentleman's side of the aisle who are most familiar with this farm storage situation took the floor when the former bill was under consideration to point out that very fact and brought in evidence from the large farm organizations of this country warning the Congress.

All that was placed in the RECORD on June 18, calling attention to exactly what your bill would do and what it did do. It sounds mighty funny to me to hear you people come and say this new bill would not be here if it were not for the fact that the President in some speech in Iowa in September last year had brought this charge. You had the information from your own members on your own Committee on Agriculture; you had it from the farm organizations; you had it from the President of the United States on July 3, shortly after he signed this bill.

Therefore you had this whole matter of how it crippled price supports raised before the Congress in time to do something about it. You knew how it was being construed. There was careless handling throughout by the committee. The fact that they suspended the rules and brought it in under that unusual procedure of legislating laid the trap that the Republican Party got themselves and the farmers caught in.

I cannot get terribly afraid of the charge by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] that this bill is going to socialize the grain and other storage industries.

Since 1938 the Corporation had been using to the fullest possible degree the storage facilities available through normal commercial channels. I had heard little or no complaint regarding its operations or any cries of interference with private enterprise. All this was done under its Delaware charter—a much broader grant of authority by far than that proposed by even the Department to the Congress when it sought its new Federal charter.

But a panic of fear was raised by various special interests who saw in the new charter either fancied danger of competition—or a chance to wreck this agency whose program had done so much to stabilize farm prices at good levels and to prevent the violent ups and downs of prices due to speculators.

And so the crippling amendments were written into the bill to prohibit by basic law the Government from having "power to acquire or lease any such plant or facility, or to acquire or lease real property or any interest therein, except that it may rent or lease office space necessary for the conduct of its business and it may continue to lease—by renewing of existing leases or entering into new leases—property leased by it on the date of enactment of this act."

If that does not mean that they were frozen exactly in the locations where they were, that they could not acquire any new storage facilities, such as track-side bin facilities that are so necessary to keep grain in the area of production, I do not know what it means.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MARSHALL. I call attention to the fact that the Commodity Credit Corporation is now in great danger with the farmers in taking delivery of wheat and will be in the fall in taking delivery of corn because they do not have the facilities in which to place the crop which the farmers will also hold the Eightieth Congress accountable for.

Mr. MONRONEY. I thank the gentleman.

It is rather amusing to hear speakers on the Republican side, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE], in their effort to try to shift the blame.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. The Secretary of Agriculture stated before the committee that he acted on the opinion of the counsel for the Agriculture Department and gave us an analysis of the opinion he rendered.

Mr. MONRONEY. I thank the gentleman. We hear all this conversation every day from the Republican side about officials exceeding their authority. This agency was surely trying to live within the letter of the law.

This is an effort today on the part of the Republican side to shift the blame to the Commodity Credit Corporation. They say the Commodity Credit Corporation should have used storage facilities which were only 20 percent full on the Atlantic seaboard or in Seattle or in Houston or perhaps South America. That does not hold water at all.

In their effort to escape blame, they would have ridden this wheat and corn thousands of miles out of its customary hauls to market to find this storage somewhere in these broad United States. Of course, they do not say just where the Government would have gotten the freight cars to do this joy riding with since there was a grave shortage of transportation at that time. They do not say how many millions of dollars this cross shipment—wasted haulage—would have cost. But it is as good an alibi as any when you are stuck with hard realities and with the fact your bill did cause this to happen.

They say that the Secretary should have raised the parity loan in the distressed localities, that he figured it all wrong. The same formula, however, that has been used, and whether you figure it from the farm to the market place or from the terminal back to the farm, it all comes out the same. The law provides that it shall be that way.

If transportation had been given to the farmers in these affected areas, they would have received higher than 90 percent of parity that other farmers were receiving, because the freight would have been given to them. This would have been in clear violation of the law that directs the Secretary to support the price of grain at 90 percent of parity.

Still another alibi had it that the Secretary should have stepped in and bought up wheat. Had he done this, he would have had to buy up almost all of the entire crop. And then the purchasing of this volume of the crop would have genuinely been subjected to the cry of Government interference with private enterprise, that it would have socialized the marketing of grain.

He did buy some, but this was under the direct orders of the Congress to buy as an agent for ECA and to not pay more than the market price for it. These purchases did give some relief to the hard-pressed farmers, but there is no precedent for large scale wheat-buying programs such as there are for other perishable crops.

These alibis will not work for the American farmer who knows that he must have an agency in Government capable of meeting emergencies when they arise and which must not be hog-tied and hobbled against taking the necessary action to provide for emergency production area storage, which is exactly what was denied to the Corporation by the bill passed by the Eightieth Congress.

None of us want to see the Government in the storage business or interfering with normal channels of trade when available in usable locations. That is why in this act before you now we have wisely—not unwisely—safeguarded existing privately owned and cooperatively owned storage facilities against Government competition.

We have said as plainly as the English language can put it as follows:

That the authority contained in this subsection (h) shall not be utilized by the Corporation for the purpose of acquiring any real property, or any interest therein, in order to provide storage facilities for any commodity unless the Corporation determines that existing privately owned storage facilities for such commodity in the area concerned are not adequate: And provided further, that nothing contained in this subsection (h) shall limit the duty of the Corporation, to the maximum extent practicable, consistent with the fulfillment of the Corporation's purposes and the effective and efficient conduct of its business, to utilize the usual and customary channels, facilities and arrangements of trade and commerce in the handling of commodities.

Remember, gentlemen, that we are writing basic law, into this charter. It is not possible to change this law on a minute's notice to meet a crisis such as we met with an inflexible prohibition against additional production area storage facilities in the present act. If there are threats of violation—despite the clear provisions of this act the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses in their annual review of the Corporation's budget can catch them—and prohibit them by limitations. Further the constant audit of the Corporation by the GAO will always keep the Congress informed of any plans that might conceivably be made—although none ever have to go beyond providing only necessary track-side storage.

In this act I hope that the Congress will not make the mistake the Eightieth Congress did and restrict this act against meeting such emergencies. All of the experience over 10 years of action proves that the CCC will use to the fullest extent existing private and cooperative storage facilities, no matter what the lobbyists may say. But they must have the right, in cases of emergency, to take care of these crops against destruction and deterioration due to lack of storage.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I want to point out that on page 109 of the hearings there is a statement by Chairman HOPE of the Committee on Agriculture of the Eightieth Congress and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] pointing out the two defects in this legislation, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 94, part 7, page 8872, and they concur, of course, in the general statement of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MONRONEY. And they do not concur in the statement of the ranking Republican Member.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NICHOLSON].

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, we have sat here and discussed the political campaign of last November, which does not have anything to do with this bill at all, and I hope the Members will not try to make this a Republican or Democratic measure.

This bill does two things: It does away with the Commodity Credit Corporation and hands it over to the Secretary of Agriculture, and it gives him power to build warehouses of any kind wherever or whenever he pleases. It seems to me that with the mark that the industry has made in this country of building warehouses for the commodities of the farmers, that they should be left alone. If it were not for the fact that private industry has furnished all through the years a place for the farmer to put his excess commodities, he would have been in a pretty sad plight. All of the information that came before the Committee on Banking and Currency showed that there were adequate—and I repeat, adequate facilities for the storage of commodities in this country.

So, I say, there are only two things here. If you want to do away with the Commodity Credit Corporation and hand it all over to one man who now, Mr. Chairman, has more than he can attend to, pass this bill. But we have a bill before us now that puts him in the housing business, and he is head of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and he is head of the Department of Agriculture, which everybody knows is a one-man job. He cannot spend any time doing anything else.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say for the benefit of Members that there is not anything that is Democratic or Republican about this at all, and whether we lost the fight or the other side won, does not make any difference at all, and ought not to. This bill affects every big city in the United States where they have warehouses today to take care of excess commodities. It puts them in a bad light. Furthermore, when we ask them to adopt private warehouses, they said, "We are not going to use them." Well, if they are not going to use them, what is it in there for? If somebody offers us an opportunity or you an opportunity to vote to strike that out, you will not hurt anybody.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I confined my remarks to storage facilities. I think we all have agreed on one thing, and let us leave politics out of it, that you did not have enough storage facilities in the West for grain last year.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I am sorry I cannot yield now, but the gentleman cannot refute what I have stated anyway because he does not live in the West, I happen to know.

The cause of insufficient storage facilities has nothing to do with this bill. If you do not pass this bill, you will not have any more facilities for your grain in the West, because under the present law that we passed last year the Commodity Credit Corporation could do but one thing, renew the lease on the facility at its present location, but it could not establish needed facilities anywhere else. The Corporation could not transfer a facility from a location where they had plenty of facilities to a place where they did not have enough. Therefore, the farmers were forced to sell their products when they did not have sufficient facilities.

Nobody can refute this. That is the truth, and the purpose of this bill is to give ample facilities everywhere, where free enterprise failed to do it. It is simply to provide facilities to store agricultural commodities where the Commodity Credit Corporation makes the loan.

Talk about socialism, I know there is not a man in this House more against socialism than I. The producers of the different commodities in the United States needed help, and we organized the Commodity Credit Corporation for the purpose of making loans to the commodity producer so he could hold his commodity off of a declining market.

From 1933 to last year, 1948, CCC had the right to go into any community and buy land and establish a facility and operate it in its entirety, and no complaint was made. The Commodity Credit Corporation is by far the most popular agency in the United States Government. Practically everybody on both sides of this aisle has paid it a great compliment in the years gone by. The fact that we now have a little political feud in the West does not change the need of these people. They are entitled to have this relief, and they will not have it unless this bill passes, because the Commodity Credit Corporation does not have the authority. You trusted the Commodity Credit Corporation from 1933 to 1948, when they had twice as much authority as they have under the present bill to go into a community and establish facilities and operate them, yet not a word of criticism was uttered or a finger pointed at it on the ground that the Corporation interfered with free enterprise.

Whose agency is this? It is the farmers' agency. Besides helping the farmer, it has gone into these communities and helped the local banks who furnish the money so the farmers can keep their products in the warehouses. All the farmers and practically all the warehousemen, except a very few selfish warehousemen, are for this bill today. If I were a warehouseman, I would show more gratitude to the agency that had made money for me throughout the years when the agency was established primarily for the purpose of helping the farmer. Incidentally, besides making money for the warehousemen, the Commodity Credit Corporation did not try to interfere with the building by private enterprise of any facility anywhere, but on the other hand cooperated with the warehousemen.

Gentlemen, let us forget politics. You need more storage facilities now in the West. You are going to need it in the South and other sections of the country some day. And if you do not need it, the Commodity Credit Corporation, under my amendment, cannot establish it. It is foolishness to argue that this will interfere with free enterprise.

Mr. Chairman, we sometimes criticize our Federal departments and agencies. Quite often they deserve all the criticism they get. At the same time, I think that we should recognize work well done. With that thought in mind, I want to say right here and now that the Commodity Credit Corporation has been doing an outstanding job for this country. It is serving the farmers well. It is serving consumers well.

We have built up a sound farm program in this country over the past 16 years. First of all, we eliminated farmers' fears of losing, through foreclosure, all that they had worked for through the hardest kind of toil. Then we went ahead to assure real parity to farmers, to put prices of what the farmers had to sell on a par with what they had to buy. Today agriculture is prosperous, a major factor in the over-all prosperity of the Nation. We in the Congress have a duty, a mandate, to do all we can to maintain agricultural prosperity.

The Commodity Credit Corporation is the strong backbone of the over-all farm program. Without the Corporation, without its flexible mechanism for taking prompt, decisive action in the face of serious emergency, there would be no farm program.

I know what the Commodity Credit Corporation has meant to the hardworking farmers of the South. I have talked to cotton raisers, to peanut growers, to tobacco producers. They have told me that, without the Corporation and its financial resources, prices of their commodities would be ruinously low. They have told me that the economic stability the Corporation has brought to southern agriculture has meant the difference between living in the good American tradition or of existing on the thin edge of poverty. They have made it clear to me that they want this important agency strengthened to the extent needed to meet its full responsibilities.

I know, too, what the Commodity Credit Corporation has meant to consumers. I have talked to consumers in the mill towns of the South and in the great population centers of the North. Consumers are learning more and more about agricultural economics. They know that farmers will produce the heavy volume of food and fiber required by our working, expanding population when farmers are assured that those products can be marketed at fair prices. They know, too, that fair prices for farm products increase the farmer's purchasing power and assures a broad market for the goods and services made available by nonfarm workers. They know that most depressions start with low prices for the things farmers sell and soon spread and result in idle factories in the city.

The Commodity Credit Corporation was established to help farmers. It was established to help consumers. It was, in brief, established to help all the people. It has done that job many times and in many ways.

When this country went to war, the Corporation was given the extremely difficult task of procuring, storing, and moving forward the vast quantities of food required by our armed forces and allies. At the height of the war this purchasing totaled more than $5,000,000 per day. But our armed forces never went hungry—whether they were stationed in this country or in Europe or Asia, and our allies were provided the strength needed to keep them fighting at our shoulder.

The procurement job carried over into the postwar period as this country threw its weight behind the nations battling to maintain their democratic ideals. Since VJ-day, the Corporation has purchased millions of tons of food for shipment to the Marshall-plan countries. This food has relieved human suffering, of course. But it also has assured the people living in the shadow of communism that the United States means business.

The Commodity Credit Corporation, in carrying on its price support, supply, and foreign-purchase programs, has handled transactions totaling billions of dollars. From the time the Corporation was organized in 1933 up to the present time, the activities of this agency have reflected good management on the part of the Corporation's officials. It is fortunate that we permitted the Corporation freedom to adopt prevailing business methods rather than requiring it to follow cumbersome procedures which are often so burdensome to farmers and businessmen in their transactions with government.

The Corporation, from the date of its organization up to the present time, has been operated on sound-business principles. All activities have been undertaken with the idea of protecting the best interests of the Government to the maximum extent possible. The financial results of the agency reflect this policy. The cost of carrying on operations other than subsidies, which were required to maintain OPA price ceilings at established levels, has been amazingly low considering the scope of the Corporation's activities and the benefits obtained.

Last year the Congress approved a Federal charter for the Corporation—a charter that made the Corporation a permanent agency of the United States. That charter maintained the borrowing power of the Corporation at $4,750,000,000. It also provided needed flexibility. This legislation, in general, was good legislation.

At the same time, the new charter had some defects. For example, it failed to give the Corporation needed authority to provide facilities to store grain controlled by the Corporation. It restricted the ability of the Secretary of Agriculture to discharge effectively all the responsibilities placed on him by the Congress. Several months of operation under the new charter have revealed other shortcomings.

This House has an opportunity, in H. R. 2682, to correct these deficiencies. And I am sure, by approval of the amendments to the Charter Act proposed in H. R. 2682, that this House will have added a milestone to an already imposing record of legislation in the field of agriculture. H. R. 2682 will strengthen the Corporation's charter. In strengthening the charter, it will enable the Commodity Credit Corporation to continue in the future—as it has in the past—to work in the best interests of all the people.

There is one amendment which I placed in the bill which is known as section 7. I want to tell you what it does. It authorizes the Commodity Credit Corporation to exchange surplus commodities, which the Corporation owns, for strategic and critical materials so that the stock-piling agency can pay or reimburse the Corporation for such strategic and critical materials and in this way the Commodity Credit Corporation will not lose anything.

Section 7 is one of the most important measures before the Congress from the standpoint of the benefit it may provide the American farmer in holding and expanding the market outlets for his products. Lengthy consideration is being given to the question of how low to reduce the production of our various agricultural commodities to bring supplies in line with existing demand. Weeks of discussion have already been held and will doubtless be held in the future on how high the unit price will have to be supported when production is restricted at lower levels to give farmers parity income or its equivalent.

This program attacks the farm problem from the other angle—expanding the distribution. This is a measure which is designed to increase the size of the farmer's market—to gain for him a market where none exists. In short, it is intended to increase the volume of his sales. It provides a realistic means of disposing of surpluses in world markets where they are needed by exchanging them for materials needed in the United States.

One of the most attractive features of this plan is that it will increase the market outlet for farm products without increasing the burden on the United States taxpayer. Critical materials so acquired by the Commodity Credit Corporation in exchange for agricultural surpluses will be transferred to the defense stock pile and the Commodity Credit Corporation will be reimbursed out of funds already appropriated for stock-pile purposes under the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act. Other nonstrategic materials in short supply in the United States could be secured by the Commodity Credit Corporation in exchange for agricultural surpluses under its regular powers.

Probably the most constructive feature of the program envisioned under this legislation is the use of agricultural surpluses as incentive goods to stimulate production of materials required in the United States which are in world short supply.

At the present time the United States and the world is short of many strategic and critical materials such as natural rubber, tin, manganese, and columbite for making steel, asbestos, mica, shellac, and hard fibers. The United States is deficient in a number of other ores and minerals of which world supplies must be increased to allow a further expansion in industrial plants here and abroad: nickel, tungsten, antimony, bauxite for aluminum, zinc, lead, copper, and many others.

The principal reason for the short supply is that these materials are being produced at a fraction of prewar rates. In most cases production is lagging because the native laborers have little incentive to produce. In countries where these materials are found, the shelves of the stores are almost bare; there is little for which the workers can spend their money; therefore there is no incentive for their working harder or longer.

When copra production was lagging in the South Pacific after the war at a time when there was a serious world short supply of fats and oils and world allocations were in effect to prevent supplies being drained from the United States, the Commodity Credit Corporation entered into an arrangement with the Dutch East Indies using incentive goods to stimulate copra production. The Commodity Credit Corporation first established a general line of credit for the account of the Dutch East Indies to be used for the purchase of incentive goods, primarily cotton textiles. Under the terms of the agreement the credit was to be paid by the Dutch East Indies in designated quantities of copra or in cash. The result of the scheme was very successful. When the natives realized the goods were available, they went into the plantations and picked up the coconuts. The production of copra was thus increased; the copra was sold and the Commodity Credit Corporation's credit was repaid. In this operation a market was opened for United States cotton since the textiles purchased were made with United States cotton. This market had previously been closed because of lack of foreign exchange.

Similar operations were carried on in the Philippines with incentive goods to increase production.

The Army and Navy Munitions Board has used incentive goods to stimulate production of badly needed commodities in various parts of the world over a period of years and recognizes the importance of such programs.

It is entirely possible that such operations can be carried on through the normal channels of trade once the overall agreement is established. The reason for bringing an agency like the Commodity Credit Corporation into the picture is for the purpose of providing the initial credit to facilitate these transactions. Once the credit with a government agency in another country is established the private trade can then proceed to supply the goods expressly provided in the terms of the credit. The repayment of the credit likewise can be made through the normal channels of trade either by transfer of the commodities or by the sale of the commodities and payment to the crediting agency in cash.

Production of many of these materials mentioned above can be increased throughout the South Pacific, Asia, and Africa with such prime incentive goods. Cotton textiles is one of the best. These loin cloths have always been the medium of exchange in these areas.

While emphasis must logically be placed on exchanges of surplus agricultural commodities which have the greatest value as incentive goods, the program need not be limited thereto.

We expect the program to stimulate distribution of such surpluses as cotton, tobacco, edible oils, grains, and possibly some perishables.

We expect these exchanges will continue to be made through the normal channels of trade to the maximum extent feasible, as provided in section 5 of the Commodity Credit Corporation's charter which Congress passed last year.

This would not restrict the Commodity Credit Corporation from continuing operations of the nature of the Dutch East Indies contract. In fact, this is intended to encourage and strengthen the Commodity Credit Corporation in the distribution of surplus agricultural commodities in the form of incentive goods in exchange for critical and strategic materials which can be transferred to the stock pile or otherwise disposed of.

This specific amendment would broaden the power of the Commodity Credit Corporation to permit the transfer of any critical commodities so acquired to the defense stock pile and provide reimbursement from the stock-pile funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] has expired.

All time has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (Public Law No. 806, 80th Cong.) is amended by deleting the words "direction and control of its Board of Directors" at the end of the said section and substituting therefor the words "supervision and direction of the Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as the 'Secretary')."

Mr. TALLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to speak for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. TALLE. Mr. Chairman, as I approach this subject which has for so many months been surrounded with an atmosphere of misrepresentation on the part of the administration, I think of the English bobby who, when he arrested a culprit on the streets of London, told him, as he took out his pencil and paper: "Remember, good fellow, everything you say will be taken down, changed, and used against you."

I want to say for my own record that I have always supported the Commodity Credit Corporation. I was in favor of it when it was first established. I have worked diligently and earnestly for it during my years of service in this House. I will match my votes and my efforts with anybody who is a friend of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The Delaware charter has been mentioned. Everybody knows that a Delaware charter grants very broad powers, but it was a convenient way of setting up the Corporation. Members will remember that until last year the life of the Corporation was temporary, and the Congress repeatedly extended its life for a year or so before its expiration date. I used to jest with the former Secretary of Agriculture, now the junior Senator from New Mexico, about this Delaware charter. I reminded him of what happened under the charters of some of the old limited companies that were started in England in the days when limited companies were just getting under way. Some of those remarkable charters make interesting reading. If there is anything that should be clear in a charter it is its purpose, and some of those old charters used to read: "The purpose or purposes of this charter will be revealed in due time." That is why in the Seventy-ninth Congress we passed a Government Corporations Control Act which required Government corporations to acquire Federal charters before July 1, 1948, in the event they wanted to continue. Accordingly, the House Banking and Currency Committee in the Eightieth Congress proceeded faithfully and painstakingly to write a permanent Federal charter for the CCC, because it was generally recognized that the Commodity Credit Corporation had done a fine service both before the war and during the war. Orderly marketing was promoted prior to the war. In those days farmers worried about surpluses, not shortages. The CCC served to withhold price-depressing surpluses from the market and thus stabilized farm prices. During the war it performed another service in that it was the vehicle by which we were able to offer farmers incentives to produce much-needed food and to assure farmers a reasonable return for their labors.

The funds of the CCC are not small pickings. The capital stock of the Corporation is $100,000,000, and if some of it is used up, the Treasury replenishes the deficiency. The borrowing power of the Corporation is its principal source of funds. This amounts to $4,750,000,000 and is obtained by the issuance of bonds, notes, debentures based on the credit of the United States. In addition to these sources of funds there is a third one. The so-called section 32 funds, which over a period of 15 years have afforded the Corporation much over a billion dollars to work with, is money which is set aside from customs duties and tariffs receipts. So, I say—the funds are not small pickings. The Congress ought to begin to have a little regard for the value of the dollar; a little regard for the taxpayers' money. I believe it is reasonable to say that it is a pretty good idea to have two so-called outside members on the Board of Directors. In reply to specific questions put to the Secretary of Agriculture, he agreed that the two outside members who have served on the board have never at any time created any difficulty for him. He and members of his department constitute a majority of the Board. The outside members cannot defeat his purpose.

The change that is proposed in the pending bill means one-man rule, in the language of the Comptroller General. Many Members remember the distinguished service performed in this Chamber by the Honorable Lindsay C. Warren. It is well to take a look at his statement in the hearings, pages 132–139. It is a very important statement. The Comptroller General warns against making the Board of Directors mere puppets. I realize that when somebody has tasted power he wants more, but if we proceed to make every board member somebody who can be named and fired at the will of the Secretary of Agriculture, why have any board at all?

Another kind of change proposed in this bill brings into use loose language. I invite you, Mr. Chairman, to think back to the OPA days. Remember what a difficult time we had getting some administrators and certainly the Administrator of the OPA to do what the Congress said should be done. That is why I asked the Secretary of Agriculture during the hearings: "Do I understand that henceforth the principle of strict construction will be followed?" The Secretary replied, "I will accept the interpretations of the Department's lawyers."

Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize as forcefully as I can that the Commodity Credit Corporation has performed a distinct service in the matter of price supports. This, in my opinion, is the most valuable service it has performed. Farming is a highly competitive enterprise. In times of depression farm products fall first and they fall farthest. Protection against such disaster is a benefit to our entire Nation.

I commend the CCC for its service both before the war and during the war. It has earned for itself a good name. That good name should be cherished, and I join with the Comptroller General, the Honorable Lindsay C. Warren, in his warning against one-man rule. Our Government has always recognized the principle of checks and balances, and no good purpose could be served by departing from it now.

Mr. Chairman, I call to mind what St. Augustine once said: "Man is a creature surrounded by evidence of his weaknesses." That somber fact of human nature explains the atmosphere of misrepresentation to which I referred at the outset.

It was revealing to me to hear the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] say that the Republicans last fall stepped into a trap. I repeat, that was a most revealing statement. But, I ask, who set the trap? I would suggest that some of our Government officials would earn their salaries more honestly if they attended faithfully to the work they are paid to do and spent no time "setting traps" for Republicans for the purpose of partisan political advantage.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TALLE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota, who has always been a strong and consistent supporter of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Would it not have been far more to the point had the gentleman from Oklahoma, in the interest of agriculture, showed where such a trap existed, so that we could have made a better bill out of it at the time the last Act was passed in June of last year, rather than, as the gentleman from Oklahoma admitted, to set up a trap in which to catch people for partisan political purposes?

Mr. TALLE. I agree with the gentleman from Minnesota. The statement was a stunner to me, because I have faith in my colleagues and I want to preserve my faith in my Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, on last June 18, when we passed the Commodity Credit Charter Act, I personally urged upon members of the Committee of Banking and Currency, Members on my side of the aisle, to take out of the bill certain language which did restrict to a certain extent the Commodity Credit Corporation power in securing new sites for storage. I feel that our party erred in bringing that bill up in the closing days of the session when, with all the other pressing matters before us, sufficient time could not be given to the proper consideration of this particular act. But, at the same time, there was fault upon the other side of the aisle. Not once did I hear any Member on the right during the special session, when we were here 3 weeks during last August, say that there was anything wrong with this particular act. I did hear of the politically inspired misstatements made by the President of the United States in October.

On October 12, the President said in part at Danville, Ill.:

> I was down in southern Illinois the other day, and corn down there in southern Illinois was selling for $1 a bushel, and the support price of corn is $1.47 a bushel. Farmers all over the country are being forced to dump their grain as distress grain, or let it rot on the ground, because the Commodity Credit Corporation no longer has the power to provide emergency storage space for bumper crops. That is the Republican's program, pure and simple. The farmers cannot get the Government support price, because their crops are not in storage.

Now remember he made this statement on October 12, very early in the harvesting season for corn.

I excuse the President because of his obvious ignorance as to the true situation. First, practically no corn was harvested by October 8 or 10. Secondly, the moisture contents of the bulk of the corn through that area at the time was too high to qualify that early for sealing.

There was no reason, except too much moisture, why any farmer could not put up his own slat crib on a floor a foot from the ground, crib up his corn, put a cheap roof over it, and apply for a loan. By thus qualifying, with moisture contents not over 20½ percent, any farmer could seal his corn. In my part of Minnesota the Commodity Credit advanced me $1.36 per bushel for the corn thus sealed. Why did the President not tell this side of the picture? Certainly corn which was not sealed did sell at $1 a bushel or less, but not because of any action by the Eightieth Congress. Old Mother Nature just put too much moisture into that corn. Yes, let us remember in the consideration of this particular bill that there are faults on both sides, ladies and gentlemen. This Commodity Credit Corporation is far too valuable to the farmers for us to drag it through the mire of politics and destroy it. I want to say here that I think we will make a mistake unless we agree with the action taken by the committee in regard to the control of the Corporation. We should, in my opinion, keep control of the Commodity Credit Corporation in the hands of one man, and that one man should be the Secretary of Agriculture. And for what reason? We in Congress want to hold some one man responsible, and unless we do give him the authority to do the job; unless we do give him the undivided authority to do a good job, I, as ranking Republican member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Agriculture, cannot hold him responsible. He must report to us as to his operations and he must, in the final analysis, be responsible to Congress. I do not want divided authority upon that particular Board. I want it ready to operate quickly when needed and able to reach decisions quickly. I know that the Commodity Credit Corporation did a good job from 1938 on, and I personally want to help it continue to do that good work, gentlemen. It has meant too much to me as a farmer to hinder or handicap in any way. Let us be big enough to admit that there were faults on both sides of this House. Let us try to do something worth while in this bill. Let us put grain-storage facilities out in the little towns and villages throughout the West, where it is needed. Let us give to the farmers the opportunity to secure credit at a low rate of interest to build storage facilities on their farms instead of forcing huge quantities of grain to go in at one time to the big terminals and instead of trying to hunt through all of America to find enough freight cars to haul it in at one time. I repeat, let us put that grain-storage space out where it belongs, and let us make loans at a decent rate of interest to the farmer and give him the opportunity to construct those facilities right upon his own farm. I understand that the bill now under consideration is broad enough in powers to do all of this. I have been assured that it is.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to the gentleman from California who has proven himself always a friend of the farmers of the Nation.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I would just like to say that an amendment to cover the point the gentleman is now discussing will be offered.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I thank the gentleman and hope his amendment will be agreed to, so that there will be no question such authority is in the bill. In closing, let me again urge the support of this bill. The Commodity Credit Corporation has meant millions of dollars to agriculture. It is the heart and soul of the entire farm price-support program for which I personally have fought for 11 years on the floor of this House. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE], who just preceded me on the floor, expressed better than I could the need for strengthening the Commodity Credit Corporation. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE] has always aided in this program, and I join with him in urging the passage of this very worth-while measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss this bill, H. R. 2632, for a short time. First of all I want to say that the gentlemen on the left-hand side of this House amuse me sometimes. You know, I hate to see this thing made a political issue. It is not a political issue. It is an issue that concerns the left-hand side of this House just the same as it does the right-hand side of this House. But, some of the gentlemen on the left-hand side of the House remind me of a little Irish girl that used to go buggy riding with me back in the days of my youth when my heart was as free as any bird and life was a glorious dream of flowers. You know, if I would kiss that little Irish girl she would slap me, and if I did not, she would dare me to. That is the way with the gentlemen on the left-hand side of this House. If we remind them of the mistakes of the Eightieth Congress they go off and pout about it, and if we do not, they get up here and dare us to. They have been doing that yesterday and today. That is the similarity.

To get back to discussing this bill, the gentleman who just left the floor here was talking about liberty. We had a lot of liberty from 1920 to 1933, when the Commodity Credit Corporation took over. Liberty to produce food and fiber and sell it for less than one-half the cost of production. Liberty to go broke. Liberty to have our homes sold at the east front door of the courthouse. I do not like that kind of liberty.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. No; I cannot yield.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Just to correct the gentleman's statement? I know the gentleman does not want to leave the wrong impression.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I stood here in the well of this House and begged one of the gentlemen on that side to yield and he would not do it.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman referred to the gentleman who had just left the floor as making certain remarks relative to liberty. As I had made personally no such remarks, I have attempted through this point of order to call it to the attention of the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not state a point of order.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. What is it that this bill now before us, H. R. 2682, does? Let us get it straight and remove all verbosity and get right down to the bottom and see what we are trying to do here today. The only thing we are trying to do here today is to give the Commodity Credit Corporation power to function. That is all we are trying to do. We are trying to give the Commodity Credit Corporation, as far as the farmer is concerned, the right to buy, build, or lease storage for surplus grain. Who can object to that?

Maybe some of the gentlemen could object to it who objected to all the farm program. If you want to make it political, the Commodity Credit Corporation is a part of the New Deal. There is no use to deny it. I am going to stand up here and admit it. That is exactly what it is.

I heard a Republican orator say last fall that he hoped to live long enough to see the New Deal so completely erased that there would not be so much as a smudge on the consciousness of the American people to remind them that such an abomination had ever existed. That kind of a man might object to giving the Commodity Credit Corporation the power to do the thing it was created to do. I hope we do not have that kind of man in this House and I trust that the vote will show we do not.

What is the use to tell a man to go out in the woods and kill a bear and tell him at the same time that he cannot have anything but a crossbow to do it with? It does not make sense to me. We are asking the Commodity Credit Corporation to do a job, and we are also asking the Secretary of Agriculture to stabilize prices. Of course if he stabilizes those prices at 60 percent of parity, where some of the gentlemen on the left-hand side of this House want it stabilized, he probably will not need any help. That 60-percent-of-parity proposition comes from the same side of the House as that which does not want to give the Commodity Credit Corporation power to lease grain storage.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Let me ask the gentleman a question as long as he is up here. Did the Commodity Credit Corporation during September, October, and November of last year have the power to buy or build storage for corn? Tell me, did it?

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has examined this subject in committee for all these years, and according to his testimony, and I do not question it, and I doubt that anyone on this floor who knows him would question it, they did have. I am going to take his word for it.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JENSEN. Since the gentleman has brought up this 90–60 sliding scale, as a gage for support prices on farm products, to which I am opposed just as much as he is, I would like to have him read the article which I put in yesterday's RECORD which will prove to him that I am opposed to it.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I thank the gentleman. I am very glad to hear that he agrees with me there.

Mr. JENSEN. I want to remind the gentleman who wrote that bill. It was written by the Department of Agriculture in collaboration with the labor bosses and was sold to the top heads of the farm organizations. It was not a Republican bill. The House of Representatives whipped it. We whipped it in the House and it never passed the House.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Did the Eightieth Congress pass it, or did it not?

Mr. JENSEN. Yes, they did.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. All right, then; I hope I may continue. I only have a few seconds.

Mr. JENSEN. But it was the work of the Department of Agriculture and your President and mine signed the bill.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Yes, and the President signed it under protest saying that it was no good.

Mr. JENSEN. I think he was right.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JENSEN. I think he was right for once.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Your work has just started, sir, you have a lot of missionary work to do in your own party.

Mr. JENSEN. My friend. I have been here for 11 years working.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I yield.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Is not the name of the bill that you are talking about which was passed by the Eightieth Congress the Hope-Aiken bill?

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Yes; that is the very bill I do not like, and the Lord only know how much I do not like it.

Mr. JENSEN. But it was not the Hope-Aiken bill, it was the Aiken bill, the Agriculture Department bill, the labor bosses' bill.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Chairman, if I may continue, I want to say right here that the labor boys are interested in this bill. Anything that interests the American farmer or is for the good of the American farmer is for the good of the American laboring man. When the American laboring man gets up in the morning he wants his breakfast. Who furnishes it to him? The American farmer furnishes it to him. What was the American laboring man doing when I was selling my wheat for 35 cents a bushel? He was riding in freight cars and tramping the sidewalks all over the United States because he was out of a job. Any time the price on the American farms goes down so that 30,000,000 farm people do not have a good purchasing power, then labor has no job and they have no purchasing power. The farmer and the American laboring man are just like two peas in a pod. What is good for one of us is good for the other. That is the reason why last week I voted to repeal the Taft-Hartley law. I hope we can get that done. That is why I am fighting the Aiken farm bill. A gentleman came to me a while ago and said, "You voted wrong, you voted against your farmers the other day when you voted to repeal the Taft-Hartley law."

I said, "Brother, the thing that is going to hurt labor worse than anything else in these United States is when we reach the point where they can again buy food at the prices which existed in 1932."

That was the greatest calamity which ever happened to labor or which could ever happen to labor. Thirty-five-cent wheat does not feed the laboring man because they have no money to buy it when wheat sinks to that level. So far as this corn and wheat business is concerned, out in my country last fall corn was hauled to the elevators and they drove the price down to $1 a bushel for good yellow corn when it had a loan value of $1.46, because the Commodity Credit Corporation could not lease terminal storage facilities. That is exactly what the trouble was. It is no use for you boys over there trying to alibi.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal said in the course of this debate about what happened in the campaign last fall. Perhaps too much has been said about it. I did not know that I would say anything about it at this time, but others have referred to my criticism of the bill to grant a charter to the Commodity Credit Corporation when it was before the House last June, and perhaps some Members have gotten the impression that my remarks at that time were along the same line as the criticism of the President and other Democratic speakers during the campaign. That, however, is not the case.

I felt that the bill as reported by the committee was defective, in that it did not give the Commodity Credit Corporation sufficient power to acquire storage facilities in which to store grain taken over from farmers. I also felt that the provisions which set up a separate board were such as would prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from carrying out the functions and duties which had been given him under the various price-support laws. That is still my position.

I think that the bill that is before us now does take care of both of those situations, and as far as I am concerned, it is satisfactory and I am supporting it. I am not saying that I may not vote for amendments which may be offered to the bill, but as far as those two matters are concerned, I am satisfied with the provisions in the bill as reported by the committee. So much for the measure before us. It is a good bill and should pass without serious opposition.

Now, referring to the campaign of last fall, and I do so only for the purpose of keeping the record straight, I want to say that I do not think that responsibility for any shortage of grain storage last fall can be placed upon the Republican Party or the Eightieth Congress. I call attention to the fact that all of this political discussion was precipitated by a statement which the President made at Dexter, Iowa, in a campaign speech in which he said, referring to the problem of grain storage:

> When the Democratic administration had to face this problem in the past, the Government set up grain bins all over the Wheat and Corn Belts to provide storage.
> Now the farmers need such bins again. But when the Republican Congress rewrote the charter of the Commodity Credit Corporation this year, there were certain lobbyists in Washington representing the speculative grain trade.
> These big-business lobbyists and speculators persuaded the Congress not to provide storage bins for the farmers. They tied the hands of the administration. They are preventing us from setting up the storage bins that you will need in order to get support prices for your grain.

The President's statements would imply that he thought that the Commodity Credit Corporation had in the past furnished facilities to farmers for the storage of their own grain. If so, the President was mistaken because the Commodity Credit Corporation had never, up until that time or since, furnished storage to farmers in which to store their grain while it still belonged to them. The Corporation did have facilities in which to store grain, after it was taken over at the maturity of the loan and thus became the property of the Corporation. But never had it furnished the farmers bins in which to store their own grain.

There was a serious shortage of grain storage last summer and fall but any action to relieve that shortage would necessarily have had to be taken months before—in fact long before the passage of the Commodity Credit Corporation charter bill in June, because the 1948 wheat crop was already being harvested at that time. Now no one contends that the CCC did not have ample authority to furnish storage to farmers prior to July 1 when the new charter became effective. Yet with big crops coming on and a serious situation looming up no action was taken by the CCC to meet the problem, which action would, of course, have had to be taken long before July 1 because it takes months to construct storage. It was too late to initiate any action after that time.

So certainly, if there is any responsibility for the lack of grain storage last fall, it is the responsibility of the administration which was in power and which was operating until the 1st of July, under the Commodity Credit Corporation charter, granted under the Delaware law and containing no restrictions on the acquisition of storage. But in 1948 as in previous years neither the CCC nor the Department of Agriculture made any effort to furnish storage to farmers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that while it is true that there was storage difficulty last fall, yet during the past 6 or 8 years in different parts of the country, that same shortage of storage existed? Is not that true?

Mr. HOPE. That is true, at least during the last 5 or 6 years. It has existed ever since we have been having these unusually large crops of grain, and it will probably continue to exist, although during these years with or without the help of the Commodity Credit Corporation we have seen an increase in all types of grain storage, especially on the farms and at country marketing points, and we have in this country today a greater amount of over-all grain storage than we have ever had in our history. We are better able to take care of the situation than we have ever been. Nevertheless, I expect that this fall we shall still have a shortage in farm storage, and there is nothing that can be done between now and harvest time that will entirely meet that situation. I am certainly in favor of anything that can be done to provide more storage on the farm. Under the provisions of the Commodity Credit Corporation charter and the bill we have before us, the Commodity Credit Corporation will be able to make loans to farmers if they are needed with which to set up storage on the farms. They will be able to make loans to cooperatives so they can erect more storage; they will be able to make loans to the private grain trade if needed in order to furnish more storage, so that we should in any event have some alleviation of this situation. But let me point out that if this is done it will be for the first time, although the CCC had ample authority to furnish the same for almost 15 years since July 1, 1948. But we are not going to go into this fall with full relief of the shortage of storage, nor is there anything we can do between now and fall to bring about full relief.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. We all know that the gentleman from Kansas has worked diligently and honestly for sufficient storage for these commodities. We also know that the gentleman has always been for the 90-percent-of-parity supports on basic farm commodities. Is it not a fact that the gentleman who is now addressing this House, who was chairman of the Committee on Agriculture during the Eightieth Congress, fought to the last ditch and to the last minute the morning that we adjourned on June 20 of last year to hold the 90-percent-of-parity support prices on farm commodities?

Mr. HOPE. Yes; I will say to the gentleman that all the House conferees held out to the very last for the House version of the bill which extended 90-percent price supports for an additional year. We accepted the Aiken bill only when it became apparent that if we did not yield there would be no extension of price supports for the year 1949; and we yielded, of course, with the understanding that the Aiken bill would not go into effect until January 1, 1950, and that the Eighty-first Congress, no matter what its political complexion might be, would have an opportunity to reconsider the matter.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I may say, and I am only saying it because the question was raised by the gentleman from Missouri, that as far as the so-called Aiken bill is concerned, it is based upon a program presented by the distinguished then Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. ANDERSON, and other officials of the Department of Agriculture. If anyone has any doubt about the matter all he needs to do is to read the hearings before the Senate committee on the Aiken bill. It was not a partisan measure at all but one worked out by the Department of Agriculture and the Senate Committee on Agriculture as well as leaders of some of the farm organizations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words and ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, the problem before us now is not so much to settle the issue as to who was responsible for the inadequate storage facilities last fall which forced so many grain farmers to sell corn well below the support price, as to be sure that we make proper provision in the present law so that the situation will not occur again, either in wheat, corn, or cotton.

Several Members from the cotton areas of the country say that they have had telegrams and letters from those in the warehousing business requesting that we prohibit the Commodity Credit Corporation from leasing, buying, or providing warehousing for cotton. These gentlemen in the warehousing business are interested in their businesses and would not like to see any encroachment by the CCC upon private enterprise. I can appreciate their feelings. But this is no attempt to permit the Commodity Credit Corporation to take away their business and to replace private enterprise in this field. Should the facilities furnished by private enterprise be insufficient and if farmers are to be deprived of price support as a result, certainly the Commodity Credit Corporation should be permitted to provide storage where private enterprise has not done so. To those Members I may say that we have had periods of shortages in warehousing before. It has only been a year or two since we had cotton stored out in the open in Alabama, Mississippi, Oklahoma, and in certain other areas, and lawsuits were brought by the Commodity Credit Corporation for damage to that cotton. I mention that not with the thought that in my opinion the Commodity Credit Corporation should go out and provide storage to replace that of private industry or to build more than is needed, or even enough to be sure that you can meet any contingency that might arise, but I mention this in order that you may know that under some circumstances it is highly important if the people of this Nation are to have the benefits of these price-support programs, that we have adequate storage so that those crops can meet the conditions necessary for the farmers to get the loans. Otherwise the price-support programs we have passed in the Congress are of no help to the man who cannot qualify for the loan because he cannot get his commodity into a warehouse.

While I think it is highly important that the Commodity Credit Corporation have this authority, in my opinion, the provision offered by my friend, the gentleman from Georgia, providing that the Commodity Credit Corporation must find that there is insufficient storage, is really important. While the CCC should have this authority, they should exercise it most cautiously. We will have the opportunity to see that they do not abuse this power but that they exercise it most cautiously. They must come before the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations, each year where we fix the limit on their administrative expenses and restore any capital impairment of the Corporation. When the Commodity Credit Corporation appears before our committee each year to fix the administrative expenses of the Corporation, it will be the simplest thing in the world, if they do take undue advantage of this provision of the law, for our committee to write a limitation into the bill that none of these administrative funds could be used for those purposes. Since we will have that review each and every year, I do not believe there is any real reason to fear that the Commodity Credit Corporation will take any unfair advantage of such provision.

Now there is another provision in this measure which I think is probably more important. I have supported the farm price-support program since I have been in Congress. As chairman of the subcommittee on agricultural appropriations, I have sponsored the providing of funds to support farm prices at 90 percent of parity, yet that is not the whole answer. We must move our surpluses. This bill makes a move in that direction. It provides that the Commodity Credit Corporation may exchange, if you please, some of the commodities that it has on hand and which are surplus to our domestic needs to foreign countries for strategic materials that this country may need. In my judgment, one of the chief weaknesses of Secretary Brannan's recommended program, and the main weakness with so many of our agricultural programs, is that too many people believe that if we just have high-price supports, with crop controls to cut down on our crops until we use up whatever supply we have on hand, that we have answered the problem, the farmer would be prosperous and the Nation economically sound. That is not true. That is slow strangulation. If we give up our foreign markets that have been ours throughout the years, and produce only to meet our own needs, we are bound to fail. I am for this bill, I am for adequate storage, but if anybody believes that by adequate storage, high support prices and controls, that the country will be prosperous and that the farmers will be prosperous, we are just kidding ourselves. Yet, that is the theory and the theme that goes through the various programs offered to us, including the present law and the proposals of the Secretary of Agriculture.

No; I am afraid that the Department of Agriculture, so far as foreign trade is concerned, has too weak a voice in foreign trade and in trade agreements, and for that reason there is too little exportation of surplus agricultural commodities. A few weeks ago I introduced a bill to which I hope this fine Committee on Banking and Currency will give some attention, H. R. 3486. It would place the Secretary of Agriculture on the Advisory Board for the International Monetary Fund, and further it makes him a member of the Advisory Board for the Import-Export Bank so that he will have a stronger voice in the exportation of our surplus agricultural commodities through this connection with those programs. A few weeks ago we managed to save, in the agricultural appropriation bill from my committee, section 32 funds, approximately $125,000,000, being 30 percent of customs receipts on products coming into this country, to help meet the problem of surplus products. A day or two ago I introduced H. R. 4493, a bill which would require the Secretary of State and the Federal Government to give special attention to surplus agricultural commodities in the working out of reciprocal trade agreements. That measure is pending before the Ways and Means Committee and I hope will have favorable consideration. We must give attention to the fact that we have got to sell that which we do not need for whatever we can get for it, and we cannot have a prosperous nation or agriculture by piling up in our warehouses these crops and cutting down production until we eat up what we have on hand. Such a policy could mean no crop would be produced in some years. This year we will have a big production of cotton. We could have a year's supply on hand at the end of this year. Do you mean to say that we should cut out all production next year? Do you want to do that with corn? Of course, you do not. Yet, it was only a few years ago that the Secretary of State of this great Nation, before a congressional committee, I believe the committee was headed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE], opposed the sale of surplus agricultural products to foreign countries for less than the support price in our country. In other words he would not have sold our surplus at all because such commodities could be bought elsewhere for less than our support price.

I am saying to you that we need adequate storage. We need to pass the measure before us because we need to authorize the Commodity Credit Corporation to do whatever is necessary to let all our people come under our farm price-support program. But, that is not the whole answer to our present problem. Unless we insist on the Department of Agriculture demanding our fair share of foreign markets, and unless we sell that which we produce and which we do not need but which the people of the world are crying for, unless we sell that for what we can get for it, we are in for serious trouble, and that applies not only to agriculture, but to labor, and the very economic well-being of the Nation is involved.

I say to you, let us provide this storage, but when we put those commodities in storage, if we do not need them, let us see to it that they are sold for cash if possible, but exchanged for commodities we may need if necessary. We must get away from any program which would cut down or cut out production of a given commodity until we use up what we have on hand. Our country was made great by reason of its great productive capacity. We have produced for our own needs and sold the balance to the nations of the world who need it—for what they could pay—either in cash or in other products we need. We must return to that practice, to do otherwise is to lose our foreign markets and could return our Nation to the terrible conditions of 1930–32—when the farmer could not get half his cost of production and the consumer could not get half enough to eat.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would not have entered into the debate at this time except for the fact that there has been so much talk about who killed cock robin. Personally, I think the most important problem here today is to meet the legislative situation—to deal with commodity storage. But, in view of all that has been said as to who was responsible for the break in prices or the decline in prices last fall, it might be just as well to have the record complete.

I hold in my hand here a copy of Public Law 897 of the Eightieth Congress. This is the so-called Hope-Aiken Act. This was probably the last act of the Eightieth Congress of the regular session last year. It was approved on the 3d of July 1948.

Many people have forgotten what that act says.

I read from section 1, the very first sentence:

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed through any instrumentality or agency within or under the direction of the Department of Agriculture, by loans, purchases, or other operations—

(a) To support prices received by producers of cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, rice, and peanuts marketed before June 30, 1950—

And so forth.

The price support authorized by this subsection shall be made available as follows:

(1) To cooperators at the rate of 90 percent of the parity price for the commodity as of the beginning of the marketing year.

Most of this discussion has proceeded on the assumption that the only authority of the Secretary of Agriculture was to provide for 90 percent of parity by loans. This whole argument about storage has revolved about the loan feature. That would be amending the law to read that—

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed through any instrumentality or agency within or under the direction of the Department of Agriculture, by loans to support prices.

But that is not what the law says. The law directs the Secretary "by loans, purchases, or other operations to support prices."

Those who are familiar with the trend of prices and the trend of purchasing by the Department of Agriculture last year will recall that the Department of Agriculture and the Commodity Credit Corporation were in and out of the market. In my opinion, they never fulfilled the specific directive of the Congress that they should support 90 percent of parity by loans, purchases, or other operations.

Those of you who are familiar with the way the purchasing program was handled for ECA will recall that the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Department of Agriculture did not carry out the directive to support the 90 percent program by purchases. I am familiar with the fact that in the ECA law there was a prevailing price amendment, but at the same time that antedated the Hope-Aiken Act, and the Hope-Aiken Act started with these words, "Section 1. Notwithstanding any other provision of law," so clearly the responsibility rested upon the Department of Agriculture and the Secretary of Agriculture to support 90 percent of parity for the crops of cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, rice, and peanuts marketed before June 30, 1950.

Now, who did kill cock robin? If the Secretary of Agriculture had carried out the specific directive placed upon him by law, he would not have been relying merely upon a loan program and falling back on that when he found that the situation was going to pot.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SUTTON. If the gentleman will realize that that is title I of the Agricultural Act of 1948, I do not think any Member of Congress will disagree with that, and the House was in accord with that on that section; but if the gentleman will go a little further, to title II, about which there is much controversy, and which I personally hope is repealed, he will find that the Aiken section of the Agricultural Act of 1948 disregards the section the gentleman has just quoted.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. But title II is not effective this year, however, and it was not effective in 1948, when the "robin" got into trouble. The so-called Aiken section of the bill was purposely made not effective until 1950 so that the postwar picture could develop more clearly and title I which I have cited was the law in the fall of 1948 and still is the law.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MULTER. I thought the gentleman was going to help point up the issue before us, but I do not think he has. The law he has been quoting does not concern the subject matter under discussion, which is subdivision (h) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act. That is what we are trying to correct here.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. All the gentleman is pointing out is that we are dealing with the Commodity Credit Corporation law, of course, and it relates to the problem of storage, which is a part of any loan program. The directive to the Secretary to support 90 percent of parity was given in the portion of the law I have cited. The responsibility for supporting prices was placed upon the Department of Agriculture and the Secretary of Agriculture in this act, the Hope-Aiken Act, and it was not limited to loans. It said "by loans, purchases or other operations" and "notwithstanding any other provision of law." The price drop cannot be charged to failure of the loan program alone—the fault lay in not carrying out the full law. Nobody can gainsay that fact if they read the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I am in accord with the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] when he expressed great concern about future exports of agricultural products from this country. I will have something to say about that a little later on.

There is no question in my mind but what the Commodity Credit Corporation must and will be continued. It has been a dominating agency in our Government and in the economy of our country. For several years this agency has largely fixed and dominated the price of basic farm products and the volume of exports. I recognize that the CCC exists to support farm prices and is authorized to do so by law.

Mr. Chairman, I have taken this time to discuss a matter involving the CCC. This agency is used to support the price of certain farm products. The law requires that hogs be supported at 90 percent of parity, which is stated to be about $16.50 per hundredweight at Chicago. On April 7, the Secretary of Agriculture stated that the CCC would be buying hogs at the support price within 60 days. The average price of hogs has not reached this figure, although some high officials hope that it will, so the Government can proceed to buy hogs as an excuse to secure support for the new agricultural proposal submitted by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Large marketing of hogs have forced prices down to around $18 per hundredweight, and excessive quantities of pork have piled up in this country for want of a ready market. There is a big demand for pork products from England and other ECA countries, but the export of pork to these countries is still under the control of the Office of International Trade in the Department of Commerce. An export permit is necessary to ship pork to these countries after an allotment has been made.

Many Members of the House have urged the lifting of export controls on pork, to avoid the necessity of the Government buying pork products under the support program. To my amazement, the Office of International Trade lifted export controls, effective May 13—Friday—on the following section of the typical American hog: Pickled and dried salt pigtails, pigs feet, dry salt ears, neck bones, pickled hog head skins, snouts, chitterlings—salted guts—and another part of the hog—unmentionable—which cannot be considered a delicacy in this country.

You will note that there were none of the main pork products which they want to buy in these other countries. The European countries want to buy pork—hog—sides, and other edible parts of the hog, instead of pig tails and snouts. Export controls should be lifted on all pork products, with the possible exception of loins. What is the policy here? I have been looking over some of the ECA figures. I notice that in the month of December, the ECA provided the British with money belonging to the American taxpayers to purchase 14,549,000 pounds of choice bacon in Canada, when we have a surplus of pork in this country and the price is going down to the support price level. But they did not go into that. They provided $578,000,000 of the American taxpayers' money to these 19 Marshall countries to buy $580,000,000 worth of food, flour, wheat, cheese, dairy products, pork products and so forth in Canada, at a time when we were spending hundreds of millions of dollars here of the taxpayers' money to support the price of American products in this country, while piling up a greater and greater surplus.

I say this to you, that if the present wheat and cotton crop materializes in the United States, where they now estimate we will have between eighteen and twenty million bales of cotton, that the United States Government will be the owner of at least 1 year's cotton crop. If the present wheat crop materializes, the United States Government will be the owner of at least 600,000,000 to 800,000,000 bushels of wheat, enough to take care of the needs of the American people for one year.

These commodities should be exported instead of forcing drastic controls upon the American farmer. So I say, when we tax the American people to provide relief and rehabilitation for other countries, it is only common sense that we should remove the surpluses from the United States and ship them out of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] has expired.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the required number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to dwell a little further on this controversy about grain storage. So far nobody, so far as I know, has pointed out what President Truman really said on July 3, 1948, in regard to this matter when he signed S. 1322. Here is a quotation from President Truman's exact words:

> S. 1322 also prohibits the Commodity Credit Corporation from continuing its long-standing policy of leasing or acquiring land where necessary for storing commodities as close to the farm as possible. This restriction will mean that the Corporation will have to ship grain for livestock feeding, for example, from farms to distant points for storage, and then later to ship it back again to farm areas. This will obviously increase costs for carrying grain reserves. Only those special interests who will make money by unnecessary handling of grain will profit from this provision—which will in the end be paid for by farmers and consumers.

Those are the words of the President of the United States on July 3, 1948, at which time there was plenty of time for the Eightieth Congress to rectify this situation.

So much for that.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] just finished saying that the United States taxpayer has provided money to Great Britain for Marshall plan relief, and that the money was spent in Canada. I hope the gentleman will bear in mind that the authorization for the money and the final purchase of the commodity itself presents a wide range of time between the authorization and the fulfillment. At the time of the authorization we were faced with inflation in this country and people were crying about prices going up. So naturally we allowed the British to buy the commodities where it would not affect us adversely at that time by causing further inflation. Since that time we have had a fall in the general price level, and of course the gentleman from Minnesota comes along and makes a monkey out of the administration by the changing conditions and the change in time.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of California. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Let me say to the gentleman all of this purchasing occurred since April 3, 1948, and up to the present time; and the same policy is going on today. Even some cotton is being purchased in other countries, when cotton surpluses are occurring here.

Mr. WHITE of California. Those purchases were made under the authorization made by the Congress quite awhile ago, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the high in commodity prices was reached in this country in the fall of 1948, shortly after the recent election.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken on that. The high on wheat was reached in December.

Mr. WHITE of California. I am speaking about the average of commodities; not any particular one. I will buy the gentleman the best lunch in town if he proves that is wrong.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. But after November 1948 we had a 20- to 30-percent drop in farm prices.

Mr. WHITE of California. But these authorizations were made a long time ago. You cannot change them in 5 minutes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. In spite of the President's statement that he was going to give them low prices.

Mr. WHITE of California. That is the gentleman all over—making it political.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. WHITE] has expired.

Mr. HOEVEN and Mr. SPENCE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE], chairman of the committee.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr Chairman, I object.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on section 1 and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOEVEN. The gentleman from Iowa has been on his feet here for the last 20 minutes seeking recognition. I wish to know whether I am going to have any time to speak on this bill at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair assures the gentleman that the Chair is aware of the fact that the gentleman has been on his feet seeking recognition, but the Chair has been trying to alternate recognition between the right and the left. The Chair had just reached the gentleman from Iowa and had started asking for what purpose he rose when the chairman of the committee rose, and under the precedents of the House was entitled to recognition.

Under the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky the limit of debate on this section would be 10 minutes. If that motion is agreed to the Chair will take down the names of Members standing and equally divide the time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand that there are amendments pending on the desk to section 1. I have an amendment at the desk to strike out section 1. The parliamentary inquiry is: If the gentleman's motion prevails what would be the situation in respect to other than pro forma amendments? Will we be given any time in which to discuss them?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if the motion made by the gentleman from Kentucky is agreed to, all debate on the section and all amendments to the section will be limited to 10 minutes. The Chair will state, however, that the time taken to read the amendments will not be taken out of the 10 minutes which would be allotted for debate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand the ruling of the Chair to be that the time needed to read the amendments to section 1 at the Clerk's desk will not be taken out of the 10 minutes.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and now ask unanimous consent that all debate on section 1 and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes, that the committee have the concluding 5 minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. Under the consent request of the gentleman from Kentucky, the time would be limited to 30 minutes. There is nothing in the request as to a division of that time. Under the rules, therefore, would not the first Member recognized be entitled to 5 minutes and each succeeding Member recognized be entitled to 5 minutes until the 30 minutes was used up? In other words, during the reading of a bill for amendment under the rules of the House, unless other arrangement is made by unanimous consent, each Member as recognized is entitled to 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of parliamentary fact, while it might perhaps be within the discretion of the Chair, if the rules were insisted upon the Chair would have to recognize the first Member for 5 minutes, and other Members likewise. But it has long been the practice of the Committee of the Whole when a limitation of debate is imposed to divide the time equally between the Members seeking recognition.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. I appreciate the Chair's ruling. The Chair has stated the proposition just as I understood it.

The CHAIRMAN. Such a consent request is generally linked in with a division of the time between Members seeking recognition at the time the request is submitted.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] asks unanimous consent that all debate on section 1 and all amendments thereto be limited to 30 minutes, with the last 5 being reserved for the committee.

Is there objection?

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on section 1 and all amendments thereto close in 35 minutes.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

and that the concluding 5 minutes be assigned to the committee.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The point of order is that the Committee of the Whole cannot assign time under a motion like this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's point of order is sustained.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kentucky were to ask unanimous consent that all time on this amendment be limited to 35 minutes, the last 5 minutes to be used by the committee and the remainder of the time to be equally divided among those standing, then he might avoid trouble; am I correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to answer the gentleman.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on section 1 and all amendments thereto conclude at 3:30 and that the time be equally divided among those Members who asked for time and that the last 5 minutes be assigned to the committee.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the same point of order. The Committee as a Whole cannot allot time that way. That is in the discretion of the House of Representatives and not the committee. It must be by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on section 1 and all amendments thereto conclude at 3:30.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. O'SULLIVAN].

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, it was rather interesting today to listen to the fine Republican campaign speeches which were made here on the floor of the House. If those speeches had been made by them during the campaign out in my district, and elsewhere, I am sure all of us would have had a better understanding of this particular Commodity Credit Corporation bill passed by the Eightieth Congress and more Republicans would have been defeated at the last election. But, alas, the message came too late. To argue the political issues here at this time is a good deal like arguing a case to a part of the jury after that jury had returned a verdict and sentence has been pronounced by the court. It was a useless and idle gesture.

Now, there has been a great deal of talk here about who was responsible for not having storage bins so as to take care of oncoming crops. I want to call the attention of the committee to paragraph (h) of section 4 and I want to read that section to you right now:

SEC. 4. (h) May contract for the use, in accordance with the usual customs of trade and commerce, of plants and facilities for the physical handling, storage, processing, servicing, and transportation of the agricultural commodities subject to its control.

That certainly was a specific grant. The balance of the paragraph was not noticed by some of the speakers who have taken the well of the House in order to speak on the proposed bill. This proviso was overlooked entirely by them and it served their purpose admirably to do so:

Except as provided in section 16, the Corporation shall not have power to acquire or lease any such plant or facility or to acquire or lease real property or any interest therein except that it may rent or lease office space necessary for the conduct of its business and it may continue to lease (by renewing or extending existing leases or entering into new leases) property leased by it on the date of the enactment of this act.

Now, that takes the specific grant away, does it not? I suppose when that provision was placed in the law the party responsible for it had been reading the Bible and when he got to that part which said: "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away," he thought of the proviso taking away the specific grant. That is just what happened, I believe, or am I wrong in assuming that the proviso writer was a Bible-reading man?

In any event a grant was given in one paragraph and it was taken away in the next paragraph, so the responsibility rests entirely upon the now shrinking shoulders of the Members of the Eightieth Congress who passed this give-and-take-away law.

President Harry S. Truman was right in every particular when he lowered "Casey's boom" on the evasive and sidestepping Eightieth Congress and told the Nation that they, and they alone, were at fault for the failure to provide adequate storage space for farm crops.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. LOVRE].

Mr. LOVRE. Mr. Chairman, in the limited time allowed, I certainly cannot do justice to a bill that is so important as H. R. 2682. In short, I want the Members of this House to know that I am going to support this bill and perhaps a few of the amendments.

I want to say to a few of my friends and colleagues, those who are of the opinion that there is no shortage of storage facilities in my State, if you will come out there during threshing time I will show you open bins by the hundreds throughout the First Congressional District.

The principal objective of the bill under consideration, namely, grain storage, is not only necessary but absolutely essential to the operation of any effective price-support program for the American farmer.

It is, in my opinion, the most important piece of farm legislation which has been considered by the Eighty-first Congress.

If we fail to provide adequate storage for farm products either on the farm or in terminals, we will have failed one of the most important segments of our economy, American agriculture. The American farmer has contributed so much toward winning the war, and he will, if given a chance, contribute materially to keeping the peace by providing the food for a well-fed Nation and world.

Those who are opposed to restoring to the Commodity Credit Corporation the power with which to provide adequate storage facilities to our producers would have us believe that such a system is socialistic, and would be putting the Government in business in competition with private business. I do not subscribe to this reasoning. While I am stanch in my belief that the Government never should be permitted to compete with private enterprise, I do believe that where private enterprise fails or cannot provide the facilities and programs which are necessary to the general welfare, then it is one of the functions of Government to step in and lend a helping hand.

The committee recognizes the fact that in the matter of grain storage facilities there is a definite need for Government encouragement. It also recognizes that the Government should not compete with private business, and accordingly will offer an amendment which will provide in substance that the CCC shall not exercise its authority to acquire grain storage facilities unless it finds that existing privately owned storage facilities are inadequate in the particular area affected. This is as it should be, and with this guaranty, the proposal certainly is not socialistic in any sense of the word. Neither does it put the Government in competition with private business.

When I speak in favor of allowing the CCC to acquire grain storage space where private capital has failed, I am not only expressing my personal views, but also the views of the 1949 South Dakota Legislature. I am submitting for the RECORD a resolution passed by that body in its most recent session:

House Concurrent Resolution 6

Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to amend the charter of the Commodity Credit Corporation to provide for ample storage bins and facilities for corn, wheat, and other basic grains

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Thirty-first Legislature of the State of South Dakota (the senate concurring)—

Whereas the house of representatives, the senate concurring, deems it essential that farm prices be supported at the level of full parity; and

Whereas the house of representatives, the senate concurring, is cognizant of the fact that the support of farm prices at full parity cannot be achieved in an effective manner unless the United States Government provides permanent storage facilities for corn, wheat, and other basic grains; now, therefore,

The house of representatives, the senate concurring, does petition the Congress of the United States to amend the charter of the Commodity Credit Corporation to authorize the provisions of permanent storage facilities for the storage of at least 1,000,000,000 bushels of corn and 500,000,000 bushels of wheat on the farm and at terminals in the farm area, and adequate storage facilities for all other basic grains; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of Agriculture, and to each South Dakota Senator and Member of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

A. E. MUNCK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

W. J. MATSON,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

R. A. TERRY,
Lieutenant Governor.
NIELS P. JENSEN,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. Chairman, I feel so strongly on this subject that the very first bill which I introduced as a freshman Congressman was one which would return the powers of the CCC to acquire grain storage space.

In my State, storage is acute and has been for some time past. According to recent statistics, South Dakota farmers produced in 1948 approximately 333,500,000 bushels of grains. We have only 838 country elevators with a capacity storage of only about 23,500,000 bushels, thus leaving approximately 310,000,000 bushels to be stored on farms in various types of bins, most of which are of such construction that the grain stored in them is not eligible for CCC loans.

When such a situation exists, it deprives the producers of the support price. Certainly all farmers should be given an opportunity to receive the support price for the commodity he produces and should not be denied that right because of lack of proper storage facilities.

We have in our State, and I know this situation exists all over the Nation, thousands of young veterans who have invested and obligated thousands of dollars in farm equipment and land on the strength of the assurance that they would receive a fair price for their crops under the Government farm program. If we fail to provide them with adequate storage, we have failed in the rehabilitation of our farmer-veterans. Certainly we should not be guilty of going back on a promise which we, as a grateful Nation, made to our GI's while they so gallantly fought to maintain the principles of America, including the right of free enterprise.

There is a further reason for allowing the Government to supplement the grain storage program conducted by private elevators and terminals. That is the matter of waste of food. If our crops are not stored properly, then there is rotting and waste and the entire consuming public, both here and abroad, suffers. There is nothing more immoral than waste of food. A well-conducted program designed to provide adequate storage will prevent this.

The Crop Reporting Service of the Department of Agriculture only yesterday predicted that this year's wheat crop will be the second largest in history. They also state that this billion bushel estimate will tax existing storage facilities. We certainly cannot sit here in Congress and allow this crop to rot on the ground without doing everything possible to put it under cover. I can think of no greater crime against nature and against the people of the world.

Recognizing the need for farm price supports and the need for acquiring grain for future use, the Congress, many years ago, inaugurated a Government price-support program. This plan has been kept in operation in one form or another by each subsequent Congress. During the war, there was such a demand for crops that there was little need for local storage space. However, since then, with a return to more normal consumption, with more normal crops abroad which reduce the demand for export, and with bountiful crops here at home, it is at once apparent that storage facilities must be expanded.

We are all agreed that the Government should operate some type of price-support plan to assure the farmer of a fair standard of living and to stock pile farm commodities for future use, either for defense or as an assurance to maintaining necessary dietary requirements, should there be a convulsion of nature which would cause a crop failure.

Common logic says that we cannot allow our grains to rot and spoil. I certainly would not subscribe to a Government price-support program which would condone such wasteful practices.

Therefore, I stand here today as a champion of the free-enterprise system in America and as a champion of the farmers who sent me to Congress, and I ask you in all earnestness to give favorable consideration to this legislation. It means a great deal to the individual farmer, but it means far more to the health, welfare, and prosperity of every single person in this great Nation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: On page 1, line 9, strike out section 1.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it is very obvious what this amendment does. It restores to the Board of Directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation the management of the Corporation. The law at the present time provides that the Commodity Credit Corporation "shall be an agency and instrumentality of the United States, within the Department of Agriculture, subject to the general direction and control of its board of directors." The bill seeks to strike out the words "direction and control of its board of directors" and substitute for them "supervision and direction of the Secretary of Agriculture."

What we do in this bill, unless this amendment is adopted, is for all practical purposes to dissolve this great Corporation, which has done this very splendid job throughout the years in maintaining farm-support prices. We destroy the Commodity Credit Corporation as such and turn the administration over to the Secretary of Agriculture. We have a right to have confidence in the Commodity Credit Corporation as such because it has done such a splendid job throughout the years in accomplishing the purposes for which it was set up, but we do not know that a single individual can do as good a job as this Corporation has done. The only practical function left to the Corporation, unless this amendment is adopted, is to issue notes, bonds, and debentures aggregating $4,750,000,000. So we are not particularly honest with ourselves or anybody else when we say we are going to continue the Commodity Credit Corporation, because we are not going to continue the Commodity Credit Corporation except as a money-raising agency for the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, I urge that this amendment be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPENCE. Should not the Members on this side of the aisle have an opportunity to discuss the amendment? We think we ought to have an opportunity to say something before the vote is taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair looked at the committee table and no one was standing, so he put the question. The Chair will put the question again.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SPENCE) there were—ayes 68, noes 78.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WORLEY].

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to secure information from the committee handling this particular bill. I note that on page 8, section 7, part of that section reads as follows:

That notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized upon terms and conditions prescribed or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture to accept strategic and critical materials produced abroad in exchange for agricultural commodities acquired by the Corporation.

My question is: Does the term "agricultural commodities" include all of the pork which the Government is expected to purchase under the hog price-support program?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. It does.

Mr. WORLEY. Is it the intention of this bill to also include any other meats now owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. It is.

Mr. WORLEY. Would it include the several million pounds of canned Mexican beef, which the Commodity Credit Corporation now owns?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. It would.

Mr. WORLEY. Would they be permitted to exchange that surplus for any critical or strategic materials?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. That is correct.

Mr. WORLEY. I thank the gentleman very much.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

STORAGE ON FARMS

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, the bill we have under consideration, H. R. 2682, is for the purpose of amending the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, and for other purposes. Mainly, the bill is for the purpose of maintaining farm support prices and strengthens the hand of the Commodity Credit Corporation in assuring storage for farm products. The objectives of the bill are good and I intend to support it and also amendments which would tend to strengthen it for the benefit of the farmers. In my more than 14 years of service in this House as the representative of the people in the Third Congressional District of Nebraska I have given most of my time to an effort to make the lot of the farmer just a little better. Beginning with my bill for the improvement and the equalization of the farm dollar, I have continued to work for the best interests of the farmer. My long battle for legislation which would give the farmer cost of production plus a reasonable profit has been successful only partially. The farmer is still at a disadvantage because of the failure of the Congress to enact my bill to set up a department of transportation and because the problem of distribution has not yet been solved. If my transportation bill could be enacted into law and if the perplexing distribution problem could be settled, I feel certain many of the farmers' difficulties would also be solved.

We have many illustrations why the farmer is continually at a disadvantage so far as transportation and distribution are concerned. When eggs were selling for 30 cents a dozen in Nebraska consumers in Washington were paying 85 cents and 90 cents a dozen for same. I could give you many, many more of such illustrations. It is only one of many arguments against the statements continually being made by city members who say the farmers are too well off. It is only one of hundreds of illustrations I could give you that the farmer does not receive for his products what the consumer has to pay. The spread is too wide and the farmer usually gets the smallest part of that wide spread.

Regarding this legislation which also calls for storage for farm products: We must write into this bill and instruct the Commodity Credit Corporation to see to it that most of this storage space is built on or close to the farms where the products are grown and raised. That is the most sensible place for such storage. However, there are many other functions in the law for the Commodity Credit Corporation. These include the loaning features; the support prices and the disposal of surplus farm products. It is certain that we should not keep too long these surplus farm products on hand. While the world is still our market we must see to it that a world market is kept continually open for the disposal of whatever surplus we have. The world agriculture competition may face us again. It may be very near even now. Therefore the Agriculture Department and the various divisions of that agency should be ever on the lookout through exports to keep the flow of our agriculture surplus in every avenue of world trade.

Preserving the American market for the American farmer must be of most importance to all of us. At the same time the markets of the world must be kept in close contact in order that we can trade our agriculture products to foreign countries for critical material and things we do not produce. As the program of rehabilitating foreign countries continues the world agriculture competition is likely to be a threat. But if complementary products can be encouraged I feel we can have at least some world market for our surplus and at the same time preserve the American market for the American farmer.

There are many proposals being made regarding future farm programs and many of them have merit. I feel the flexible farm price proposals of the administration are not fair to the farmer. I am strongly in favor of the 90-percent parity price for which I have already introduced legislation. I am also anxious that farm products experimentation be continued in order that more and more new uses for farm products be discovered. Full production; complete and effective soil-conservation programs; new uses for farm products and new chemurgy programs plus better transportation and distribution plans should be embodied in all of these new agriculture legislative proposals.

Mr. Chairman, let me again call to your attention that the first signs of depression can be seen when farm prices start going down. It is only when the farmer is properous that the people generally prosper.

For these and many, many other reasons Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, I have been most happy to work and will continue working for good farm prices; for all-weather roads to every producing farm, for electric energy on every producing farm, for all legislation which will make the American farm more and more attractive and more comfortable for the men and women who produce the food for the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee, and as a Representative from the Second District of Illinois, I am very strongly in favor of H. R. 2632 and of the provisions giving the Secretary of Agriculture power to acquire when necessary warehousing facilities. I certainly do not wish anything to interfere with the successful functioning of the Commodity Credit Corporation, which has made such large contributions to our national welfare and under the broadened authority to the Secretary of Agriculture conferred by this bill will make even larger contributions in the future.

But whether it is the intent that packaged goods, which in substance largely are the processed yields of agriculture, should be included is a question which has been raised by those in my city of Chicago interested in the cold-storage business.

It has been gratifying to me to hear from the witnesses appearing before our committee such unanimity of good opinion of Secretary of Agriculture Brannan. There has been no complaint that at any time has there been under the administration of CCC any trespass upon the rightful domain of private industry. The cold-storage men of Chicago who have spoken and written to me have been united in their praise of Secretary Brannan and in expression of confidence in him and in the administration of President Truman. Regardless of their abiding confidence in the administration, they feel that an agricultural law, remaining on the statute books until repealed and conceivably after changes in personnel and in direction, should not include any but incidental supervision over an industry, mainly urban, which represents a large investment in structures and facilities located in the larger cities, and which is wholly adequate to meet all demands of private industry and of government at present and in the foreseeable future.

As the only member of the committee from the city of Chicago, which is the center of the refrigerator warehousing industry, I have thought it my duty to present the viewpoint on this subject of those in this business in Chicago and of other distinguished citizens of that city who have written me since the close of the hearings of our committee.

As indicative of the type of citizens who have written me on this subject, I mention the name of the Honorable John J. Sullivan, veteran jurist whose many years of service on the bench of Cook County has given him a preeminence in the esteem of our people. I mention also the name of the Honorable Ludwig D. Schreiber, the distinguished city clerk of Chicago.

Judge Sullivan writes me:

I am convinced that favorable consideration should be given to Congressman YOUNG's amendment to H. R. 2682. The reasons outlined in Mr. Crooks' letter to you dated May 5 are sound and depict the true circumstances.

Mr. Crooks is the president of the Crooks Terminal Warehouses, Inc., operating in Chicago, Kansas City, and Los Angeles. In his letter to me, referred to by Judge Sullivan, he says:

We repeat again that the public merchandise and cold-storage warehousemen have sufficient facilities to take care of the requirements of the Commodity Credit Corporation. In addition to their own facilities, there are many buildings, owned by the Government, throughout the country that public warehousemen would be pleased to operate. Only recently, we offered to store approximately 5,000,000 bags of dried peas and beans in the Tucker Corp. plant, provided that the War Assets Administration would be willing to let us operate it.

The warehouse industry did a wonderful job during wartime. For example, the Chicago warehouses stored 20,000 carloads for the Army, Navy, and quartermaster. We are prepared and willing to do it again if there is need for this much storage.

From Mr. Sidney A. Smith, president of the Anchor Storage Co., I have received a letter in which he states:

For several years our warehouse has been used by the Corporation and also by other branches of the Government for storing all sorts of package goods, foreign and domestic. To name some of these commodities, we include tea, rubber, evaporated milk, canned meats, milk powder, canned vegetables, etc.

At one time during the active part of this war, we devoted almost 40 percent of our space to Government business. The rates which we assessed on this business were less than we charged generally on private business. The volume, while large, was spotty, but we did our utmost to take care of Government requirements for package storage.

We believe that our warehouse and the others who operate public merchandise storage facilities can take care of the goods which Commodity Credit Corporation has to offer, and that we can do a better job for the Nation and at much less cost.

Mr. G. M. McConnell, Jr., president of the Railway Terminal & Warehouse Co., of Chicago, writes me:

It would be detrimental to warehousemen generally if the CCC were able to build, lease, or in any way acquire independently operated storage space for packaged commodities. By the term "packaged" we mean bagged, baled, or contained in some form.

You are undoubtedly aware that during the war years when the Government stored tremendous quantities of merchandise, merchandise warehousemen were able to supply all the needed space. We cannot believe that now, or at any time in the future, our industry could not again provide space for the storage of packaged products offered by the CCC or any other Government agency, as well as private enterprise.

Mr. E. G. Erickson, vice president of the Central Cold Storage Co., of Chicago, wires me:

In Illinois, and especially in Chicago, there exists one of the largest concentrations of cold-storage space in the world which this bill, unless amended as proposed, would seriously jeopardize.

Mr. Vallee O. Appel, president of the Fulton Market Cold Storage Co., of Chicago, writes me:

Existing refrigerated warehousing facilities are adequate with private capital available for essential expansion. Be assured we have no fears of construction by present administration but earnestly believe specific exemption should preclude unnecessary and uneconomical Government competition by future administrations.

Mr. Richard Scheer, manager of the Booth Cold Storage Co., of Chicago, which is affiliated with public cold-storage warehouses operating since 1900 in St. Louis, Minneapolis, and St. Paul, writes:

We have a total of over 4,500,000 cubic feet gross of refrigerated space, carried at temperatures ranging from 45° above zero to 20° below zero, with a capacity of 65,000,000 pounds, representing an original investment of about $4,000,000 with a replacement value in the neighborhood of $10,000,000, and at present the space is about 70 percent occupied. Government figures of March 1 show an occupancy of only 49 percent in the warehouses as a whole throughout the country.

Our vice president and general manager, Mr. Gross, served on the Cold Storage Advisory Committee during the war, under the chairmanship of W. C. Crow, of the Production and Marketing Administration of the United States Department of Agriculture. From this source we know that no perishable commodities of any kind were actually lost by the Government due to lack of refrigerated facilities in this country.

None of my correspondents has expressed the least fear that under President Truman and Secretary Brannan there will be the slightest abuse of power. They find no ground for fear in the historical background of the Commodity Credit Corporation, with which they wish always to proceed with the fullest measure of cooperation in the doing of a splendid job for the benefit of the farmers of America and thus for the American people as a whole.

I am happy to present for the thoughtful consideration of my colleagues, and as they have been given to me, their viewpoints on what is best for their industry and, as they see it, best for the country. They have been respectfully submitted, and by us should be, and I am certain will be, respectfully received and considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, since the committee has already voted on this amendment to strike out the section, I wish to say simply a word in explanation.

This section merely restores to the Secretary of Agriculture authority to supervise and direct the activities of the Corporation. He had those powers prior to the enactment of existing law on June 29, 1948. It gives him no additional powers over what he had prior to that date. By striking out this particular section in the proposed legislation it would go right back to where we are at present under existing law that met with disfavor by the voters of the great grain areas.

I laud the stand taken by the former chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], and also the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN] in making plain that the powers and authority should be vested in the Secretary of Agriculture in the Corporation under their direct supervision and authority. Certainly to divide the responsibility and divide the authority would actually separate the power and the effectiveness of this particular Corporation. I am pleased to see that the committee ratified that action.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER].

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring to the attention of the Committee this situation, so that even though the amendment which was offered by the ranking minority member of the committee a few moments ago has been defeated, it will not affect your thinking or voting on the other provisions of this bill. If the Commodity Credit Corporation did a good job until 1948, and you want to see it continue to do that good job, then you must pass this bill as presented by our Committee.

During all of the years of its existence until June 1948 the responsibility for the operation and management of the Commodity Credit Corporation was in the Secretary of Agriculture. In 1948, for the first time, you took the powers away from him and gave them to the board of directors. This bill puts the powers back where they belong. The job was done well and effectively, by the Secretary of Agriculture. It is his responsibility. Let us give back to him the power to fulfill that responsibility. I am sure that he will do a good job in the years to come, just as he did it from the time the Commodity Credit Corporation was brought into being, until 1948.

You are not by this bill doing something new. You are merely correcting another of the blunders of the Eightieth Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, my only purpose in seeking recognition was to speak in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. Since that has been disposed of, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the House in defeating the amendment that would take this Corporation out of the control of the Secretary of Agriculture. The responsibility, the duties, and the power should be vested in one person. The Secretary of Agriculture is absolutely chargeable with the control of this corporation, and we should give him effective control to make his administration what we desire it to be.

There is another thing I wish to talk about, and that is the apprehension there seems to be on the part of some warehousemen, particularly those in cold storage warehousing, that their private industries might be invaded by this corporation. From 1933 until 1948 this corporation had as broad powers as any corporation ever had, power to acquire property and to use it as it pleased; but there is no testimony that during all those years the CCC ever invaded the realm of private enterprise or that it ever went into the cold storage business more than was absolutely necessary. I think in all that time it acquired but one property of that character, and that was in the city of New York. Not a single warehouseman testified that the corporation had gone into competition with them or had invaded their field. But now when the Corporation's powers have been much restricted, when they can go into this field only where the facilities now are entirely inadequate, the apprehension seems to increase, and fears have arisen so that they come here and are lobbying for some amendments that they say are important to them. Let me say that if you heed all that private enterprise suggests and support the amendments offered by them, you are going to weaken this bill so that it will not function in the way it should. I hope those amendments will be voted down. I know that in the bill in the Senate they exempted cotton and tobacco from the provisions of the bill. The cash crop of the people I represent is tobacco. I was perfectly willing that it be stricken out, because I did not want to see any agricultural war started in this House. I do not believe that any warehouse interest is in danger. Under this act as it is now presented, the corporation can create facilities only where the present facilities are entirely inadequate. The arguments that have been made in behalf of the warehousemen are entirely without merit, and I hope they will be so understood when the House considers the amendments which I presume will be offered.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOEVEN. Does any time remain under the consent request to limit debate?

The CHAIRMAN. Approximately 7 minutes remain.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, I favor this legislation; in fact, on January 18 of this year I introduced my own bill, H. R. 1647, to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act with reference to the general powers of the Commodity Credit Corporation. I also appeared before the Committee on Banking and Currency in behalf of my bill on March 24, 1949. At that time I endorsed in principle the provisions of the bill, H. R. 2682, which we are now considering. I suggested, however, an amendment which would provide that the acquisition of real property needed to carry on the program of the CCC should not be carried into operation until it was determined that the usual and customary trade facilities were not available. I am, of course, pleased to note that an amendment such as I proposed has now been incorporated as part of H. R. 2682.

It is not my purpose to drag dead cats out of the closet and to review who was responsible for what happened when the Commodity Credit Corporation bill was considered last year; it only remains to be said that it became a very potent issue in the campaign of last November. My main purpose in addressing you now is to present to you a very practical proposition, and that is the real need for storage facilities in the Corn Belt. I am sure we are all cognizant of the bumper corn crop which was harvested in the Corn Belt last year; it totaled approximately 3,650,000,000 bushels, and with an old crop carry-over of 125,000,000 bushels, will give us a total supply of 3,776,000,000 bushels. From all indications, we will have another bumper corn crop in 1949 which it is estimated will about equal the 1948 figure. Everything indicates that we will also have a prospective carry-over of up to as much as 700,000,000 bushels as of October 1, 1949. Our bins and storage facilities on the farms of the Midwest are already filled to capacity.

Mr. Chairman, I am very hopeful that before we finish with this legislation some amendment may be adopted to provide for the actual placing of storage facilities on the farms through some rental or advance-loan provisions on the part of the CCC to the individual farmers involved.

Farmers who take out corn loans may decide to deliver their corn next summer to the Corporation instead of paying off the loans, and farmers who take out purchase agreements may decide to sell it at the loan price sometime before September 1, 1949. This would mean that the Corporation would have to find storage space for greater supplies of corn the minute it was sold to the Corporation. Millions of bushels of corn have already been placed under loan-and-purchase agreements in the Corn Belt, and, according to the Department of Agriculture, this figure may well exceed 400,000,000 bushels this year.

I appreciate the fact that under the law the Corporation can lease terminal elevator space, but if the elevators are full we would really be confronted with a real problem. So in my judgment the passage of H. R. 2682—and I reserve the right to support such amendments as will clarify and improve the legislation—will authorize the Corporation to remedy the situation and will make adequate storage facilities available at all times. In conjunction with our program for agriculture, one of the main things to be considered is the providing of adequate storage facilities at all times. It should never be said that farmers were compelled to sell their corn or other grains at a loss just because storage facilities were not available.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Section 4 (h) of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended by deleting the second sentence thereof and inserting in its place the following: "The Corporation shall have power to acquire personal property necessary to the conduct of its business but shall not have power to acquire real property or any interest therein except that it may (a) rent or lease office space necessary for the conduct of its business and (b) acquire real property or any interest therein for the purpose of providing storage adequate to carry out effectively and efficiently any of the Corporation's programs, or of securing or discharging obligations owing to the Corporation, or of otherwise protecting the financial interests of the Corporation."

SEC. 3. Section 9 of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. Directors: The management of the Corporation shall be vested in a board of directors (hereinafter referred to as the 'Board'), subject to the general supervision and direction of the Secretary. The Secretary shall be an ex officio director and shall serve as Chairman of the Board. The Board shall consist of not less than 6 nor more than 10 members (in addition to the Secretary), who shall be appointed by, and hold office at the pleasure of, the Secretary. In addition to their duties as members of the Board, such appointed members shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by the Secretary. Each appointed member of the Board shall receive compensation at such rate not in excess of the maximum then payable under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, as may be fixed by the Secretary, except that any such member who holds another office or position under the Federal Government the compensation for which exceeds such rate may elect to receive compensation at the rate provided for such other office or position in lieu of the compensation provided by this section. A majority of the minimum number of directors required on the Board shall constitute a quorum of the Board and action shall be taken only by a majority vote of those present."

SEC. 4. Section 10 of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. Personnel of Corporation: The Secretary shall appoint such officers and employees as may be necessary for the conduct of the business of the Corporation, define their authority and duties, delegate to them such of the powers vested in the Corporation as he may determine, require that such of them as he may designate be bonded and fix the penalties therefor. The Corporation may pay the premium of any bond or bonds. With the exception of experts, appointments shall be made pursuant to the civil service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended (5 U. S. C., 1946 edition, 661)."

SEC. 5. Section 4 (c) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended by inserting after the sentence, "No suit by or against the Corporation shall be allowed unless it shall have been brought within 4 years after the right accrued on which suit is brought," the following sentence: "The defendant in any suit by or against the Corporation may plead, by way of set-off or counterclaim, any cause of action, whether arising out of the same transaction or not, which would otherwise be barred by such 4-year period of limitation if the claim upon which the defendant's cause of action is based had not been barred prior to the date that the plaintiff's cause of action arose: Provided, That the defendant shall not be awarded a judgment on any such set-off or counterclaim for any amount in excess of the amount of the plaintiff's claim established in the suit."

SEC. 6. Section 15 of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"USE OF WORDS 'COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION'

"(f) No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall use the words 'Commodity Credit Corporation' or a combination of these three words, as the name or a part thereof under which he or it shall do or purport to do business. Every individual, partnership, association, or corporation violating this prohibition shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both."

SEC. 7. Subsection (b) of section 6 of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act (60 Stat. 596) is hereby amended by inserting the words "Commodity Credit Corporation or" before the words "the Reconstruction Finance Corporation" wherever they appear in such subsection and by striking out the period at the end of such subsection and adding the following: ", whichever of such corporations is involved in the transfer."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 12, insert the following: "Provided, That the authority contained in this subsection (h) shall not be utilized by the Corporation for the purpose of acquiring real property, or any interest therein, in order to provide storage facilities for any commodity unless the Corporation determines that existing privately owned storage facilities for such commodity in the area concerned are not adequate: And provided further, That nothing contained in this subsection (h) shall limit the duty of the Corporation, to the maximum extent practicable consistent with the fulfillment of the Corporation's purposes and the effective and efficient conduct of its business, to utilize the usual and customary channels, facilities, and arrangements of trade and commerce in the warehousing of commodities'."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, line 3, after the comma, insert "Advisory Board."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, line 8, strike out "not less than six nor more than ten" and insert "six".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, line 23, strike out "minimum number of directors required on the Board" and insert "Directors."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, line 25, strike out the quotation marks and insert:

"(b) In addition to the Board of Directors there shall be an advisory board reflecting broad agricultural and business experience in its membership and consisting of five members appointed by the President of the United States, not more than three of whom shall belong to the same political party. The advisory board shall meet at the call of the Secretary, who shall require it to meet not less often than once each 90 days; shall survey the general policies of the Corporation, including its policies in connection with the purchase, storage, and sale of commodities, and the operation of lending and price-support programs; and shall advise the Secretary with respect thereto. Members of the advisory board shall receive for their services as members compensation of not to exceed $50 per diem when actually engaged in the performance of their duties as such, together with their necessary traveling expenses while going to and coming from meetings."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 5, line 6, strike out all of section 5 and insert:

"SEC. 5. Section 4 (c) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended—

"(a) by inserting in the second sentence thereof after the word 'jurisdiction' a comma and the following: 'without regard to the amount in controversy,';

"(b) by striking out the fourth sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'No suit by or against the Corporation shall be allowed unless (1) it shall have been brought within 6 years after the right accrued on which suit is brought, or (2) the person bringing such suit shall have been under legal disability or beyond the seas at the time the right accrued and the suit shall have been brought within 3 years after the disability shall have ceased. The defendant in any suit by or against the Corporation may plead, by way of set-off or counterclaim, any cause of action, whether arising out of the same transaction or not, which would otherwise be barred by such limitation if the claim upon which the defendant's cause of action is based had not been barred prior to the date that the plaintiff's cause of action arose: Provided, That the defendant shall not be awarded a judgment on any such set-off or counterclaim for any amount in excess of the amount of the plaintiff's claim established in the suit.'; and

"(c) by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "except that (1) any such suit against the United States based upon any claim of the type enumerated in title 28, section 1491, of the United States Code, may be brought in the United States Court of Claims, and (2) no such suit against the United States may be brought in a district court unless such suit might, without regard to the provisions of this act, be brought in such court'."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEATING to the committee amendment: Page 6, line 7, after the number "2" strike out the remainder of line 7, also lines 8 to 10 inclusive, and line 11 to the period appearing in that line, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "In the event that the person bringing such suit shall have been under legal disability or beyond the seas at the time the right accrued, the suit shall have been brought within 3 years after the disability shall have ceased or within 6 years after the right accrued on which suit is brought, whichever is longer."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, we will accept that amendment.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 7, line 7, strike out all of section 7 and insert:

"SEC. 7. The act, entitled 'An act to facilitate the execution of arrangements for the exchange of surplus agricultural commodities produced in the United States for reserve stocks of strategic and critical materials produced abroad,' approved August 11, 1939, is amended to read as follows: 'That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized, upon terms and conditions prescribed or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, to accept strategic and critical materials produced abroad in exchange for agricultural commodities acquired by the Corporation. The determination of which materials are strategic and critical and the determination of the quantities and qualities of such materials which are desirable for stock piling shall be made in the manner prescribed by section 2 of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act (60 Stat. 596). Strategic and critical materials acquired by Commodity Credit Corporation in exchange for agricultural commodities shall be transferred to the stock pile provided for by the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act; and the Commodity Credit Corporation shall be reimbursed for the strategic and critical materials so transferred to the stock pile from the funds made available for the purpose of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, in an amount equal to the fair market value, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, of the material transferred to the stock pile.'"

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROWN of Gerogia to the committee amendment: Page 8, line 14, after the period insert the following: "Insofar as practicable, in effecting such exchange of goods, normal commercial trade channels shall be utilized and priority shall be given to commodities which serve as prime incentive goods to stimulate production of critical and strategic materials."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept the amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROWN of Georgia to the committee amendment: Page 9, line 4, after the period and before the quotation marks insert the following sentence: "Nothing contained herein shall limit the authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation to acquire, hold, or dispose of such quantity of strategic and critical materials as it deems advisable in carrying out its functions and protecting its assets."

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this amendment means the Corporation can trade such commodities as prunes, raisins, eggs, and other commodities that will not store and may spoil for some strategic and critical material needed by the United States.

If the stock-pile authorities do not have funds to take the strategic and critical materials off the Corporation's hands, it can hold the materials or sell them if it appears wise to do so to protect the Corporation's assets. Any trading the Corporation did would be for materials specified by the stock-pile authorities and in close collaboration with ECA, the State Department and any other properly interested Government agency.

Similarly, the Corporation could encourage the production of strategic and critical materials through the use of trade goods in a somewhat comparable manner to the copra program it carried out in the Philippines. That program resulted in a highly satisfactory production of Philippine copra oil at a time when fats and oils were in short world supply and private efforts to restore production were unsuccessful.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept that amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota to the committee amendment: On page 8, lines 12 and 13, after "strategic and critical materials" insert "including metal scrap."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure but that under the language offered by the committee and under existing law it might be possible to permit the exchange for metal scrap, but there has been no great disposition to do so. It seems to me it would further the purposes of the committee amendment if it were made clear that it was the intent of Congress that the exchange for strategic and critical materials should include metal scrap.

During the time when the select Committee on Foreign Aid was in Europe, and particularly when the subcommittee was in Germany, it came to our attention that there are practically unlimited quantities of metal scrap in the harbors and other areas of Germany. Germany has probably the largest food deficiency of any country in Europe. They have a large population crowded into an area which has lost at least 25 percent of its agricultural land. If it is made clear that in this exchange scrap could be accepted as strategic and critical materials in payment for some of this food, it would result in disposing of a great quantity of the stocks of the Commodity Credit Corporation and at the same time permit the new West German Government to pay for a great deal of food instead of asking the American taxpayers to ship it over to them.

I hope that the committee will accept the amendment, since it clearly is in keeping with the purpose of the committee amendment.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from South Dakota concluded?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I had not concluded, Mr. Chairman. I was hoping that the gentleman was rising to say that since this furthers the purpose of the committee amendment, that the committee would accept it.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel that the committee can accept the amendment. The Munitions Board prescribes what are critical and strategic materials. I do not know whether scrap metal would come under that category or not. The act says "critical and strategic materials." The Munitions Board prescribes such materials. To spell out each material, which might be considered critical or strategic, would mean that there would be no end to amendments to the bill. I do not think we ought to go any further than the bill goes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the sentence immediately following the sentence that my amendment would amend says:

The determination of which materials are strategic and critical and the determination of the quantity and quality of such materials which are desirable for stock piling shall be named in the manner prescribed in section 2 of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act.

So my amendment does not take away from existing law the responsibility for determining at a given time what quantity or quality shall be accepted, but simply makes clear that it is within the intent of the Congress that scrap metal can be accepted as a strategic and critical material if a determination were so made. I hope the committee will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Congress cannot, like a dictionary, define all critical and strategic materials, and we cannot have all critical and strategic materials written into the act. What those critical and strategic materials are are defined by a board which is given that authority. I do not think we ought to define here that metal scrap is critical or strategic, because it might not meet with the general plan prescribed. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I think it would open the door for innumerable amendments.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The purpose of this section is to permit the Commodity Credit Corporation to make this exchange for critical materials so that they can get paid for some of these agricultural materials.

Mr. SPENCE. Yes; but we have not defined in this act what is critical and strategic material. This amendment to the committee amendment is an attempt to define a critical and strategic material, which might not be considered a critical and strategic material by the authorities having in their power the duty under the acts of Congress to define such materials. I do not think it ought to be in this act.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. If this amendment is adopted, it might limit the authority given under the bill to accept strategic and critical materials.

Mr. SPENCE. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, it might act as a limitation.

Mr. SPENCE. Yes; the inclusion of one means the exclusion of others. That is a well-defined principle of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the bill.

If we are to maintain the stability of our national economy we must support farm prices.

We know what happened to the finances and business in this country when the banks contracted currency and credit and upset our national economy by lowering the prices of farm products and destroying the purchasing power of the farmers of this country.

We must not let that happen again.

I am in favor of support for agricultural products. I am in favor of the plan of buying and renting storage facilities. We hear so much about the high price of grain, meat, and eggs and butter, and the things we use in our everyday food that we do not think of the cost that is being laid on the farmers to produce those things.

To give you a little illustration, during the Wilson administration I bought barbed wire for $1.40 a roll. That was an 80-rod spool of standard galvanized wire. Today that same wire costs $11.50 a roll. The farmer is being penalized on everything he buys. If we do not have a support price, if we take the purchasing power away from the farmers, then our national economy will go into a collapse, just as it did in 1930.

But this rider on this bill is a serious amendment before us today. Let me cite a few figures. In the appropriations already made to the Economic Cooperation Administration to implement the Marshall plan there has been $6,030,710,288 appropriated. Of that sum, 5 percent, or $197,000,000, is set aside to purchase strategic metals in the Marshall-plan countries. Now we are appropriating $5,500,000,000 more, which will bring in another $190,000,000 for the purchase of strategic metals. We are beating down the price of the metals that are produced in this country.

I have in my hand a report from the ECA, showing that they have so far used that first appropriation of $190,000,000 to buy lead and zinc in the amount of $1,500,000. Is it any wonder that the price of lead and the price of minerals in this country is falling? Is it any wonder that the market on stocks and securities of those companies engaged in that business are going down every day? Is it any wonder that the tax income of the Government is falling off? We are already setting aside 5 percent of these appropriations to purchase strategic metals. In this bill we propose to beat down the price of our metals further by bartering, which will further beat down the prices of these metals in this country. I think the time has arrived when we must give some consideration to the stability of our own industries and to the tax income of the Federal Government to take care of the expenses of carrying on this Government and meeting its obligations by building up the markets in our country. If we carry on this thing we are surely heading for disaster.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUTTON: On page 2, line 8, after the word "storage", add a comma and insert the following: "other than storage for cotton or tobacco, except that it may rent or lease storage facilities for cotton or tobacco."

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is self-explanatory. It clarifies the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. It also coincides with the amendment that was placed on Senate bill S. 900, which passed the Senate, page 2, line 11, "other than for storage of cotton and tobacco."

This amendment, if adopted, permits the Commodity Credit Corporation to lease or rent buildings for storage purposes but prohibits them from erecting any new buildings. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, Mr. SPENCE, has said that since 1933, through 1948, the Commodity Credit Corporation had the power to invade the respective territories and construct warehouses and storage facilities, but in all that time not a single invasion has occurred. This amendment, if enacted, will revoke the authority of the Government to construct new buildings. I, for one, am in a tobacco section and a cotton-producing section. I realize that in our section we have ample warehouses. We believe that by restricting this storage where it is not needed, then they can erect elevators and warehouses for the Western States, the wheat-growing and corn-growing States.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is a distinguished member of the Committee on Agriculture. I will ask him if his information indicates that there are adequate storage facilities for cotton and tobacco.

Mr. SUTTON. It is my information that we have adequate facilities for both cotton and tobacco.

Mr. COOPER. And the gentleman's amendment would substantially accomplish the purpose provided by this provision in the Senate bill?

Mr. SUTTON. That is right; it clarifies it in that the Commodity Credit Corporation will be enabled to lease or rent storage facilities, but they will not be permitted to build them.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. I yield.

Mr. LYLE. Some contractors in my district have called me, and written me, and said that they have been unable to negotiate loans with the banks or the RFC to enlarge their facilities. We perhaps have storage for half of our cotton in my area. We wish we had enough storage for all. These men have also inquired about the possibility of leasing from the Government surplus airfields in which they might store cotton. Does the gentleman propose to cut out the authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation to assist such people in securing loans to build adequate storage?

Mr. SUTTON. No; the gentleman has the wrong impression. This forbids the Commodity Credit Corporation from building these warehouses, but permits them to lease or rent them, and accordingly they could lease the airports to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. LYLE. But if we do not adopt the gentleman's amendment then under the language of the bill the CCC could cooperate with private industry by helping them secure loans.

Mr. SUTTON. Definitely.

Mr. LYLE. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted could they still help them secure loans?

Mr. SUTTON. Definitely.

Mr. LYLE. Is the gentleman certain about that?

Mr. SUTTON. Positively; that is my interpretation.

Mr. LYLE. I wish the gentleman would look into it again, because if I thought that were true I would not oppose the gentleman's amendment. We, however, are in dire need of storage. We do not want to get cut off; we want them to cooperate with us in securing loans.

Mr. SUTTON. The gentleman is right.

Mr. LYLE. We cannot get loans from the bank, we cannot get loans from the RFC and now we have enough difficulty getting them through the Commodity Credit Corporation. We do not want to get cut off.

Mr. SUTTON. That was the reason the Senate amendment was carried a little further in that the language was added "except that they may lend or lease storage facilities for cotton or tobacco."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I might say to the gentleman from Texas that if you lack storage we have plenty of storage warehouse in my State, and we would be very glad to take care of the cotton.

Mr. LYLE. And pay the freight too? It is a long way.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Not only pay the freight but use the cotton up there.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. YOUNG to the amendment offered by Mr. SUTTON: Insert the following:

"Refrigerated cold storage, and storage for packaged products customarily stored commercially by public merchandise warehousing industry and in general warehouses."

And strike out the words "cotton or tobacco" being the last three words of the pending amendment and in lieu thereof insert the words "for same."

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, it is my view that this is meritorious legislation we are considering this afternoon; that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUTTON] makes this a better bill; and that my amendmend to his amendment makes it still better. The facts are that the storage warehouses of the country average about 50 percent occupancy at the present time. All the Government requirements were handled during the war and have been handled since, and this industry has never failed to construct additional facilities when the need was apparent. Naturally, it looks now with trepidation and fear on any proposal that would permit any agency of the Government to go into competition with private capital. For the information of the membership let me say that the Sutton amendment with my amendment would read as follows, starting at line 8 on page 2 of the bill, a parenthesis, and then this language: "other than storage for cotton or tobacco; refrigerated cold storage; and storage for packaged products customarily stored commercially by the public merchandise warehousing industry or in general, merchandise warehouses, except that it may rent or lease storage facilities for same."

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McSWEENEY. I know that the gentleman has been definitely opposed to the Government in any way competing with private industry, but does he not feel that with the language in the bill and the increasing demand for what we call cold processed products there would be an encroachment if this language was not placed in the bill?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes, and that is my purpose in offering the amendment.

Mr. TAURIELLO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TAURIELLO. Is it not a fact that in the large cities today refrigeration storage facilities are at least 50 percent vacant, so that if this amendment does not prevail it is possible that the Federal Government might go into competition with these already existing refrigerated warehouses?

Mr. YOUNG. The gentleman is absolutely correct. Let me say in that connection that the packaged agricultural products referred to are those which have been processed and are packaged for distribution to the consumer trade. At that stage they will have passed beyond the farmers' hands and into the ordinary channels of commerce.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BREHM. I want to congratulate the gentleman for offering this amendment. If he had not offered it, it was my intention to do so. I know that in Cincinnati and other large cities in Ohio there are many, many buildings such as the gentleman has described. I sincerely trust the gentleman's amendment will prevail.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. I want to commend the gentleman for introducing this amendment to the other amendment and I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman will be agreed to. It does not deny the Corporation any of the powers it ought to have. It does strengthen free enterprise, however, and I hope that the two amendments will be adopted.

Mr. YOUNG. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. I favor the gentleman's amendment and, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FORD. May I indicate my support of the gentleman's amendment? I wish to ask a question however and that is: It is the same amendment as an amendment that was offered and adopted in the Senate?

Mr. YOUNG. As I understand it, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUTTON] is the same amendment as that offered and adopted in the Senate. It may be this is also.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. You have packaged goods warehouses, have you not?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. There has never been any shortage of those warehouses, has there?

Mr. YOUNG. There has not been to my knowledge.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. Is it not true that during the war no perishable commodities needing refrigeration were actually lost in this country due to lack of refrigeration facilities, because this industry has been adequate and efficiently managed?

Mr. YOUNG. The fact is that during the war all the wartime requirements of our Government were met by this private industry.

Mr. JUDD. Does not the gentleman have information that the Secretary of Agriculture himself has said that he does not contemplate the development of any need for additional facilities in this field?

Mr. YOUNG. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JUDD. Does not the gentleman feel that even if a need should develop in the future, the fact that it would require a year to 18 months to construct new facilities gives opportunity for the Secretary of Agriculture to come to the Congress and make his case? If it is a good case, doubtless the Congress will grant the CCC power to handle the need.

I do not believe any man should be given the blanket power on his own to go into business and commit the Government to the purchase or construction of warehouse facilities without having to consult anyone?

Mr. YOUNG. And, in my judgment, that need will not develop.

Mr. JUDD. That is right.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HAND. The gentleman is also aware of the fact that in the city of New York there is a warehouse and refrigerating plant being operated which is owned by the city of New York and operated by the Commodity Credit Corporation containing some 3,000,000 cubic feet. That is being operated by the Government in competition with private refrigeration plants there although they are only filled to about half capacity.

Mr. YOUNG. I am not aware of that, but I take the gentleman's word for it. My proposed amendment would in no way prevent the Agriculture Department from assuring farmers against a shortage of space to store wheat, corn, or other grains as they are harvested and marketed by the farmers. Grain and similar agricultural commodities are ordinarily stored in bulk in grain elevators in or near the growing areas, at which stage of marketing they are not "packaged products customarily stored commercially" in merchandise warehouses.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. GATHINGS. I commend the gentleman for offering his amendment and shall support it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Although I know nothing about the situation in the cotton or tobacco States, I do have considerable information regarding the need, or rather, the lack of need, for additional storage facilities in refrigerated plants and for storage of packaged products now handled commercially by the public warehousing industry. I am informed, and it is significant that no evidence has been introduced on this floor to the contrary, that these private and refrigerated warehouses are not now used to anything approaching their capacity and many of them are only from 50 to 60 percent occupied. Furthermore, I am told that occupancy in these warehouses is now rapidly declining. If the public warehousing industry could handle the tremendous needs for storage space during the war years, when warehousing space was at a premium, I fail to understand why they should not be allowed to handle it now.

This amendment will test the attitude of this body toward private enterprise in this country. Without its adoption, the Commodity Credit Corporation will be empowered to acquire and operate storage warehouses, not as an emergency proposition, not simply at any time when there is an acute need for such facilities, but in the regular course of business, as a direct competitor with those who have invested their own funds in this activity, not only to their detriment and possible bankruptcy, but to the prejudice of the thousands who are employed in the great warehousing industry.

True, it is provided in other parts of this bill that the Corporation shall not acquire warehouses where existing privately owned storage facilities are adequate. But who is to determine that question? The answer is given in this bill—the Commodity Credit Corporation itself.

Under this measure, any independence on the part of this Corporation has been destroyed by the provision putting it under the direct supervision and direction of the Secretary of Agriculture. We already have a taste of his inclination as to methods of operation. He is the one who has recently promulgated the program to regiment and control the production of every farmer in the country. It is to him that this bill seeks to leave the determination whether the Government shall or shall not go into the refrigerated-warehouse business on a wholesale scale. I am not prepared to delegate this decision to the Secretary or his alter ego, the Commodity Credit Corporation.

If the refrigerated-warehousing industry constituted something in the nature of a monopoly, and there were a shortage of available space for products requiring refrigeration, or even any reasonable possibility that there would be a shortage of space in the future, that would be one thing. There might, under those circumstances, be some justification for authorizing the Commodity Credit Corporation to build cold-storage plants. Since, however, the supply of cold-storage space now exceeds and has long exceeded by far any demand now present or anticipated, there is no more reason for the Government to go into the refrigerated-warehousing business than there is for it to go into the trucking business, the railroad business, or any other venture.

This amendment raises a fundamental issue. So long as I remain a Member of Congress, I intend to resist with all my energy and to the limit of my ability, the destruction of private enterprise by Government competition, resulting in loss to those who have invested their money, and throwing out of their jobs those now employed in industry. There may be some types of activity of a clearly emergent character, or providing for projects of such magnitude that Government intervention is essential to their completion, which justify encroachment on the legitimate province of private enterprise. Certainly no situation has here been presented justifying our stamp of approval on such a move.

The adoption of this amendment is so vital, it goes so directly and clearly to the heart of the fundamentals of our American system, that I doubt whether I can support this bill if the amendment fails to pass. I hope it will succeed.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio said that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee made it a good bill, but that his amendment makes it a better bill. Well, that includes everything on earth now; refrigeration, storage of tobacco, cotton, and everything else except grain. Why does not somebody on the Republican side get up and eliminate grain, and then we would not have any bill?

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. Because grain is never stored in refrigeration warehouses, is it?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I am talking about the amendment the gentleman offered. We have a cotton amendment, a tobacco amendment, and this amendment, too.

Mr. JUDD. Well, of course, I have no such knowledge as the gentleman has as far as cotton and tobacco are concerned, but I do know something about the cold-storage industry, and it is not a factor in the CCC programs for handling grain.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The gentleman is well informed on everything, and I always like to hear the distinguished Congressman talk, but I reply to the gentleman in this way: Why would you be hurt in this field? The CCC had this authority from 1933 to 1948, and I never heard any complaint from this group in that field of service, and there never will be. The CCC had the same authority to construct more cotton and tobacco warehouses, but they did not do it from 1933 to 1948, but some day we may need more facilities for all of these groups when private enterprise will not construct them.

This bill with my amendment is like a shotgun in the corner to be used when the need arises. If private enterprise will not do the job, then Commodity Credit Corporation will do it. I know a good deal about cotton warehouses. I think I have as many in my district as any other district in the United States has. Some objected to this provision; they did not know what my amendment was. I explained my amendment to them and they replied they thought it was all right and would trust my judgment.

Now, who is the man at the head of the cotton warehouses here? He is a man representing the cotton warehouses in Washington, Mr. Todd. Who is he? Counsel and Washington representative for the National Cotton Compress and Cotton Warehouse Association. What did he say? He said if you are going to treat all the commodities equal and alike, I suggest the following amendment:

That the Corporation shall not provide storage facilities for any commodity unless private capital and private industry fails to provide such facilities in adequate volume for the efficient storage of that commodity in accordance with the usual trade customs and practices—

What is the difference between that amendment and mine?

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I will tell the gentleman what the difference is: In accordance with usual trade practices.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. That is in my amendment. Read the amendment. Read down further.

Mr. GATHINGS (reading):

unless the Corporation determines that any such privately owned storage facilities for such commodity in the area concerned are not adequate.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. All right, read down there further. It is in the latter part of the amendment.

Mr. GATHINGS. You go ahead and read it.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. No; I am making my speech. The gentleman can make his own speech.

Further the bill says:

The authority contained in this subsection shall not be utilized by the Corporation for the purpose of acquiring real property, or any interest therein, in order to provide storage facilities for any commodity unless the Corporation determines that existing privately owned storage facilities for such commodity in the area concerned are not adequate: And provided further, That nothing contained in this subsection (h) shall limit the duty of the Corporation, to the maximum extent practicable consistent with the fulfillment of the Corporation's purposes and the effective and efficient conduct of its business, to utilize the usual and customary channels, facilities, and arrangements of trade and commerce in the warehousing of commodities.

I hope the gentleman is satisfied now. I tried to explain it to him.

What is this law for? It is to help the farmers of this country. We want to help the warehousemen also, but the prime purpose is to help the farmers. If private industry will not erect a warehouse where the farmer can store his cotton, then the Commodity Credit Corporation ought to do it. The banks have made money out of this agency. The cotton warehousemen have made money and we are not disturbing the warehousemen as long as they furnish the facilities. The Commodity Credit Corporation tells me they expect to continue to cooperate with the warehousemen and permit them to make money as long as they adequately serve the farmers. When they do not furnish the facilities we have a right to ask that the farmer have some place to store his cotton, just as the farmer in the West should have the right to store his grain.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is the express desire of the committee that the authority given in this section shall not duplicate or interfere in any way with private trade facilities. We have tried to point that out in the report very clearly, on pages 6 and 7. The Department has stated that it has no desire to use this authority, has never had, and does not intend to in the future. It does not intend to go into any area and replace existing private trade facilities in that area. The history of the corporation prior to July 1, 1948, indicates that it has not done so, and all indications are that they do not intend to do so at any future time.

As the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] has pointed out, this matter was aired in the committee and considered very carefully. As the bill came to us from the other body it excluded these two commodities, cotton and tobacco, which, of course, pointed up the fact that including these two commodities would make it look as though this were a bill designed to acquire storage facilities for some commodities and exclude other commodities.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The amendment has the entire support of the committee, all those that were present, with not a single dissenting vote.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SUTTON. The amendment in the Senate bill, S. 900, excluding cotton and tobacco, also passed the Senate.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It did, and it came over here, and we discussed that very thoroughly. The language on page 2 I believe is very clear, and the discussions here and statements of the committee in its report have pointed up that very thing.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. Where the existing facilities are adequate in the area, under the act and under the proposed law, the Commodity Credit Corporation cannot secure or acquire any existing facilities.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is exactly it, and that is the purport of the bill. It is stated very clearly. There is no question about it.

Mr. SPENCE. If the facilities are inadequate, certainly there should be no reason why the Commodity Credit Corporation should not supply the deficiency. It looks to me as if this is getting away from the farmer and thinking more of the warehousemen.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is right.

In answer to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAND], may I point out that in the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Brannan, to Mr. SPENCE, appears this language:

Taking into consideration the total cubic feet of net piling space in public general cold-storage facilities available in the city of New York, these 207 cars represent approximately 2 percent.

That is, the total existing potential plant capacity there for storage.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HAND. Regardless of what the percentage may be, the fact is as I have stated, is it not, that in the city of New York the Commodity Credit Corporation is operating refrigeration plants with 3,000,000 cubic feet, and the private plants in that city are operating at 40 percent or less capacity.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I was pointing out that we are using only 2 percent of the storage facilities of that particular terminal in connection with the storage of frozen eggs there at times when space was not available elsewhere in the area.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I should like to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania take out what the gentleman from Georgia said, that the whole committee was in favor of this bill and in favor of the proposition, because I was not.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman should make that request of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I want it to go in the RECORD that I never was absent, and I am always present.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I thank the gentleman for his statement.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to point out that there is grave danger that the action of the House would be misunderstood if we should adopt this amendment. The bill is designed primarily for relief in the grain sections of the country, but we, in the tobacco and cotton country, have no right to ask for an exception. We certainly would be unjust to our farmers if there should be a need for it and we should find ourselves deprived of the power to give them relief. But, as a matter of fact, it has no application to the cotton situation. Mr. Brannan was asked by the chairman, as to tobacco, and he said, "We certainly have not, during my experience, used any authority for storage of tobacco." Then the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] asked about cotton, and he said, "There is adequate warehouse space for cotton."

If we are going to exhibit anxiety because we fear that the Secretary will abuse the owners of warehousing property in the cotton and tobacco areas, what are we doing to our private operators in the grain areas? Let us be consistent.

Another thing. There are two checks on any abuse of authority by the Secretary of Agriculture. One check is the power of the Committees on Appropriations, the other is, that Mr. Lindsay Warren of the General Accounting Office, our able Comptroller, will check every step that the Secretary of Agriculture makes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is his obligation under the Corporation Act of 1945.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I am glad to have that pointed out. The 1945 act vests authority in the Comptroller General's Office for the auditing of actions by Government corporations.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Does the gentleman feel that the Comptroller will really check over the Commodity Credit Corporation in the future, and if he does, will it be a better check than was had in the past when $366,000,000 disappeared from the account of the Commodity Credit Corporation?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I think a careful reading of the full record will show that that generalization hardly stands—if I may differ with my good friend from Kansas.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. In addition, will the gentleman point out that the Commodity Credit Corporation has assets on hand which it may use without direct appropriations for the erection, construction, and purchase and perhaps even the condemnation of facilities without any check by the Committees on Appropriations?

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DEANE. I am amazed at the gentleman from Kansas bringing up this subject, because, if he will refer to page 143 of the hearings, there is contained the reply from Mr. Warren, the Comptroller General, to the Secretary of Agriculture, concerning these so-called receivables about which there seems to be some question in the mind of the gentleman from Kansas. As you will recall, this bookkeeping deficit occurred during the pressure of war days and in connection with the administration of the War Foods Administration under the leadership of that distinguished gentleman, Mr. Marvin Jones, now Chief Justice of the court of appeals.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I am very familiar with that, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. DEANE. This is the reply to Secretary Brannan:

> As requested in your letter, we have reviewed the plan proposed by you with respect to your review of questionable items. It is noted that you propose to make no attempt to investigate transactions recorded in lend-lease receivable accounts prior to September 2, 1945 (VJ-day) and in receivable accounts with other agencies of the United States Government. In view of the very large volume of work and the administrative costs involved in such a review, we concur with the plan proposed by you to the extent that it can be demonstrated that there will be no over-all loss to the United States Government.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. In other words, it was too expensive to actually investigate the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I was overly generous with my time. I ask unanimous consent to continue for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas, but I would appreciate his being brief.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I will be brief. But I want to say, in the first place, the answer made by the gentleman in connection with the investigation of the Commodity Credit Corporation does not seem sufficient because there has never been an investigation, so I think it does prove my point. We do not have complete confidence in the check that can be made on the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. If improvements can be made in the procedure, I am confident this Congress would join in the improvements. Everyone has confidence in the General Accounting Office procedure and certainly in the present Comptroller General.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Just for the purpose of the RECORD, I have in my hand a copy of the audit report of the Commodity Credit Corporation for the fiscal year 1945. I will just read briefly:

> The Corporation's organization was subjected to great strain as a result of the problems created by the war, the need to move swiftly in undertaking many programs, and the acute need for skilled and highly specialized personnel. The imperfections in organization, accounting, and operations which resulted become difficult to appraise in the light of these circumstances, and there is a tendency toward using hindsight too freely or underevaluating the circumstances which prevailed. We have attempted to weigh fairly these factors and, although some of our criticisms are severe, it is not our intention to underevaluate the responsibilities undertaken and carried out by the Corporation during the war or to cause the contribution made by the Corporation during peace and war to be overlooked or discounted.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I thank the gentleman. My purpose was to allay, if possible, any fear that might be entertained that we are inaugurating a vast storage program for cotton and tobacco and other commodities. It simply is not in the mind of the Secretary, and certainly it is not in the minds of the committee. I think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] has rendered a great service in working out the language of this part of the bill. I am reluctant to disagree with my good friend from Tennessee who offers the amendment, but I think it would be damaging to this legislation. I am not familiar with the cold-storage problem, but on the same theory it is better to leave this in general terms and then meet specific situations in basic storage legislation that might be reported by the Agriculture Committee.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. A close check-up would show you that this Sutton amendment seeks to protect private enterprise from Government competition, and it does not injure the real purposes of the bill.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I am sure its purposes are good, and if I thought it were necessary I would be happy to join in. I think it is out of place in this particular legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I hate to delay consideration of this matter, but I think this is one of the most important parts of the bill. We are working on a bill today upon which I think perhaps the fate of the economy of this country will depend; that is, on whether we effectively carry out our support-price program to agriculture.

Without this program that is being carried out by the Commodity Credit Corporation I hate to think of what the levels of farm prices would be in this country today. The very heart and soul of any support-price program on your basic commodities is your storage facilities.

It is not going to do the farmer any good to have storage facilities five or ten thousand miles removed from his area of production. All of this fear and panic and charges of socialism that have been leveled at the efforts of this committee to pass an effective and workable bill certainly are not in agreement with the record of this Corporation since 1933.

Now instead of being a bill for the most important agency in Government to the farmers of this country, we are making this a warehouseman's bill, to gratify whatever fears may be in the hearts of some of the lobbyists or representatives of those various trade organizations.

I agree with what has been said, that if you are going to exempt a certain number and spell out those particular warehouse lines by name, then you ought to do something special for the grain people. Yet it was the effort of the grain people in the Eightieth Congress that caused the debacle that led to the fall of corn and wheat prices through the Middle West last year.

We do not know what conditions will obtain in cotton or tobacco or other crops needing storage. There is plenty of storage for cotton now, but the time might come when in certain particular areas the facilities would be inadequate. It might be necessary to acquire additional facilities for cotton and it might be necessary in the case of tobacco in certain instances; I hope it is not for the storage of pork or other commodities, but it might be. We hope that there will be plenty of available private storage in those areas where needed so that this storage can be had in the customary way that Commodity Credit Corporation has always used.

The adequacy of your controls over this agency lies not only in the firm requirement to use private storage where available but also in the Committee on Appropriations and reports that the General Accounting Office makes to the committees of this Congress.

That is the control you want because it is an annual, reviewable control that can be changed as necessary. This bill, Mr. Chairman, is a permanent charter; we are not going to revise or renew this charter every 2 or 3 weeks or during the Congress and make quick changes to meet emergencies. So, what goes into this law is liable to become permanent restrictions on the Commodity Credit Corporation in their task to support prices. Possibly to deny in the charter certain warehouse facilities that might be the difference in seriously damaging the farmers on those products which happen to be in a glut.

This amendment that is before you exempting these cotton and tobacco warehouses, Mr. Chairman, does something that the author of the amendment does not wish to do, I am sure: It takes out from this bill in its entirety—and hear me, please, on this important point—it takes out in its entirety the consideration of anything to do with cotton or tobacco storage facilities.

What is the effect of that? The Commodity Credit Corporation has been negotiating a long time in making loans to tobacco and cotton cooperatives for the erection and construction of their storage. They have been engaged in transferring some surplus war buildings that might be used by private industry or by these cooperatives for storage purposes; and I say that this amendment takes out of this bill the consideration of such operations. They cannot consider loans to these very cooperatives that you want to help, since they cannot take mortgages on the properties to protect their loans.

It is a fear psychology that is working on this Congress and is going to destroy the effectiveness of an adequate program of production-area storage. Any agency that has had the record the Commodity Credit Corporation has over the years, not only in cooperating with but in making more money and profits for the warehousemen than they have ever made in a like period in their history should not now be charged with an effort to blot out and destroy through a socialist program these warehousemen that have been helped so much by the operations of this Corporation.

You have got the controls over this Corporation, adequate controls if the charter is passed, because their budget is reviewable every single year by the Appropriations Subcommittee on Agriculture of the House. You have heard the chairman of that subcommittee stand here and tell you that they can do nothing that is not authorized by them in the matter of any unusual operation such as the acquisition of large storage space. You also heard the statement that the General Accounting Office keeps men steadily engaged in working with this Corporation and that they are charged with making regular reports to the Committee on Appropriations and to the other standing committees of this House that have jurisdiction.

So I hope in this closing hour of the debate we will not find the Eighty-first Congress making the grave error of passing legislation with a lot of prohibitions and suddenly finding ourselves faced with the same kind of emergency situation which caused such great damage before.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAND. I yield.

Mr. SPENCE. I wonder if we can agree to a limitation on the debate on this amendment?

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will take down the names of the Members seeking recognition.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAND].

Mr. HAND. For how long, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. For 1¾ minutes.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Chairman, may I say that there has never been a time in all the history of this problem we are talking about that the refrigeration warehouse industry has not been entirely adequate for any purpose for which our economy may have needed it, including agriculture. As a matter of fact, at the present time its capacity is away underloaded.

I made reference a moment ago to the situation in New York City where only 40 percent of the privately owned refrigeration capacity is new being used, despite which the Commodity Credit Corporation itself is operating or causing to be operated for its account 3,000,000 cubic feet of refrigerated space where it is in direct competition with private industry.

In New England the coolers are 35 percent occupied, the freezers 70 percent; in the Middle Atlantic region 44 percent and 62 percent; East North Central 50 percent and 69 percent; West and North Central 51 percent and 83 percent; South Atlantic 51 percent and 80 percent; East South Central 62 percent and 86 percent; West South Central 68 percent and 65 percent; Mountain 49 percent and 59 percent; and Pacific 46 percent and 59 percent.

As a general rule not more than 50 percent of the refrigeration space capacity owned by private industry is now being used by the economy of this country.

There is just no sense in talking about any possible authority for the Commodity Credit Corporation to build refrigeration space. I would suggest that there are two classes of Members who would support this amendment—those who feel that private industry should not be invaded by the Government where not necessary, and those who oppose extravagant expenditures on the part of the Government to duplicate facilities already adequate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH].

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUTTON] and the amendment to same by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG].

The pending bill gives the Commodity Credit Corporation very broad authority for the acquisition of storage facilities. Under the terms of this bill the Commodity Credit Corporation could build whatever additional storage facilities it saw fit, or it could make loans for their construction. In either case, the Commodity Credit Corporation could put the United States in the warehousing business.

To be sure, there is a restrictive provision in the bill, by providing that this authority to acquire real estate in order to provide storage facilities for any commodity shall not be used unless the Corporation determines that existing private storage facilities for such commodity are not adequate. There is also a provision to the effect that the Commodity Credit Corporation should, insofar as practicable, use the customary facilities for the warehousing of commodities.

The whole purpose of both of these provisions is to endeavor to make certain that the Corporation does not, as Government agencies and corporations are so prone to do, go beyond what is supposed to be its primary functions. We certainly do not want the Commodity Credit Corporation in the warehousing business, where the Federal Government, through the Corporation, owns hundreds of warehouses throughout the country competing with private business.

But the pending bill does not go far enough in this respect, and the amendments offered by the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Ohio correct the defect. As the bill now stands the Commodity Credit Corporation is simply admonished not to construct additional facilities unless existing storage facilities in the area are not adequate. But remember it is the Commodity Credit Corporation itself that determines whether the facilities are adequate.

The amendments offered by the two gentlemen simply provide that storage facilities are not to be acquired for cotton or tobacco, or for refrigerated cold storage, or for package products customarily stored commercially. There is nothing in the amendments which in any way restrict the Commodity Credit Corporation in its normal operations. We are not dealing with the commodities with which the Corporation normally deals or with any commodity where there is a storage demand.

There is no demand for storage facilities for cotton, so that is excluded by this Sutton amendment. There is no demand for storage facilities for tobacco, so that is also excluded by this Sutton amendment. The Senate excluded these two commodities in the companion bill that passed the Senate.

Likewise, there is no demand for cold storage facilities, and they too would be excluded under the Young amendment in substantial accordance with the action taken in the Senate.

As everyone knows, the Commodity Credit Corporation ordinarily deals with bulk products. It has nothing to do with package products customarily stored commercially, and so it is proposed to exclude that item by this amendment.

By the Sutton-Young amendments, Mr. Chairman, we seek to protect private enterprise from Government competition. I hope they will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency one or two questions. Does the bill now before us provide that the Commodity Credit Corporation may acquire property only for its own use or for the purpose of storing goods which the Commodity Credit Corporation does not own?

Mr. SPENCE. Only when existing facilities are inadequate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not think that answers the question. I want to know if this bill authorizes the Commodity Credit Corporation to provide funds to finance storage beyond what the Commodity Credit Corporation needs for its own use?

Mr. SPENCE. No. There is no provision in the bill for that. The Commodity Credit Corporation would assist cooperatives, it could assist private enterprise in creating adequate storage facilities.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The bill does permit the Commodity Credit Corporation to lend money to private enterprise to build its own storage plants?

Mr. SPENCE. If the facilities are needed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the Young amendment and will support it if given a chance to vote on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GATHINGS].

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Chairman, the language to which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] referred to a few minutes ago, known as the Brown amendment, differs from the suggestion made by Mr. Todd, who represents the cotton warehousemen. Mr. Todd testified that he was of the opinion that authority should not be given the Commodity Credit Corporation to erect warehouses. He urged an exemption for cotton warehouses first and then, should the committee fail to expressly exempt cotton warehouses, he suggested the following:

Provided however, That the Corporation shall not provide storage facilities for any commodity unless (and then only to the extent that, and only for the duration of any period during which) private capital and private industry fail to provide such facilities in adequate volume for the efficient storage of that commodity in accordance with the usual trade customs and practices.

The Brown amendment is as follows:

Provided, That the authority contained in this subsection (h) shall not be utilized by the Corporation for the purpose of acquiring real property, or any interest therein, in order to provide storage facilities for any commodity unless the Corporation determines that existing privately owned storage facilities for such commodity in the area concerned are not adequate: And provided further, That nothing contained in this subsection (h) shall limit the duty of the Corporation, to the maximum extent practicable consistent with the fulfillment of the Corporation's purposes and the effective and efficient conduct of its business, to utilize the usual and customary channels, facilities, and arrangements of trade and commerce in the warehousing of commodities.

The Todd language differs from the Brown amendment in that the Commodity Credit Corporation could only provide the facilities for the existence of the shortage period, while the Brown amendment would permit the construction of warehouses when the Commodity Credit Corporation itself finds that "privately owned storage facilities in the area concerned are not adequate."

Under the Todd suggestion the industry must fail to provide "facilities in adequate volume in accordance with the usual trade customs and practices."

I am opposed to granting authority to the Commodity Credit Corporation to build competing warehouses to those of private enterprise when the warehouse companies are adequately serving its customers. That is the case in my section. I have heard of no cotton farmer who was deprived of warehouse service even during the bumper-crop year of 1948. It is unnecessary to give this authority here to this Government agency when marketing quotas and cotton acreage allotments will be put into effect in 1950 which will result in a sizable decrease in the production of cotton in 1950. I trust that the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUTTON] will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if we are going to do the fair thing we would exclude everyone or not vote for any of these amendments at all. The economy of our country includes the farmer and the worker, both of which constitute the great army of consumers of our country.

Mr. Chairman, we have here an attempt on the part of certain interests to divide this House, an attempt to divide those representing agriculture, in the hope of getting those from the grain districts to vote against tobacco and cotton and, on the other hand, to make an appeal for the votes from the city districts to line up against cotton and tobacco, leaving grain out. It seems to me that is a very bad method for all of us to follow, particularly by those representing agricultural districts.

Nothing has been done, as far as I can observe, against private industry. There are provisions in this bill, and always have been in the law. The Commodity Credit Corporation stores up my way. I have had occasion to approach them on various occasions for private interests and the Commodity Credit Corporation has extended every consideration possible. I see no danger there, but I do believe that in case of an emergency this Corporation should have the power to step in when such an emergency exists and where agriculture is involved to assure adequate storage facilities, and I refer to an emergency such as developed last year. I have no farmers in my district, but I have no fear as to the contents of the bill and that the provisions of it will not be exercised properly. This is essentially legislation in the interest of the farmer, and without this legislation in this great industrial Nation of ours, where agriculture is a powerful secondary activity, agriculture will be in somewhat of a defenseless position unless effective legislation of this kind is enacted into law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment should be adopted, and there are several reasons why it should be adopted.

In the first place, the warehouse industry, the cotton and tobacco warehouse industries and the cold storage industry, private enterprises, have invested, perhaps, hundreds of millions of dollars in their businesses. This bill would authorize, if this amendment is not adopted, the Commodity Credit Corporation to go into competition with this private enterprise.

On page 2 I call your attention to the fact that there is an inducement on the part of the Commodity Credit Corporation to go into business other than the storage of grain on which it has made loans. In line 11 you will notice that it can buy this real estate for storage purposes or otherwise to protect the financial interest of the Corporation. Now, there is no review from the findings of the Secretary of Agriculture that it is necessary to set up competing enterprise if it is to the financial interest of the Corporation to do so. This would constitute the authority to buy and construct storage facilities in these particular fields. Then, if the Secretary of Agriculture decided, in accordance with the language in line 18, that there were not sufficient storage facilities in a particular area; for example, if it was found that there were not sufficient storage facilities for cotton in the New England area, the Secretary of Agriculture could, under the terms of this bill, build storage warehouses in the New England States and, of course, come in competition with existing warehouses and thereby be the means of putting private industry out of business.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, for 15 years the Commodity Credit Corporation had the power to invade the field of private enterprise. For 15 years it had all the powers that could be granted to a corporation organized under the laws of Delaware. There is not a single instance in all that time, with the great powers it possessed, that it ever once did invade that field, that it has not been scrupulous in handling only the affairs that are purely within its jurisdiction or indulged in competition with any private enterprise.

Now, the gentleman from Michigan has talked about the tobacco warehouses. My people, the farmers I represent, grow tobacco; it is their cash crop. The Secretary of Agriculture made a statement as to what would be his intention with reference to the storing and warehousing of tobacco. He said that he would adopt the same methods that are now in vogue; that the support prices would be maintained through the cooperatives and that the storage would be in the tobacco-auction warehouses as it has been in the past. That is his intention with regard to tobacco. I know it is his intention in regard to every other agricultural product.

This is just a bugaboo that should frighten no one. It looks to me as though the warehouse interests have been pretty active in contacting the Members of Congress and that the farmers, as usual, have stayed away.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUTTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. YOUNG) there were—ayes 113, noes 115.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. YOUNG and Mr. BUCHANAN.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 126, noes 125.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, as amended.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. SUTTON and Mr. BUCHANAN to act as tellers.

The Committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 130, noes 133.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California and Mr. SPENCE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky, chairman of the committee.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the bill and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. YOUNG: On page 2, line 8, after the word "storage" insert the following: "(other than refrigerated cold storage and storage for goods and packaged products customarily stored commercially by the public warehousing industry or in general merchandise warehouses)."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is substantially the same as that which was decided by the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio if this is the same text as the amendment which he offered to the Sutton amendment.

Mr. YOUNG. It has the same purpose; whether it is the same text or not, I would not say; but it is with the same purpose and intent. This amendment carried before.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not inquire as to purport.

Mr. YOUNG. It is not the same language, Mr. Chairman. This is an amendment to the bill. My amendment to the amendment carried.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order and, without objection, recognizes the gentleman from Ohio for approximately 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, this is a good bill that we are voting on today. The amendment to the bill now before you which I have offered makes this good bill a better bill, in my judgment.

The arguments have already been made on the floor here in support of and against this proposal, so I shall take no further time.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. What the gentleman's amendment does is to amend the bill itself and is an amendment which the Committee has already voted on favorably when a similar amendment was offered as an amendment to the Sutton amendment, is it not?

Mr. YOUNG. The gentleman's statement is correct. It has already been approved and involves cold-storage processed goods.

Mr. JUDD. A type of commodity about which there has not been any controversy or demonstrated need for storage, and if there is no need, why should authority be granted? I congratulate the gentleman for reintroducing his amendment so that we can vote on it separately.

Mr. YOUNG. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Does not the gentleman think that those from the cotton and tobacco areas who feel that this storage is necessary but who do not believe in the Government going into competition with private industry in the refrigeration business might well support the gentleman's amendment now, even though they did not before?

Mr. YOUNG. I hope so. This relates to cold storage and processed goods.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will I be permitted to speak upon my own amendments which are at the desk?

The CHAIRMAN. Within the limitation of time as fixed by the Committee.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. May I be permitted to have my amendments read and to speak on them?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will at the proper time read the amendments offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota has just congratulated the gentleman from Ohio for reoffering his amendment. It is the same amendment upon which we voted a short time ago.

Mr. JUDD. And which carried.

Mr. SPENCE. It seems to me that if we were as jealous of the interests of the farmers as we are of the interests of the warehouse people there would not be any trouble here this afternoon. We are very touchy about any invasion of the warehousemen's interest, but we seem to have forgotten the purpose for which this legislation is to be enacted, which is to give the farmers a support price and to furnish the facilities that are necessary for the storage of these products. I think in our zealousness to protect the warehousemen, we are probably forgetting the interests of the farmer.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG]. I will also vote for the bill.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, this is a good amendment. We just voted on the amendment a moment ago and adopted it. However, at that time it was tied on to another amendment which was eventually defeated.

In the western area particularly we have a large number of storage warehouses. There is an immense investment in these warehouses and to a large extent they are vacant at the present time. Certainly we should not invade private industry by giving authority to any agency of government to expend money to duplicate existing facilities if they are not needed.

If the pending amendment is adopted, the farmers will be adequately taken care of. I would not vote against their interests. In my opinion, there is no reason why we should not adopt the pending amendment.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Is there not a danger, other than competition with private industry, in the fact that many men in the gentleman's area and in mine will be thrown out of jobs if we allow the Government to go into competition with private industry now operating these refrigerated warehouses?

Mr. ANGELL. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. Then this is in the interest of the farmers and not, as the gentleman, the chairman of the committee, has just said, in the interest of just one group, the warehousemen.

Mr. ANGELL. Certainly it is in the interest of the farmers. The farmer will have adequate warehouse facilities if this amendment is adopted, and they will not have to pay taxes for duplicating existing facilities which are adequate to provide all needed warehousing. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER].

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, it should be unnecessary to repeat again the arguments that have been already made against this type of amendment. I have no farmers in my district. There are some warehouses in the immediate vicinity of my district, but they do not need this protection, nor do the warehouses anywhere in the country need the protection that is sought by this amendment that is now being offered. The bill with the Brown amendment as we now have it before us says that before providing storage facilities for any commodity the Corporation must first determine that the existing privately owned storage facilities for such commodities in the area concerned are not adequate. Then, as further protection, the bill also provides that the Corporation must utilize the usual and customary channels, facilities, and arrangements in trade and commerce in the warehousing of commodities. There is no need for this amendment. You have ample opportunity to review the Corporation's activities and there are ample prohibitions in the bill as you have it before you. In addition, the Commodity Credit Corporation cannot carry on these activities without funds. It can get its funds only from our Appropriations Committee. We can be certain that the Corporation will get no funds from that source with which to compete with private industry. The amendment should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the committee divided, and there were—ayes 119, noes 132.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PHILLIPS of California: On page 2, at line 25, strike out the period and the quotation marks and insert a semicolon and the following: "And provided further, To encourage the storage of grain on farms, where it can be stored at the lowest cost, the Corporation shall make loan not to exceed 17½ cents per bushel of the estimated crop to grain growers needing storage facilities when such growers shall apply to the Corporation for financing the construction or purchase of suitable storage, and these loans shall be deducted from the proceeds of price-support loans or purchase agreements made between the Corporation and the growers."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Your amendment makes the bill. Storage on the farm or as near as possible is the best place. It saves any possibility of a double haul if the farmer needs the grain later due to a hard winter. It provides dispersion of commodities, which is important in an atomic age. It contributes to solving the shortage in grain cars which has become so acute with the increase of combine threshing. Grain used to be stored in stacks, much of it, and with threshing strung along until Christmas, there was not the demand for immediate storage at harvest time that there is now. By all means this amendment should be adopted. It is the most important part of the bill.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, this is an important amendment. I agree with the gentleman from South Dakota. If it is thoroughly understood I do not believe there will be much objection to it.

The amendment provides that the Commodity Credit Corporation may advance to an individual grain grower 17½ cents per bushel to build a bin upon his own property, that money subsequently to be deducted from the money which would be paid the farmer under whatever contract he has.

This amendment in no way interferes with anything which is presently in the printed bill. If you are opposed to the bill, you can vote for this amendment because if the bill is carried this will make it a better bill. If you are for the bill as it has been printed and reported by the committee, you can vote for this amendment because it offers the farmer an opportunity to build the grain bins for himself and pay for it himself upon his own land. It is part of the program which the Commodity Credit Corporation has carried out to distribute the bins they already have and put them upon the farmer's land. This extends beyond that and makes it possible for the farmer to buy the bins and put them there himself.

Either you will spend 17.56 cents per bushel for storage in a large storage warehouse and get nothing back, or you will vote to advance the farmer under this amendment 17.5 cents and get it all back. If put into use by the farmer, this could save $20,000,000 to the Commodity Credit Corporation and thus to the taxpayer.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. There is no provision in the present law to make such loans to the farmers at the present time?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. The gentleman is correct. There is nothing in the law which permits exactly what this amendment covers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment on the face of it looks like a very good amendment because it does attempt to carry out one of the things the Commodity Credit Corporation has sought for many years to do, that is, provide a considerable amount of grain storage on the farms of this country.

When you study the amendment a little bit closer and look at what it attempts to do, I think you will find it would favor the securing of wooden grain storage on the farms over steel bins which are more modern and more durable.

Under the limit provided in the amendment, that loans shall be made in an amount not exceeding 17.5 cents per bushel, the financing of steel grain storage will not be helped, but the amendment will help to finance wooden grain storage, which the Commodity Credit Corporation, as has been brought out earlier in this debate, has been getting rid of and selling off to the farmers.

Thus, this amendment is in the nature of a limiting amendment on the powers that the Corporation now has to make loans to the farmers for farm storage. The Corporation can fix its own terms under present law to encourage farm storage. It can increase the present farm storage rate from 7 cents per bushel to an amount necessary to help finance additional farm storage.

This amendment, however, limits—it does not add to—their authority to help provide farm storage through loans.

This amendment was not presented to the committee, if I remember correctly, for more careful consideration and study, before it was offered here on the floor.

The Department of Agriculture is opposed to this, not only because they think it will hamper an adequate well-balanced farm storage program of long-range benefit through steel bins, but also it will limit the flexibility of area of production grain storage. That is because if you put enough or all of this storage on the farms, you are going to get a great deal more storage capacity on the farms which will perhaps not be needed.

Whereas the need for adequate storage oftentimes is the track-side storage in an area of production where you have a glut in one particular year. The Commodity Credit Corporation needs to use some of the money it has for storage to go in and build these emergency storage facilities where the crops are flooding in to keep them there as long as this glut exists in that area. Then, when they are no longer needed, they can be moved off to another area where they are needed.

This amendment might possibly have the effect of concentrating the entire storage on the farms. I am sure this will have the effect of encouraging wooden bin storage as against steel storage.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I spoke about the desirability of having a tax incentive added to this legislation. But that amendment would be subject to a point of order. So I am withholding that amendment and am supporting the amendment offered by the gentleman from California because it is a step in the right direction, as testified to here by the opponents to the amendment, as well as by the proponents, of helping create storage. What I am interested in is adequate storage for farm crops, preferably on the farm. That is where I want most to see this storage. But I also want a tax incentive to help not only the farm storage program, under private ownership and control, but also so that we may have track-side or country-point warehousing, and terminal-point warehousing storage. What we want, after all, is conservation of the crops. I am tired of seeing the Government departments come here trying to channel everything down the narrow groove of Government bureaucracy and Government control. I would like to see more freedom and greater power in the hands of the farmer himself, and the warehouseman himself. This amendment is a step in that direction. If Congress is sincerely interested in trying to help the farmer and helping the American people conserve crops, Congress certainly will support the amendment offered by the gentleman from California here under consideration. Also, you will supplement that with support of my bill, H. R. 1553, which is now before the Committee on Ways and Means, which provides a tax incentive as well for the creation of privately owned storage facilities under private control. That is the objective which I am trying to help along in the consideration of this whole crop storage program and it is an objective worthy of the wholehearted support of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER].

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment prevails. You are putting the storage right back on the farms where it belongs, and it is not going to cost the Government one cent. The money, which is advanced to build these bins, amounting to 17 cents a bushel, is the exact cost of storage in one of the terminals of this country for 12 months. Let the farmer use the kind of granary that he wants. If he wants a steel granary, let him build that. It he wants a bin built of lumber, let him have that. Let him build any kind of building that he wants. When he gets it built, he will own it. It will only take 2 years for him to own that building and the Government will be out of it. It seems to me if you want storage where it belongs, you will have it with the farmers themselves.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. I want to compliment the gentleman. He is exactly right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAMBLE].

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment and I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE].

Mr. TALLE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] just stated that the Department of Agriculture is eager to get rid of wooden bins and does not favor their use. I invite my colleagues to turn to page 20 of the hearings, where I asked the Secretary of Agriculture the following questions:

Mr. TALLE. A number of people write to me and say they would like to furnish wooden bins to farmers who need them. What shall I tell them after your statement this morning?

Secretary BRANNAN. I hope you will tell them to be prepared to furnish wooden bins. We are again in the position where any kind of storage bin we can get our hands on or the American farmer can get his hands on, will be needed.

Mr. TALLE. In other words, it is doubtful whether you can get enough steel?

Secretary BRANNAN. That is right.

That should establish once and for all the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture is on record, on pages 20 and 21 of the hearings, in favor of wooden bins. The amendment should be adopted.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GAMBLE. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. There is nothing in the amendment that has anything to do with steel or wood. There is nothing that compels him to use either. It is entirely discretionary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAMBLE] has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I support this bill H. R. 2682, because of the interest which the port of Stockton, Calif., has in this legislation. Our port was built about 20 years ago. Although inland about 80 miles from the Golden Gate, we are able to accommodate practically any size ocean boat as our turning basin and the channel is 34 feet deep.

At the port terminal we have a cotton compress, which is being paid for by the port district. We are a logical export port for the cotton raised in California. The haul from the cotton section in the San Joaquin Valley is an easy down hill haul to Stockton.

We are anxious to get a warehouse that can store cotton awaiting shipment out of the port of Stockton. If the Secretary of Agriculture and the Commodity Credit Corporation will give us a lift, we think they can help us finance such a warehouse and the port will make suitable arrangements to pay back the cost of the investment with interest. This bill seems to give that authority, although it may not directly build the warehouse—at least not by the use of CCC funds. But if they recognize the need for the warehouse and I have been assured that they do, the Secretary might make a thorough study of the need for this warehouse, which might be submitted to the RFC in the event a loan for that purpose is sought by the port district. It seems to me that would be a distinct help to the cotton growers of our State.

I insert, under leave granted me, a statement on the rate structure to and from Stockton and also on the production of cotton in California and Arizona, which might logically be shipped out of the port of Stockton:

COMPARISON OF TRANSPORTATION COSTS ON CALIFORNIA COTTON

Rail rates to ports (CIT):

California origins to California ports, 29 cents per hundredweight.

California origins to Gulf ports, $1.28 per hundredweight.

Additional rail freight cost to move cotton to Gulf ports, 99 cents per hundredweight, or $4.95 per bale.

Ocean freight charges:

California ports to Orient, $1.4875 per hundredweight.

Gulf ports to Orient, $1.96 per hundredweight.

Savings available via California ports, $0.475 per hundredweight, or $2.3625 per bale.

COTTON PRODUCTION, 1948 SEASON

Acreage planted to cotton, 1948:

California, 810,000 acres.

Arizona, 275,000 acres.

Bales produced, 1948:

California, 973,545 bales.

Arizona, 331,995 bales.

ESTIMATED COTTON-STORAGE CAPACITY

California, 500,000 flat bales. (See note 1.)

Arizona, 100,000 flat bales. (See note 2.)

NOTE 1.—This figure includes maximum capacity including facilities of cotton compresses. Capacity of compress space should be deducted because they cannot be tied up with dead storage and still transit other cotton. According to our information, capacity outside of compresses does not exceed 100,000 bales at this time.

NOTE 2.—This figure includes capacity of cotton compresses which must be deducted to compute capacity for dead storage. Capacity aside from compress areas does not exceed 40,000 bales according to best available estimates.

General note: Arizona figures have been included above because normally Arizona cotton should economically move through California gateways.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PHILLIPS of California) there were—ayes 128, nays 123.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. PHILLIPS of California and Mr. BUCHANAN to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 144, noes 139.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GORE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2682) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 208, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 325, nays 53, not voting 53, as follows:

Mr. RANKIN (interrupting the calling of the roll). Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Only one bell was rung in the Old House Office Building. There should have been at least two. The Members there do not know that this is a roll call. The bells should be rung twice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KEOGH). The Chair will see to it that the bells are rung.

Mr. RANKIN. Let them be rung now, Mr. Speaker, so that Members there will know that this is a roll call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will see that that is done.

(The Clerk completed the calling of the roll.)

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

General pairs until further notice:

Mr. Noland with Mr. Wadsworth.

Mr. VAN ZANDT and Mr. CORBETT changed their vote from "no" to "aye."

Mr. GOODWIN and Mr. CANFIELD changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 900) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, and for other purposes; that all after the enacting clause be stricken out and the provisions of H. R. 2682, to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, and for other purposes, be substituted.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 (h) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended by deleting the second sentence thereof and inserting in its place the following: "The Corporation shall have power to acquire personal property necessary to the conduct of its business but shall not have power to acquire real property or any interest therein except that it may (a) rent or lease office space necessary for the conduct of its business and (b) acquire by lease, purchase, or otherwise real property or any interest therein for the purpose of providing storage (other than storage for cotton, tobacco, and refrigerated cold storage) adequate to carry out effectively and efficiently any of the Corporation's programs, or of securing or discharging obligations owing to the Corporation, or of otherwise protecting the financial interests of the Corporation and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized, upon terms and conditions prescribed or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, to accept strategic and critical materials produced abroad in exchange for agricultural commodities acquired by the Corporation. In effecting such exchange of goods, normal commercial trade channels shall be utilized insofar as practicable and priority shall be given to commodities easily storable and those which serve as prime incentive goods to stimulate production of critical and strategic materials. The determination of the quantities and qualities of such materials which are desirable for stock piling and the determination of which materials are strategic and critical shall be made in the manner prescribed by section 2 of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act (60 Stat. 596). Strategic and critical materials acquired by Commodity Credit Corporation in exchange for agricultural commodities shall, to the extent approved by the Munitions Board of the National Military Establishment, be transferred to the stock pile provided for by the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, supra; and when transferred to the stock pile the Commodity Credit Corporation shall be reimbursed for the strategic and critical materials so transferred to the stock pile from the funds made available for the purpose of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, in an amount equal to the fair market value, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, of the material transferred to the stock pile: Provided, That the authority contained in this subsection (h) shall not be utilized by the Corporation for the purpose of acquiring real property, or any interest therein, in order to provide storage facilities for any commodity unless the Corporation determines that existing privately owned storage facilities for such commodity in the area concerned are not adequate: And provided further, That nothing contained in this subsection (h) shall limit the duty of the Corporation, to the maximum extent practicable consistent with the fulfillment of the Corporation's purposes and the effective and efficient conduct of its business, to utilize the usual and customary channels, facilities, and arrangements of trade and commerce in the warehousing of commodities."

"SEC. 2. In addition to the Board of Directors there shall be an advisory board reflecting broad agricultural and business experience in its membership and consisting of five members appointed by the President of the United States, not more than three of whom shall belong to the same political party. The advisory board shall meet at the call of the Secretary, who shall require it to meet not less often than once each 90 days; shall survey the general policies of the Corporation, including its policies in connection with the purchase, storage, and sale of commodities, and the operation of lending and price-support programs; and shall advise the Secretary with respect thereto. Members of the advisory board shall receive for their services as members compensation of not to exceed $50 per diem when actually engaged in the performance of their duties as such, together with their necessary traveling expenses while going to and coming from meetings."

SEC. 3. Section 10 of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. Personnel of Corporation: The Secretary shall appoint such officers and employees as may be necessary for the conduct of the business of the Corporation, define their authority and duties, delegate to them such of the powers vested in the Corporation as he may determine, require that such of them as he may designate be bonded and fix the penalties therefor. The Corporation may pay the premium of any bond or bonds. With the exception of experts, appointments shall be made pursuant to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended (5 U. S. C., 1946 ed., 661)."

SEC. 4. Section 4 (c) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended by inserting after the sentence, "No suit by or against the Corporation shall be allowed unless it shall have been brought within 4 years after the right accrued on which suit is brought," the following sentence: "The defendant in any suit by or against the Corporation may plead, by way of set-off or counterclaim, any cause of action, whether arising out of the same transaction or not, which would otherwise be barred by such 4-year period of limitation if the claim upon which the defendant's cause of action is based had not been barred prior to the date that the plaintiff's cause of action arose: Provided, That the defendant shall not be awarded a judgment on any such set-off or counterclaim for any amount in excess of the amount of the plaintiff's claim established in the suit."

SEC. 5. Section 15 of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"USE OF WORDS 'COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION'

"(f) No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall use the words 'Commodity Credit Corporation' or a combination of those three words, as the name or a part thereof under which he or it shall do or purport to do business. Every individual, partnership, association, or corporation violating this prohibition shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both."

SEC. 6. Section 9 of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. Directors: The management of the Corporation shall be vested in a Board of Directors (hereinafter referred to as the 'Board'). The Board shall consist of seven members. The Secretary of Agriculture, or his nominee, shall be a member of the Board and the remaining members shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The chairman of the Board shall be selected by the Board. A majority of the directors shall constitute a quorum of the Board and action shall be taken only by a majority vote of those present. The appointed directors shall serve for a period of 5 years, except that the terms of the first Board shall be shortened to provide for replacement or reappointment of its members in number as nearly equal as practicable in each year. The power of removal shall be vested in the President of the United States. The Corporation may provide, by its bylaws, for the compensation to be paid the directors: Provided, That the compensation paid any director shall not exceed in the aggregate $10,000 per annum: And provided further, That employees of the Corporation or any department or agency of the Federal Government, if also directors, shall not receive additional compensation for their services on the Board."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That section 2 of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (Public Law No. 806, 80th Cong.) is amended by deleting the words 'direction and control of its Board of Directors' at the end of the said section and substituting therefor the words 'supervision and direction of the Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary").'

"SEC. 2. Section 4 (h) of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended by deleting the second sentence thereof and inserting in its place the following: 'The Corporation shall have power to acquire personal property necessary to the conduct of its business but shall not have power to acq ·ire real property or any interest therein except that it may (a) rent or lease office space necessary for the conduct of its business and (b) acquire real property or any interest therein for the purpose of providing storage adequate to carry out effectively and efficiently any of the Corporation's programs, or of securing or discharging obligations owing to the Corporation, or of otherwise protecting the financial interests of the Corporation: Provided, That the authority contained in this subsection (h) shall not be utilized by the Corporation for the purpose of acquiring real property, or any interest therein, in order to provide storage facilities for any commodity unless the Corporation determines that existing privately owned storage facilities for such commodity in the area concerned are not adequate: And provided further, That nothing contained in this subsection (h) shall limit the duty of the Corporation, to the maximum extent practicable consistent with the fulfillment of the Corporation's purposes and the effective and efficient conduct of its business, to utilize the usual and customary channels, facilities, and arrangements of trade and commerce in the warehousing of commodities: And provided further, That to encourage the storage of grain on farms, where it can be stored at the lowest cost, the Corporation shall make loans not to exceed 17½ cents per bushel of the estimated crop to grain growers needing storage facilities when such growers shall apply to the Corporation for financing the construction or purchase of suitable storage, and these loans shall be deducted from the proceeds of price support loans or purchase agreements made between the Corporation and the growers.'

"SEC. 3. Section 9 of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 9. Directors, Advisory Board: (a) The management of the Corporation shall be rested in a board of directors (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"), subject to the general supervision and direction of the Secretary. The Secretary shall be an ex officio director and shall serve as Chairman of the Board. The Board shall consist of six members (in addition to the Secretary), who shall be appointed by, and hold office at the pleasure of, the Secretary. In addition to their duties as members of the Board, such appointed members shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by the Secretary. Each appointed member of the Board shall receive compensation at such rate not in excess of the maximum then payable under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, as may be fixed by the Secretary, except that any such member who holds another office or position under the Federal Government the compensation for which exceeds such rate may elect to receive compensation at the rate provided for such other office or position in lieu of the compensation provided by this section. A majority of the directors shall constitute a quorum of the Board, and action shall be taken only by a majority of those present.

"'(b) In addition to the Board of Directors there shall be an advisory board reflecting broad agricultural and business experience in its membership and consisting of five members appointed by the President of the United States, not more than three of whom shall belong to the same political party. The advisory board shall meet at the call of the Secretary, who shall require it to meet not less often than once each 90 days; shall survey the general policies of the Corporation, including its policies in connection with the purchase, storage, and sale of commodities, and the operation of lending and price-support programs; and shall advise the Secretary with respect thereto. Members of the advisory board shall receive for their services as members compensation of not to exceed $50 per diem when actually engaged in the performance of their duties as such, together with their necessary traveling expenses while going to and coming from meetings.'

"SEC. 4. Section 10 of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 10. Personnel of Corporation: The Secretary shall appoint such officers and employees as may be necessary for the conduct of the business of the Corporation, define their authority and duties, delegate to them such of the powers vested in the Corporation as he may determine, require that such of them as he may designate be bonded and fix the penalties therefor. The Corporation may pay the premium of any bond or bonds. With the exception of experts, appointments shall be made pursuant to the civil service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended (5 U. S. C., 1946 edition, 661).'

"SEC. 5. Section 4 (c) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended—

"(a) by inserting in the second sentence thereof after the word 'jurisdiction' a comma and the following: 'without regard to the amount in controversy,';

"(b) by striking out the fourth sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'No suit by or against the Corporation shall be allowed unless (1) it shall have been brought within 6 years after the right accrued on which suit is brought, or (2) in the event that the person bringing such suit shall have been under legal disability or beyond the seas at the time the right accrued, the suit shall have been brought within 3 years after the disability shall have ceased or within 6 years after the right accrued on which suit is brought, whichever period is longer. The defendant in any suit by or against the Corporation may plead, by way of set-off or counterclaim, any cause of action, whether arising out of the same transaction or not, which would otherwise be barred by such limitation if the claim upon which the defendant's cause of action is based had not been barred prior to the date that the plaintiff's cause of action arose: Provided, That the defendant shall not be awarded a judgment on any such set-off or counterclaim for any amount in excess of the amount of the plaintiff's claim established in the suit.'; and

"(c) by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: 'except that (1) any such suit against the United States based upon any claim of the type enumerated in title 28, section 1491, of the United States Code, may be brought in the United States Court of Claims, and (2) no such suit against the United States may be brought in a district court unless such suit might, without regard to the provisions of this act, be brought in such court'.

"SEC. 6. Section 15 of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"'USE OF WORDS "COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION"

"'(f) No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall use the words "Commodity Credit Corporation," or a combination of these three words, as the name or a part thereof under which he or it shall do or purport to do business. Every individual, partnership, association, or corporation violating this prohibition shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine or not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.'

"SEC. 7. The act, entitled 'An act to facilitate the execution of arrangements for the exchange of surplus agricultural commodities produced in the United States for reserve stocks of strategic and critical materials produced abroad,' approved August 11, 1939, is amended to read as follows: 'That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized, upon terms and conditions prescribed or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, to accept strategic and critical materials produced abroad in exchange for agricultural commodities acquired by the Corporation. Insofar as practicable, in effecting such exchange of goods, normal commercial trade channels shall be utilized and priority shall be given to commodities which serve as prime incentive goods to stimulate production of critical and strategic materials. The determination of which materials are strategic and critical and the determination of the quantities and qualities of such materials which are desirable for stock piling shall be made in the manner prescribed by section 2 of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act (60 Stat. 596). Strategic and critical materials acquired by Commodity Credit Corporation in exchange for agricultural commodities shall be transferred to the stock pile provided for by the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act; and the Commodity Credit Corporation shall be reimbursed for the strategic and critical materials so transferred to the stock pile from the funds made available for the purpose of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, in an amount equal to the fair market value, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, of the material transferred to the stock pile. Nothing contained herein shall limit the authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation to acquire, hold, or dispose of such quantity of strategic and critical materials as it deems advisable in carrying out its functions and protecting its assets.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent the proceedings whereby the bill (H. R. 2632) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, and for other purposes, was passed, were vacated and the bill was laid upon the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks upon the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill just passed immediately following the Phillips amendment, and to include therein extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

GULF STATES MARINE FISHERIES COMMISSION

Mr. THOMPSON submitted a conference report and statement on Senate Joint Resolution 42, granting the consent and approval of Congress to an interstate compact relating to the better utilization of the fisheries (marine, shell, and anadromous) of the Gulf coast and creating the Gulf States Marine Fisheries Commission.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOYKIN (at the request of Mr. MILLER of California) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington (at the request of Mr. MILLER of California) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. WHITE of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Washington Post.

Mr. HELLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in three separate instances and in each to include extraneous matter.

Mr. DAVENPORT asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Appendix.

Mr. JUDD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances, in each to include extraneous matter.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a brief on compulsory health insurance. I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $581.25, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

Mr. KEE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. JAVITS asked and was given permission to address the House for 15 minutes on Tuesday next after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION CHARTER ACT

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, during the discussion on the bill H. R. 2682 I had pending at the desk two amendments. I did not offer the first amendment because a limitation of time had been set, and because of the confusion which was arising at that time.

May I say now the reason I did not offer it was because the same situation existed in the House at that moment as existed in the other body at a comparable moment during the discussion of the bill S. 900, which is the similar bill over in the other body. The distinguished Senator and former Secretary of Agriculture in charge of the bill in the other body had given his assurance that the intent of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the understanding of the provisions of the bill were strictly in accord with the terms of an amendment which several Senators were about to offer.

During the discussion in the committee today the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. SPENCE], and other Members, have given those same statements and assurances. I felt at the time, therefore, it might cause additional confusion and unnecessary discussion. I want, however, to put in the RECORD at this point my understanding that these assurances have been given and that it is not the intent of the Corporation to acquire storage facilities or to make loans to other than grain growers until the full extent of additional farm storage is determined.

In addition to that rather formal statement, may I say that I particularly appreciate the support of the Members for the amendment which I offered because of the very short time I had to offer and explain it. I take particular pride, Mr. Speaker, that in the teller vote which was ordered, every Republican Member of the House voted in favor of the amendment.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mrs. NORTON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 2440. An act to authorize the Public Housing Commissioner to sell the suburban resettlement projects known as Greenbelt, Md.; Greendale, Wis.; and Greenhills, Ohio, without regard to provisions of law requiring competitive bidding or public advertising.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, May 12, 1949, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

610. SENATE

THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1949

(Legislative day of Monday, April 11, 1949)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of all grace, Thou hast taught us that even in the midst of a clamorous world in quietness and in confidence shall be our strength.

As we rejoice in the lifting of an unrighteous blockade, whose cruel and callous purposes have been thwarted by the valor, daring, and skill of freedom's dauntless eagles of the air, save us from blockading the city of our own souls against faith and hope and love and the spiritual commerce which alone can feed and warm our hearts and minds. Restore in us, we pray Thee, the traffic of Thy enabling grace, so that spirit with spirit may meet and the deepest cravings of our nature be satisfied. We ask it through Him who is the Prince of Peace and in whose spirit and name we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. LUCAS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, May 11, 1949, was dispensed with.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] is absent by leave of the Senate for the purpose of being present at a meeting of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are excused by the Senate for the purpose of attending sessions of the Committee on Foreign Relations holding hearings on the North Atlantic Pact.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], the Senator from Maine [Mrs. SMITH], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are detained on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS DURING SENATE SESSION

Mr. BALDWIN asked and obtained consent that a subcomittee of the Armed Services Committee hearing the Malmedy case be permitted to sit this afternoon.

Mr. ROBERTSON asked and obtained consent that a subcommittee on the Federal Reserve System of the Banking and Currency Committee be permitted to hold a hearing this afternoon while the Senate is in session.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Chair will recognize Senators who desire to present matters to the Senate by way of routine business, without speeches and without statements.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES FOR TREASURY DEPARTMENT

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize certain administrative expenses for the Treasury Department, and for other purposes (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

LOAN TO FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION OF THE UN

A letter from the Under Secretary of State, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the President to lend to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations funds for the construction and furnishing of a permanent headquarters, and for related purposes (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY PROJECT—RESOLUTION OF NATIONAL AVENUE ADVANCEMENT ASSOCIATION OF MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be appropriately referred and printed in the body of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point the text of a splendid resolution which I have received from George L. Bott, Secretary of the National Avenue Advancement Association of Milwaukee, Wis. This resolution points up the imperative necessity of completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway project, on which I hope and expect legislation will shortly be introduced in the Senate with extensive cosponsorship by members of both parties, including myself.

I ask that following the resolution there be appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD a brief editorial from the Milwaukee Journal of March 19, pointing up a most interesting contradiction on the part of opponents of the seaway.

There being no objection, the resolution and editorial were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION OF THE NATIONAL AVENUE ADVANCEMENT ASSOCIATION OF MILWAUKEE, WIS., SUBMITTED TO THE ST. LAWRENCE SUBCOMMITTEE, SENATE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Whereas President Truman, in his annual report to the Congress, strongly urged upon the Congress immediate development of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project, to alleviate power shortages and to furnish necessary expansion of our national transportation facilities; and

Whereas the development of the St. Lawrence seaway project will extend the benefits of direct ocean transportation to the city of Milwaukee, the State of Wisconsin, and the entire Great Lakes area; will permit Milwaukee industries to import essential raw materials at low cost and, through the advantage of direct ocean service, to reach new foreign markets and to expand greatly the foreign trade of this area; and low-cost hydroelectric energy now running wastefully into the sea, and, in general, will enhance the economic prosperity, the industrial strength, and the well-being of the entire Nation and our friendly neighbor, Canada; and

Whereas the events of World War II demonstrated the absolute necessity of the St. Lawrence seaway for the national defense and the military security of this Nation by providing a safe interior location for national defense industries, for storage of strategic materials, and for construction of naval and merchant vessels—considerations which have been certified to the Congress by our most eminent military authorities: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the National Avenue Advancement Association, That we strongly endorse the St. Lawrence seaway and power project, and request that this resolution be entered in the records of your hearings with the trust that after consideration by your honorable committee of the merit of this important project your committee will recommend to the Congress the passage of the seaway legislation now before you.

NEW YORK'S CONTRADICTIONS

How credulous do the New York Harbor interests believe the American people to be? Here's what a New Yorker asks the American public to believe: First, that the proposed St. Lawrence waterway would be a little-used, uneconomic, and usually frozen-over ship channel; second, that it would divert, from the New York Harbor alone, "more than half" of its 5,500,000 tons of shipping.

So this little-used, uneconomic, usually frozen-over ship channel would carry nearly 3,000,000 tons annually diverted from New York Harbor, plus all the other tonnage that could not be classified as diversion.

Clearly, here are a couple of "two's" that do not make four.

AMENDMENT OF DISPLACED PERSONS ACT—RESOLUTION OF SHEBOYGAN (WIS.) COMMITTEE ON DISPLACED PERSONS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received a resolution from the Sheboygan (Wis.) Committee on Displaced Persons, urging immediate action on S. 311, to amend the Displaced Persons Act of 1948. As my colleagues will recall, it has been my pleasure to introduce liberalizing amendments to S. 311 in the form of S. 1055, S. 1315, S. 1316, and S. 1317.

I am indeed hoping that we here on the Senate side will take prompt action on revision of the present displaced persons law, and as a matter of fact I have commented on this subject previously on the floor of the Senate.

I feel, too, that we must indeed devote our attention along with other phases of the displaced-persons problem to the very critical problem facing the millions of expelled persons of German ancestry who were thrown out of their homelands at the termination of the war and who were forced into Germany.

Without detracting in any way from the humanitarian question of displaced persons, let us not forget the plight of the expelled persons. Action on processing visas for admission of these expellees has been lagging since the passage of the displaced-persons law, with its expellee provision, and it is obvious that we must speed up such action in addition to speeding up action on the over-all displaced persons front.

I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the resolution of the Sheboygan Citizens Committee on Displaced Persons, signed by James J. Dillman, chairman, and Marie Bale, secretary, be appropriately referred and printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Sheboygan Citizens Committee on Displaced Persons, in meeting assembled this 6th day of May, A. D. 1949, adopts the following resolution:

"Whereas the present laws regarding the admission of displaced persons has proven itself to be very inadequate; and

"Whereas this committee opposes inserting religious quotas into displaced-persons legislation as inconsistent with the emergency nature of the displaced-persons problem and contrary to our American heritage and traditions; and

"Whereas we feel that the United States has failed to admit its fair share of the world's displaced persons under the present legislation: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the committee urge the Senate Subcommittee on Immigration to take immediate action on the McGrath-Neely bill in order that necessary legislation may be considered by the United States Senate, and that copies of this resolution be sent to Senators WILEY and MCCARTHY, of Wisconsin, and to Senator PAT MCCARRAN, chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Immigration, by the secretary."

JAMES J. DILLMAN,
Chairman.

MARIE BALE,
Secretary.

RESOLUTIONS OF GENERAL FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received this morning from Mrs. J. L. Blair Buck, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the text of resolutions adopted at the national convention of the General Federation in Hollywood, Fla. I feel that these resolutions will be of interest to all of my colleagues, particularly because the General Federation has an affiliated membership of some 5,000,000 women. I find myself in agreement with the General Federation on many of the resolutions, for example, on adequate management of public watershed lands, protection of our national parks, continuation of the essential work of the House Un-American Activities Committee, revision of the present obsolete electoral college system, opposition to Federal control of health services, support of ratification of the North Atlantic Pact, and aid for Indian rehabilitation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of these resolutions be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GENERAL FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS—RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED IN CONVENTION, HOLLYWOOD, FLA., APRIL 25-30, 1949

1. WATER SUPPLY

Whereas a dependable water supply is the lifeblood of our Nation's health and economy, controls food production and the development of industries; and

Whereas each year the efficiency of costly storage reservoirs throughout the United States is reduced through sedimentation from overused and burned-over watershed lands; and

Whereas many flood-control structures have been powerless to hold back the flood waters rushing from such denuded watershed lands: Therefore,

Resolved, That the General Federation of Women's Clubs in convention assembled, April 1949, urges Congress to put into operation immediately an over-all program designed to—

1. Rehabilitate these valuable watershed lands which have been denuded and are endangering life and property.

2. Make certain that proper and adequate management is given all of our public watershed lands so that no additional acreage will be ruined and contribute to reservoir sedimentation and disastrous floods.

Miss ETHEL L. LARSEN,
Chairman, Conservation of Natural Resources Committee.

---

2. COMMENDING AND SUPPORTING NATIONAL PARK SERVICE POLICY

Whereas our national parks and monuments are administered by the National Park Service under policies which ensure permanent preservation of scenic, scientific, and historical natural features which they contain, and under policies which prohibit grazing, logging, mining, and engineering projects which will destroy their natural character; and

Whereas many local and commercial interests seek to despoil these national parks and monuments for their personal profit by introducing legislation in Congress that would open them to exploitation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Federation of Women's Clubs in convention assembled, April 1949, commends the National Park Service for its adherence to official policies and that the federation asserts its strong opposition to any effort that may be made to commercialize any national park or monument, whether by direct invasion, by altering boundaries, or by any other means.

Miss ETHEL L. LARSEN,
Chairman, Conservation of Natural Resources Committee.

---

3. COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Whereas the General Federation of Women's Clubs recognizes that information on the infiltration of foreign agents and subversive organizations is essential as a protection to our national security; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States now has in the House of Representatives a standing Committee on Un-American Activities which has done outstanding defensive work for this country during the past 10 years: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the General Federation of Women's Clubs in convention assembled, April 1949, endorses the continuation of the Committee on Un-American Activities during the Eighty-first Congress, provided that in the exercise of its investigatory powers it work with the Federal Bureau of Investigation and that certain procedural and administrative safeguards protecting the rights of individuals be incorporated into a definite code of procedures under which the committee shall function.

Mrs. C. D. WRIGHT,
Chairman, Legislation Department.

---

4. UNIFORM MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

Whereas more than half a million divorces and almost as many remarriages are taking place in the United States annually; and

Whereas lack of uniform laws often results in illegal divorces, illegal remarriages, and illegitimacy of children with consequent break-down of moral standards and confusion of property rights: Therefore

Resolved, That the General Federation of Women's Clubs in convention assembled, April 1949, approves an amendment to the Constitution of the United States giving the Congress power to enact uniform marriage and divorce legislation; and

Resolved further, That the General Federation of Women's Clubs recommends an educational campaign to acquaint its members and the general public with the implications of existing laws and the advantages of uniform legislation pertaining to marriage and divorce.

Mrs. C. D. WRIGHT,
Chairman, Legislation Department.

5. REVISION OF THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE SYSTEM

Whereas under the present procedure the election of the President and Vice President of the United States does not necessarily reflect the will of the people: Therefore

Resolved, That the General Federation of Women's Clubs in convention assembled, April 1949, urges the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States abolishing the electoral college and dividing the electoral vote in each State in proportion to the popular vote.

Mrs. C. D. WRIGHT,
Chairman, Legislation Department.

1. HEALTH SERVICES

Whereas needed medical and health services should be placed within the reach of every individual within the United States; and

Whereas we believe the most effective approach to the national health problem lies in the extension and development of voluntary health insurance; and

Whereas we believe the extent of Federal grants necessary to aid the various States in providing care for the medically indigent can be determined by Nation-wide governmental supported surveys made by States agencies: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Federation of Women's Clubs in convention assembled April 1949, goes on record against Government control of health services which would jeopardize free enterprise, establish heavy new tax burdens and unprecedented national deficits, and infringe upon the powers of the individual States; and

Resolved further, That copies of this resolution be sent to the proper authorities and to the Members of Congress.

Mrs. STEPHEN J. FRANCISCO,
Chairman, Public Welfare Department.

2. ATLANTIC PACT

Whereas the board of directors of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, at its October 15, 1948, meeting, recorded its support of necessary legislation to implement the plans for self-defense of those members of the United Nations with whom the United States may join in the interests of collective security; and

Whereas since this date the signature of the United States has been affixed to the North Atlantic Pact, which now awaits Senate action: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Federation of Women's Clubs in convention assembled, April 1949, urges prompt ratification by the United States Senate of this treaty; and further

Resolved, That after ratification adequate means for implementation of the North Atlantic Pact be provided by the Congress of the United States; and further

Resolved, That this resolution be sent by wire to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate.

Mrs. AMBROSE N. DIEHL,
Chairman, International Relations Department.

3. INDIAN RELIEF

Whereas Indians living on reservations in some States have not been receiving public-assistance benefits due them under the social-security laws and several of the States in which reservations are located are too poor to finance their share of the cost of such benefits; and many Indians have not been provided necessary welfare, health, educational, and other public services by the Federal Government; and

Whereas economic distress of many Indians has been aggravated during this past winter by severe livestock losses caused by heavy snowstorms: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Federation of Women's Clubs in convention assembled, April 1949, That all States should be required to assume their proper legal responsibility for Indians without discrimination, with the stipulation that, where necessary, States should receive extra Federal aid on a temporary diminishing basis to help finance this heavy burden of Indian relief; and further

Resolved, That the Federal Government should fully discharge its obligation to provide adequate educational, health, economic, and other opportunities to all Indians.

Mrs. JOHN J. KIRK,
Chairman, Indian Welfare Committee.

RESOLUTIONS OF UNITED SPANISH WAR VETERANS ENCAMPMENT, HASTINGS, NEBR.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD resolutions adopted by the United Spanish War Veterans Encampment, held at Hastings, Nebr., on May 1, 2, and 3, 1949.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY UNITED SPANISH WAR VETERANS ENCAMPMENT HELD AT HASTINGS, NEBR., MAY 1, 2, 3, 1949

Be it resolved by the forty-second annual encampment of the United Spanish War Veterans:

1. That we support the American Constitution, American institutions, and American ideals and that we give our wholehearted support to our Congress and our State Department in our bipartisan international policy for a just and lasting peace, and that we reaffirm our stand on adequate preparedness in the air, on the sea, and on the land.

2. Courtesies: To Victor Vifquain Camp, No. 15, Department of Nebraska; to the management of the Clarke Hotel; to the Auxiliary to Victor Vifquain Camp, No. 15; and to the officers and people of the city of Hastings; we extend greetings and express our appreciation of their many courtesies and their assistance in making this forty-second encampment of the United Spanish War Veterans an outstanding success with pleasures long to be remembered. We especially express our thanks to our national commander, Hon. Charles R. Barefoot, for honoring our encampment with his presence and attendance for 3 days and for the two masterful and eloquent addresses which he delivered during his visit.

3. In appreciation: Be it resolved, That we in convention assembled, do express our thanks to the Nebraska State Legislature for its generosity in again approving the appropriations of funds for the relief of Spanish War veterans and their dependents and the maintenance of a permanent headquarters in the State capitol at Lincoln. We are sure that each succeeding legislature has realized the real worth of this fund for Spanish War veterans; and, we again thank you.

4. Americanism: Americanism is an unfailing love of country; loyalty to its institutions and ideals; eagerness to defend it against all enemies; undivided allegiance to the flag and a desire to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and posterity. Be it resolved; we deplore the tendency now prevailing in this country toward internationalism and adopting the philosophy of foreign governments; instead we emphasize the necessity of teaching to our youth the principles and ideals of our way of life embodied in our Constitution and the above declaration.

5. Capitalism versus communism: We invite the attention of the world to the philosophy upon which our Government is founded, cementing the American people in the framework of organized society on the basis of a capitalistic system as opposed to the doctrine of communism. The term capitalistic as herein used is defined as democracy devoted to the development and protection of the individual and maintenance of his individual rights and personal freedom. The capitalistic system encourages the individual to work. Communism encourages him to shirk. Capitalism builds. Communism frustrates and retards. Capitalism extols the individual. Communism evaluates the individual as naught. Capitalism is a means of accumulation. Communism is a means of dissipation. Capitalism makes for security. Capitalism is a means that what you honestly acquire is yours. Communism is a means of licensed thievery and pillage. Communism means that nothing is yours since you are nothing. We urge American people to purge communism as they would a plague, and hold steadfastly to an ideology based on truth, morality, and righteousness, the application of which virtues has enabled the American people to attain a goal toward which all peoples of the world may well strive in their efforts to attain a status of prosperity and well-being unequaled elsewhere in the world.

6. Military training: We favor military training to be carried on under the designation "defense military training" since such designation more accurately indicates the purpose and extent of the security of our Nation which we need to maintain. Such training should extend over age groups which will least interfere with preparation and training for civic activities and be sufficiently thorough to develop effective and lasting efficiency, rather than a means of meeting immediate emergency.

Military training should be required of every able-bodied male student in all United States land-grant colleges and in all or any colleges receiving financial aid from the Federal Government.

7. Be it resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the proceedings of this encampment and copies be furnished to the following: The Hastings Daily Tribune, the Lincoln Daily Star and the Lincoln State Journal, the Omaha World Herald at Omaha, the National Tribune in Washington, D. C., the Veterans' Weekly at Lincoln, national headquarters of the United Spanish War Veterans at Washington, D. C., Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, Washington, D. C., Nebraska Representatives and Senators in the National Congress.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. McGRATH, from the Committee on the District of Columbia:

S. 885. A bill to provide for the removal of weeds from lands in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 376);

S. 1557. A bill to provide for the appointment of an additional judge for the juvenile court of the District of Columbia; without amendment (Rept. No. 367);

S. 1580. A bill concerning common-trust funds and to make uniform the law with reference thereto; without amendment (Rept. No. 368); and

H. J. Res. 200. Joint resolution to authorize the National Capital Sesquicentennial Commission to proceed with plans for the celebration and commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the seat of the Federal Government in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 369).

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

S. 1384. A bill to authorize the transfer of a tower located on the Lower Souris National Wildlife Refuge to the International Peace Garden, Inc.; without amendment (Rept. No. 371).

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS RELATING TO TVA (REPT. NO. 372)

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, from the Joint Committee on Labor-Management Relations, I submit, pursuant to Senate Concurrent Resolution 10, Eighty-first Congress, a report relating to the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and printed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HOLLAND (for himself and Mr. PEPPER):

S. 1840. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Air Force to improve recreational facilities at Eglin Field, Fla.; to the Committee on Armed Services.

S. 1841. A bill to authorize restocking, propagation, and conservation of game in the Eglin Field Reservation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McMAHON:

S. 1842. A bill to authorize the admission into the United States of certain aliens possessing special skills; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Armed Services, reported an original bill (S. 1843) to convert the National Military Establishment into an executive department of the Government, to be known as the Department of Defense; to provide the Secretary of Defense with appropriate responsibility and authority, and with civilian and military assistance adequate to fulfill his enlarged responsibility; and for other purposes, which was ordered to be placed on the calendar, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. WILEY:

S. 1844. A bill for the relief of Bror Rainer Heikel; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAIN:

S. 1845. A bill for the relief of Russell M. French; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BYRD:

S. 1846. A bill for the relief of Jeannette Pasayannis; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. CAIN introduced Senate Joint Resolution 91, relating to Father's Day, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and appears under a separate heading.)

FATHER'S DAY

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution relating to Father's Day.

All of us are aware that Father's Day occurs this year on June 19. This is the day in which we pause, for a short time, to pay homage to the man who plugs along, patiently, uncomplainingly, and happily, day after day, week after week, year after year, paying the bills, providing for his family's wants, its needs, and its luxuries.

I should like to remind the Senate, with considerable pride, that this highly deserved honor to the Nation's fathers, originated in my State, the State of Washington.

In 1910 Mrs. Bruce Dodd, of Spokane, Wash., suggested the idea to a Spokane newspaper reporter as a tribute to her father, William J. Smart. Her suggestion was adopted by the local ministerial association and the YMCA and together they sponsored the first Father's Day on June 3 of that year.

In 1914 the Congress recognized Father's Day as a national holiday, but when World War I intervened the idea was abandoned until 1922. Since that time Father's Day has been proclaimed a national holiday the third Sunday in June each year.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 91) relating to Father's Day was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ADDITIONAL REVENUE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—AMENDMENTS

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina (for himself and Mr. NEELY) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to House bill 3704, supra, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CIVIL FUNCTIONS ADMINISTERED BY DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY—AMENDMENT

Mr. WITHERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3734) making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

RECOMMITTAL OF POSTMASTER NOMINATION

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, on the 10th instant I reported favorably the nomination of William O. Jones to be postmaster at Delmont, S. Dak. As in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be taken from the Executive Calendar and recommitted to the committee for further investigation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination will be taken from the Executive Calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR JOHNSTON OF SOUTH CAROLINA BEFORE ASSOCIATION OF RETIRED CIVIL EMPLOYEES

[Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by him before the Association of Retired Civil Employees at Washington, D. C., on May 7, 1949, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE CASE FOR NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE—ARTICLE BY SENATOR HUMPHREY

[Mr. MURRAY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "The Case for National Health Insurance," written by Senator HUMPHREY and published in the New York Times Magazine of May 8, 1949, which appears in the Appendix.]

SENATOR BYRD—EDITORIAL COMMENT

[Mr. MARTIN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "More Byrds Needed," published in the Washington Daily News of May 10, 1949; also an editorial entitled "Senator BYRD Peers Ahead," published in the Wilmington, (Del.) Journal of May 9, 1949, which appear in the Appendix.]

VETERANS' CARE—EDITORIAL FROM THE CHARLESTON (W. VA.) GAZETTE

[Mr. NEELY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Veterans' Care," published in a recent issue of the Charleston (W. Va.) Gazette, which appears in the Appendix.]

SECRETARY BRANNAN'S FARM PLAN—EDITORIALS FROM THE NEBRASKA FARMER

[Mr. BUTLER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD two editorials from the Nebraska Farmer for May 7, 1949, one entitled "Bugs in Brannan's Farm Plan," and the second an editorial signed by the editor, Sam R. McKelvie, which appear in the Appendix.]

THE UNITED NATIONS AND SPAIN—EDITORIAL FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES

[Mr. FLANDERS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "The UN and Spain," from the New York Times of May 12, 1949, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE SALESMAN AND THE POLITICIAN—ADDRESS BY WILLIAM BENTON

[Mr. MURRAY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "The Salesman and the Politician," delivered by Mr. William Benton, former Assistant Secretary of State, publisher of the Encyclopedia Britannica and chairman of the Muzak Corp., before the Sales Executives Club of New York, April 19, 1949, which appears in the Appendix.]

IRAQ URGED AS REFUGE FOR ARAB REFUGEES—ARTICLE BY ELIAHU BEN-HORIN

[Mr. BREWSTER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Iraq Urged as Refuge for Arab Refugees," written by Eliahu Ben-Horin for the Christian Science Monitor, which appears in the Appendix.]

DEDICATION TO ECONOMY CALLED SOLE ALTERNATIVE TO DEBT RISE—ARTICLE BY MARK SULLIVAN

[Mr. WILLIAMS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Dedication to Economy Called Sole Alternative to Debt Rise," written by Mark Sullivan, and published in the New York Herald Tribune, May 11, 1949, which appears in the Appendix.]

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION FELLOWSHIPS

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, a few days ago I received a letter from a very fine GI student at the University of North Carolina, advising me that a rabid Communist from another State had received a scholarship through the Atomic Energy Commission at the University of North Carolina and was working on his doctor's degree in nuclear physics. This patriotic young North Carolinian was very much disturbed that our Government was awarding scholarships through the Atomic Energy Commission to Communists.

I immediately wrote a letter to Dr. David E. Lilienthal, Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, and stated all of the facts and gave the name of the Communist student, and asked what was the policy of the Commission with reference to making any loyalty tests or requiring any information before these fellowship awards were made.

I received a long letter from Dr. Lilienthal, which I ask to have inserted in the body of the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES
ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., May 5, 1949.

Hon. CLYDE R. HOEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HOEY: This is in reply to your letter of April 25, 1949, asking that you be advised as to what steps are taken to determine whether or not Communists are being selected and granted fellowships by the Atomic Energy Commission.

In establishing our fellowship program it was our desire to help overcome the acute shortage of scientific personnel in fields of study related to the development of atomic energy. It was realized that this shortage not only applies to the facilities of the Atomic Energy Commission but also to the broad field of private endeavor in atomic energy. For example, at the present time there are a number of universities and similar institutions of high standing which are most anxious to enter this field but which cannot do so because scientists skilled in the handling of radioactive materials are not available.

In view of its long and distinguished record in such work, the National Research Council was selected for the administration of the Atomic Energy Commission fellowship program. It was felt that the fellowship programs would benefit from the council's long experience in this field and, at the same time, the Commission would be freed from the burdens of detailed administration. In order to assure the selection of well-qualified fellows, the National Research Council has established fellowship boards which review the applications received for Atomic Energy Commission fellowships. The membership of these fellowship boards is as follows:

PREDOCTORAL FELLOWSHIP BOARD IN THE BIOLOGICAL SCIENCES

Douglas Whitaker, chairman, professor of biology, dean of the School of Biological Sciences, Stanford University, California.

Eric G. Ball, professor of biochemistry, Harvard Medical School, Cambridge, Mass.

J. H. Bodine, professor of zoology, University of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa.

Howard B. Lewis, professor of biological chemistry, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Raymond E. Zirkle, professor of botany, director of the Institute of Radiobiology and Biophysics, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.

POSTDOCTORAL FELLOWSHIP BOARD IN THE MEDICAL SCIENCES

Homer W. Smith, chairman, professor of physiology and director of Physiological Laboratories, New York University College of Medicine, New York, N. Y.

Austin M. Brues, director, Biology Division, Argonne National Laboratory, Box 5207, Chicago, Ill.

Sam L. Clark, professor of anatomy and associate dean, Vanderbilt University School of Medicine, Nashville, Tenn.

Hymer Louis Friedell, professor of radiology, Western Reserve University, Cleveland, Ohio.

Joseph G. Hamilton, associate professor of experimental medicine and radiology, associate professor of medical physics, Crocker Laboratory, University of California, Berkeley, Calif.

Roy R. Kracke, dean, clinical medicine, Medical College of Alabama, Birmingham, Ala.

POSTDOCTORAL FELLOWSHIP BOARD IN BIOLOGY AND AGRICULTURE

R. G. Gustavson, chairman, chancellor, University of Nebraska, Lincoln, Nebr.

H. K. Hartline, professor of biophysics, Johnson Research Foundation, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa.

G. Evelyn Hutchinson, professor of zoology, Yale University, New Haven, Conn.

W. J. Robbins, professor of botany, Columbia University, director of New York Botanical Gardens, New York, N. Y.

L. J. Stadler, professor of field crops, University of Missouri, Columbia, Mo.

PREDOCTORAL FELLOWSHIP BOARD IN THE PHYSICAL SCIENCES

Henry A. Barton, chairman, director, American Institute of Physics, New York, N. Y.

John C. Ballar, Jr., professor of chemistry, University of Illinois, Urbana, Ill.

Tom W. Bonner, professor of physics, Rice Institute, Houston, Tex.

William J. Buchta, professor of physics and chairman, department of physics, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.

G. A. Hedlund, professor of mathematics, Yale University, New Haven, Conn.

POSTDOCTORAL FELLOWSHIP BOARD IN THE PHYSICAL SCIENCES

Roger Adams, chairman, professor, and head, department of chemistry, University of Illinois, Urbana, Ill.

Carl D. Anderson, professor of physics, California Institute of Technology, Pasadena, Calif.

Kenneth T. Bainbridge, professor of physics, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.

George Glockler, professor of physical chemistry and head, department of chemistry and chemical engineering, the State University of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa.

William W. Rubey, principal geologist, United States Geological Survey, Washington, D. C.

Marshall H. Stone, Andrew MacLeish distinguished service professor of mathematics, and chairman, department of mathematics, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.

These fellowship boards were chosen by the National Research Council particularly with a view to their ability to evaluate the scientific promise and moral character of prospective fellows. In considering applications, the fellowship boards have before them confidential reports on the candidate which are received from men of proved scientific ability who are familiar with the candidate and in whom the fellowship boards have confidence. In addition, in the case of the postdoctoral fellowships in the medical sciences, the candidate is also interviewed by a member of the fellowship board. In the deliberations of the fellowship boards, we understand that careful consideration is given to the question of character.

Before any fellow is given access to restricted data as defined in the Atomic Energy Act of 1946, or permitted to work on a Commission project where security clearance is normally required, the usual Atomic Energy Commission security clearance must be obtained.

On the other hand, if the fellow does not have access to restricted data and does not work on a Commission project where security clearance is normally required, it is our policy that security clearance need not then be obtained. Some of the reasons underlying this policy are enumerated below:

(a) The Commission has confidence in the methods of selection followed by the National Research Council, which are in line with the experience accumulated by the Council over the last 25 years in handling National Research Council fellowships.

(b) To a large extent the work to be done under the fellowships will not involve access to restricted data, and the fellows will receive training in fields which are and will remain proper fields for unclassified work in which security clearance will not be necessary.

(c) The requirement for full background investigation and security clearance would place a heavy administrative burden on the fellowship program, and such a requirement appears inadvisable except where it will genuinely serve the interests of security.

As stated above, it is our policy that fellows are required to obtain Atomic Energy Commission security clearance only when they have access to restricted data or will work at classified projects. Although there is a small possibility of a fellow being barred from certain work after he has received his fellowship, we have, after careful consideration, decided that the interests of the fellowship program as a whole will best be served by this policy. We feel that in so doing we will obtain better qualified fellows and achieve fuller cooperation from the scientific community of this country than would be the case if we adopted the principle of requiring security clearance at a time when the follows will not have access to restricted data. Security investigations are costly and the cost of these investigations will be kept to a minimum when they are carried out only when the particular person is to have access to restricted data. It is probable that many of the fellows will always be engaged in unclassified work so that the cost of security investigations to them would well be an unnecessary expense to the Government if undertaken prior to the award of the fellowship. The Commission realizes that it is necessary to strike a satisfactory balance between the traditional ideals of scientific freedom which are esesntial to productive thought within the framework of democracy and the special requirements which must be observed in the Atomic Energy Commission program. As the program develops we will be constantly alert to any conditions which may indicate an alteration in this security policy.

We shall be glad to furnish you with further information on this subject if you desire.

Sincerely yours,

DAVID E. LILIENTHAL,
Chairman.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. HOEY. The substance of this letter is, that these scholarships are awarded through distinguished groups of educators made up from different institutions, and that they pay special attention to ability and character in recommending these students for scholarships, but they do not screen the students for loyalty and have no investigation made of the students who receive these awards.

I do not know how much character investigation is made, but this Communist who received the scholarship and is now working on his degree at the University of North Carolina was one of the sponsors for John Gates, one of the 12 indicted Communists in New York, when Gates made his visit to the university and sought to speak there. This Communist student is very officious in publicizing his doctrines in the campus newspaper.

I think Senators will be amazed to know that the money of the taxpayers is being used to provide scholarships for known Communists through the Atomic Energy Commission.

There is a suggestion in Dr. Lilienthal's letter that if the time comes when restricted data is to be considered, that before these students are given access to this data, that there might be some investigation as to their loyalty. It seems to me that the Senate Atomic Energy Committee could well look into this situation. I am having this letter published here for the information of the Senators and the public.

ARMY ENGINEERS VERSUS BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to an article in the current issue of the Saturday Evening Post, written by a former Governor of the State of Wyoming, Hon. Leslie A. Miller, who was the head of the committee under the Hoover Commission which investigated the reorganization of the Department of the Interior. Governor Miller is a man of great diligence and ability. The article which he has written for the Saturday Evening Post, Army engineers versus Reclamation Bureau: the Battle That Squanders Billions, is worthy of the attention of every Member of Congress who is concerned about the problem of saving expenditures of the Federal Government and eliminating the conflicts of overlapping bureaus.

I do not agree with everything Governor Miller said in this article. I believe, for example, that private utilities cannot provide the power the Nation needs if it is to develop industrially as it should. I believe that public power creates wealth and provides new sources of revenue for Government, Federal, State, and local. I believe that reclamation produces new wealth and new homes. I believe that flood control preserves property, which, of course, is the source of tax revenue. I believe that water is an essential resource of the arid land States which must be conserved and utilized. Nevertheless, these benefits should be attained without waste or extravagance. I think that can be done.

Governor Miller's article is a documented account of the competition between the Bureau of Reclamation, upon the one hand, and the Army engineers, upon the other. It is a story of the manner in which these two agencies have been seeking to carry on the same work. I think it is an ideal argument in favor of action under the proposed Reorganization Act, which is on the calendar of the Senate, to authorize the President to abolish overlapping and duplication in the executive establishment.

Yesterday, in the discussion of the Treasury and Post Office bill, I had occasion to refer to the fact that President Truman appointed former President Hoover to head the group which made this study. So we have before us a bill which is endorsed by the only living ex-President and by the present President of the United States. There is undoubtedly opportunity to save waste of public funds by proceeding with the reorganization of the Bureau of Reclamation and the Army engineers.

I should like to have the RECORD show that, as chairman of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, I have already taken the position that the committee should undertake and will undertake a thoroughgoing study of all the activities of the Bureau of Reclamation. I have notified the Secretary of the Interior and the officials of the Bureau of Reclamation that the work will be done. I may say that those who are interested in the proposals for valley authorities will also find in this article by Governor Miller a great deal of valuable information.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] for himself and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the pending bill, which I shall call up at a later time. I ask that the amendment be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to read into the RECORD a telegram which I received this morning concerning the pending bill. It is signed by Ralph E. Himstead, general secretary of the American Association of University Professors, 1101 Connecticut Avenue NW., Washington, D. C. The telegram reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 11, 1949.

Hon. OLIN D. JOHNSTON,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Reference pending District of Columbia sales-tax bill H. R. 3704. Section 18 of this bill defines educational institutions as those with student-teacher relationship. American Association of University Professors which publishes a quarterly magazine of higher education which is sent to its 33,000 members, urges that section 18 and related sections H. R. 3704 be amended to include as exempt from sales tax the publications of nonprofit educational associations. Such nonprofit educational associations with central offices in Washington, D. C., are the Association of American Colleges, the American Association of Junior Colleges, and the American Council on Education, of which latter organization the American Association of University Professors is a constituent member.

RALPH E. HIMSTEAD,
General Secretary, American Association of University Professors.

So, Mr. President, I have read this telegram in order that it may appear in the RECORD.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to preface the question by a brief statement, saying to the Senator from South Carolina that earlier today I have filed an amendment to cover the point brought out in the telegram the Senator from South Carolina has just read. My question is this: As I understand the parliamentary situation, if the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina prevails, there will be no opportunity to offer any amendments to the bill in its original form. I have not taken up this matter with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], who is in charge of the bill; but I wonder whether the Senator from South Carolina would be willing to let the amendment which is designed to take care of the situation regarding the publications of scientific institutions, and proposing the insertion of the word "scientific" in section 18, be taken up at this time, if the Senator from Rhode Island would be willing to accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair might suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that amendments offered to the original text, which the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina seeks to strike out, would be in order and would be voted upon prior to the vote on the substitute.

Mr. MCGRATH. Mr. President, do I correctly understand that the Senator from Massachusetts has offered such an amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has presented an amendment, to be printed and lie on the table. He has not actually offered it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, let us understand the situation. My amendment would not take care of the situation referred to in the telegram. I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts is ready to submit at this time an amendment which will clarify that situation.

Mr. MCGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield if I may do so without losing my rights to the floor.

Mr. MCGRATH. I think the committee would be happy to accept an amendment in the form or of the nature of the one I discussed yesterday with the Senator from Massachusetts. If the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Massachusetts will get together during the afternoon and will see whether they can agree on the amendment, I am quite sure there will be no objection on the part of the committee. There was no intention in respect to the original bill to exclude scientific and educational and religious organizations from the tax-exempt status they now enjoy. I understand that some of them feel that by inference, because of a failure of the bill to state a specific exemption for them, they would be included under a tax status. I myself do not believe the pending proposed legislation would affect them at all, or, if so, more than very, very little. At any rate, I would be willing to accept the amendment referred to.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes; if I may do so without prejudicing my rights to the floor.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Let me say, Mr. President, that I appreciate the statement the Senator from Rhode Island has made. I ask the Senator from South Carolina whether he will be willing to permit me to offer the amendment at this time. The amendment would simply add the word "scientific" after the word "religious" on page 8, in line 7; and on page 12, in line 8, after the word "newspapers", it would insert "and publications of semipublic institutions as defined in section 18"—which concerns the exact publications referred to in the telegram which has just been read by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have no objection, provided I do not lose my rights to the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator would not lose the floor, and the amendment can be offered after the Senator from South Carolina has concluded.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I noticed in the Evening Star of yesterday an editorial which did not speak very favorably of my friend the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS]. The editorial stated that he had made the statement that the minority report on this bill was more sensible and constructive than the majority report. The writer of the editorial made some comments in that connection, and I shall read some of the editorial at this time, in order that the Senate may understand the statements it makes:

> If such men as Senator FLANDERS are impressed by this minority report, it is high time that it be examined as to the facts. This minority report involves the substitute plan for raising local revenue that is favored by Senator JOHNSTON of South Carolina as an alternative to the sales tax.
> One of its major premises is this: "The per capita tax burden in the District is the lowest of all the 18 cities in the United States having populations of more than 500,000, and we are told that only the sales tax is left to be taxed for additional revenue. These facts make it clear that the claims made by the proponents of the sales tax are absurd."
> Where in the world did Senator JOHNSTON get any such statistics? The Census Bureau's comparison of the nine cities of the United States between 500,000 and 1,000,000 population ranks the District next to the highest—Boston—in per capita revenue. Boston's revenue per capita of $102.98 compares with Washington's $80.70. Pittsburgh, last of the list, is $27.71. One reason for Boston's high tax burden is a bonded debt of $129,000,000—compared with the absence of bonded debt in Washington. Somebody in the Senate should request Senator JOHNSTON to explan in detail the source of his figures on Washington's tax burden. His conclusions, in this respect, are absurd.

I wish to read into the RECORD some statistics coming from the United States Department of Commerce, Bureau of Census, under the heading "Government of City, Levies Per Capita." From the table there presented it will be found that for 1940, the figure for Washington was $35.71; for Baltimore, $40.14; Boston, $74.48; Buffalo, $64.29; Cleveland, $43.78; Milwaukee, $56.34; Pittsburgh, $59.78; San Francisco, $51.33; St. Louis, $35.34.

That is where I received my information.

I should also like to state that I am not surprised that the newspapers favor a sales tax. A mere glance at the bill would disclose that they would pay no tax at all. They would not pay any sales tax. They get out of paying a sales tax under the pending bill. It is my understanding that there was something in the bill on the subject when the hearings were first being held, but when introduced, in some way it was left out of the bill. I am preparing an amendment to make it so that the newspapers will probably pay their pro rata share of the taxes.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. May I inquire of the able Senator from South Carolina whether his amendment will be worded so as to require the Star to pay a 2-cent consumer sales tax on every dollar's worth of papers sold within the District of Columbia?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It is my intention to have it drawn in that manner.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator believe that the very highly esteemed Star, or any other newspaper, will be enthusiastic about a sales tax when it finds it will be required to pay it?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I doubt it very much.

Mr. NEELY. So do I.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. I may say for the benefit of the Senator, to save him some time in preparing his amendment, that any sale to newspapers, within the District of Columbia, would be subject to the tax, if the contract were made in the District of Columbia. If not, it is subjected to the tax at the place where the contract is made. That is the only constitutional way in which the tax can be imposed.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am glad to yield to the Senator for a question only.

Mr. HUNT. I should like to say to the Senator that since our conversation yesterday, I have noted carefully, on page 13, lines 4, 5, and 6, which reads as follows:

> Sales which a State would be without power to tax under the limitations of the Constitution of the United States.

I believe newspapers would almost necessarily be considered to be within interstate commerce, and I think under that clause they would be exempt. I believe the same thing is true in regard to radio.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Would that be true, even if they were published in a city and sold in the State where the city is located?

Mr. HUNT. No; that would not be interstate commerce; that would be intrastate.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That would be intrastate, and the tax could certainly be imposed. That is my interpretation. If published and sold within the District the newspapers could be taxed. Continuing, the editorial says:

> The minority report also makes the astonishing statement that a local income tax, touching everybody who lives here and increasing the rates, would yield $15,000,000 a year additional.

I do not know the basis of that statement. It is not in the report. If one will only pick up the report and read it, he will find that there is nothing in the report to the effect that the particular bill I have introduced would raise that much. There is in the District a source of revenue from personal incomes from which that amount could be obtained; there is no question in my mind about that.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Does not the Senator point out in the minority report a way by which the additional $15,000,000 could be obtained?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. We go into detail in regard to all the different income brackets.

Mr. NEELY. This question is based on the observation of the distinguished and beloved Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. McGrath). Regardless of what the constitutional law of the matter may be, does the Senator believe that the newspapers, which are enthusiastically urging that a 2-percent sales-tax curse be imposed upon the poverty-stricken and those in the slum districts who are on governmental relief, would raise any legal question about the right of Congress to level a tax of 2 cents on every dollar's worth of newspapers local publishers might sell here? Does not the Senator think that these newspaper proprietors are so patriotic and so devoted to this principle of taxation that, no matter what burden the tax might impose upon them, they would gladly pay it and greatly rejoice in the rare privilege of being among the victims of the sales-tax abomination?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. From the editorials which have been written and the positions taken by the newspapers, it looks as though they would certainly be glad to go along with the rest of the people, especially the poor people of the District, and pay a 2-percent sales tax.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. In his inquiry of the Senator from South Carolina, the Senator from West Virginia speaks about newspapers being willing to pay the tax on their sales. Does he mean the weekly subscription to a newspaper which is delivered to one's home? Is that what the Senator from West Virginia would want to have included in the bill?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President may I answer the Senator——

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I have no right to allow the Senator from West Virginia to answer the question unless by unanimous consent. I should probably lose the floor.

Mr. McGRATH. I ask unanimous consent that these questions will not affect the right of the Senator from South Carolina to the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should be glad to answer the Senator myself, if it is desired.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina can answer it himself.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should be glad to answer it myself.

Mr. McGRATH. I merely want to point out to Members of the Senate that this is a sales tax. It is a tax upon the buyer, not a tax upon the seller. So when the Senator talks about newspapers being taxed on the papers they sell, I think that probably would be all right with the newspapers, because they would not have to pay the tax. It is the man who buys the daily newspaper who has to pay the tax. It is a sales tax applied to the purchaser, not a sales tax applied to the seller. Of course the newspapers have to pay a sales tax upon any materials they buy for their printing establishments, such as paper, type, machinery, automobiles, and everything else that goes into the manufacturing of a newspaper within the District of Columbia, but it is not within our power constitutionally to make a tax apply to anything in interstate commerce.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, we realize that in this particular sales tax something is being done that probably does affect interstate commerce. People come here from other States and purchase something and carry it back. It is sold in the District. Then, if a person comes from a State in which there is a sales tax, and buys the article somewhere else, there is a provision in the bill in regard to that.

Mr. McGRATH. Yes, there is the use tax.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. There is the use tax. It is a matter of reciprocity between the States. If the States want reciprocity, would they not be willing to have reciprocity, letting the large newspapers with their millions of dollars pay their pro rata share of the taxes, also, the same as the little fellow who comes across the District line?

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. The use-tax provision contained in the bill has been determined to be a constitutional exercise of power as between the States. It is in the nature of a reciprocity agreement. There is nothing unconstitutional about it, and we should be very happy to extend it even beyond the confines of the bill, as the Senator would no doubt like to do if a constitutional way of doing it could be found.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I believe the Senator acknowledges, however, that the sales tax can certainly be charged within the District without any trouble. Many newspapers pay sales taxes.

Mr. McGRATH. Yes; we could charge a sales tax on newspapers, but we would not be taxing the newspapers; we would be taxing the home owner who buys the newspaper, because the tax is not applied to the seller. The tax is applied to the buyer.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I may ask the Senator, Who is to be taxed under the bill if not the home owners and the people who live outside the District and who buy clothing, for example, within the District? Everybody lives in a home and buys articles of necessity——

Mr. McGRATH. I should like to say to the Senator that his alternative for this proposal is one that would raise the rent of every rent-paying person in the District of Columbia far beyond any amount that he would conceivably pay under the pending sales-tax proposal. It would raise the rate of real-estate taxation within the District, and, under the District rent-control law, such an increase is automatically passed on to the tenant, and the proposal of the Senator for an increase in real-estate taxation would result in an increase of rent for every rent payer in the District of Columbia far beyond what the ordinary worker would pay in the course of a year if the sales tax were applied to the items which he purchases out of his salary in the course of a year.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am asking only that they be required to pay 2 percent on the $15 which they charge in the District. The cost of a subscription for 1 month is $1.20. Let them pay 2 percent of that.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. The Senator is saying, as I understand, that the subscriber to a newspaper on a yearly basis should be subjected to the tax.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The newspaper company ought to pay for whatever it sells, just as anyone else does.

Mr. McGRATH. I again want to say that nowhere in the bill are we applying a tax against the seller. It is applied only against the purchaser.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The merchant is held responsible for the collection of the tax on anything he sells. I am asking only that the newspaper company be held responsible also.

Mr. McGRATH. Does the Senator want to go on record as saying that he favors an amendment to the bill which would require every subscriber to a newspaper to pay the tax, provided the newspaper company itself would be the collector of the tax? Is that what the Senator is suggesting?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. When the amount of sales in the District is averaged up, let the company pay the sales tax.

I continue reading from the editorial:

> Where did he get those figures. Out of thin air? Let the Senator explain the source of his estimates to the Senate.
> Careful estimates of the yield of such an income tax indicate that the District would receive about $8,000,000 additional. But everybody, including Senator JOHNSTON, knows that Congress is not going to approve such a local income tax. It has failed of approval repeatedly in the House and it would be killed again today.

There was a close call in the House. They passed it, then killed it, and played around with it in two or three ways.

> But if it were approved, it would not produce the needed revenue. To help produce it, Senator JOHNSTON proposes adding another 12 percent to the 30-percent increase in real-estate taxes that has taken place in the past 2 years, and working both sides of the street, so to speak, he couples his erroneous statement to the Senate concerning Washington's low tax burden with the pious demand that the United States increase its annual payment by 100 percent—something that Congress would refuse to do.
> Senator JOHNSTON's tax plan would hit the "little fellow"—

I do not know how they explain that—> in the District harder than the majority tax plan. It is a plan based on highly questionable estimates of unknown source. It is full, in addition, of improbabilities. Before such men as Senator FLANDERS are ready to swallow it as "more sensible and constructive" than the majority plan, let them spend some time examining the estimates of yield, as well as the principles involved. Such examination may change their minds.

Mr. President, I notice the Star did not even mention another amendment which I have. I have an amendment which would increase the tax on wine, beer, and liquor 100 percent. The present tax on whisky is $1.10 a gallon. My amendment would make it $2.20 per gallon. How many persons who give big parties and buy high-priced whisky would know that they were paying approximately 45 cents more on a fifth of a gallon? The amendment which is at the desk will equalize things better than they are equalized today between Maryland, Virginia, and other States. I think we should take into consideration, when we are applying taxes, who is to pay the taxes. I am satisfied that not many children would have to pay the liquor tax. I am satisfied that even if a little less whisky should be sold it would probably be better for the Nation's Capital. The Star editorial did not mention this tax increase; it did not touch on it.

It will be noticed it did not even touch on the minority report, in which we ask that the Federal Government give more out of the Federal Treasury to the city of Washington. I think, with the high cost of living, the city is entitled to more than it received in 1930. While the expenses of the District have increased threefold, it will be found that we are today contributing only $12,000,000. In our report we ask that the Federal Government pay an additional sum. We believe that at least $7,000,000 more should be contributed to the District. The minority report was signed by four members of the committee, and in that report we said that $7,000,000 should be added to the amount now paid to the District. I am satisfied in my own mind that the minority report is the better report of the two. I realize that the city needs more revenue. I am not one who believes that the only source from which we can raise additional revenue is a sales tax—not so long as the income tax in the District of Columbia is as low as it is today.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana for a question.

Mr. LONG. What amount of money from income taxes is now going into the District treasury?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think it is in the neighborhood of $2,000,000. The return is ridiculously low at the present time.

(At this point Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina yielded to Mr. TYDINGS for the confirmation of certain routine nominations in the armed forces. At the request of Mr. TYDINGS, the proceeding was ordered to be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of the remarks of Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina.)

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I notice on the table I have in my hand that the estimated revenue available from taxes on individual incomes is $4,200,000. That is the figure under the pending bill. Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is what the pending bill will raise. The Senator will find that we are living in a very wealthy district.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HUNT. May I say to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina that that was included purposely and by design, for the simple reason that we wanted to relieve to the greatest possible extent those in the lower-income brackets? Most certainly an income tax starting with a thousand-dollar base would be a hardship on the low-income group.

Mr. LONG. What is the exemption?

Mr. HUNT. It is $4,000 in the bill we present.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, it is $4,000, but there are other personal exemptions on top of that. There is a personal exemption for the taxpayer, for his wife, children, or other dependents, above that, so that it might possibly run into an exemption of $7,000. I think an exemption of $500 is allowed for each dependent.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator tell me how much income tax is being collected in the District as a whole at the present time?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I do not have that at my finger tips.

Mr. McGRATH. The District income tax was $4,200,000 last year.

Mr. LONG. How did that compare with the income taxes collected by the Federal Government under the general Federal income tax?

Mr. McGRATH. We do not have figures on that, and they have no relationship with the revenue problems of the District.

I might say to the Senator that the proposal presently before the Senate will take a substantial number of persons off the income-tax roll in the smaller income-tax brackets, which is a principle for which I think we all stand. The personal exemption is $1,000 for a single person, and $2,000 for a married couple. The bill raises that, so that no person earning less than $4,000 will have to pay a District income tax. I am quite sure the Senator from South Carolina does not disagree with that principle. It will result in a reduction of revenue from income-tax sources of something in excess of $1,000,000. However, that money is made up by an addition to the unincorporated businesses tax, which will restore an equivalent amount of money. While it takes off the roll a great many taxpayers who are in the low-income brackets, it restores a great many others in the brackets above $4,000, who heretofore have been exempt by reason of the fact that they claim residence elsewhere, though not paying taxes elsewhere.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It is true that the exemption is raised, but there are very few poor people paying income taxes under the present law. They have been left out, when they are given their exemptions for their wives, children, and dependents, it will be found. A very small percentage is paying any taxes now, so far as income taxes are concerned.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. McGRATH. I am informed that by increasing the exemption to $4,000, we remove 45,000 persons from the income tax rolls, and I regard any family with an income of less than $4,000, in these days, as being included in the low-income tax brackets. I do not see how the Senator can conscientiously stand here and say that a bill which proposes to give relief to 45,000 persons takes hardly anyone off the rolls.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. My statement is that so far as the low incomes are concerned, so far as those drawing around $3,000 are concerned, they are already off the roll, under the present law. If a man has a wife and children to provide for, he is exempted. That is what I am talking about, not that the Senator's bill does not let some more out. The bill does not let poor people out, they are already out, but it lets the man next higher up out, it lets the man who is drawing a salary of $15,000 out. That is what it does, and that is where it hits. The bill does not help the lower-bracket people.

Mr. McGRATH. The record shows we are helping 45,000 taxpayers by taking them off the roll.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The bill helps 45,000, if the statement is correct, but it will be found it is in the salary brackets around $5,000, $6,000, $7,000, and $8,000, that people are being let out.

Mr. McGRATH. We cannot let out anyone drawing over $4,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The bill exempts those receiving under $4,000.

Mr. McGRATH. And their dependents.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. If a man has five children, add five times five.

Mr. McGRATH. Making $6,500.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. A $6,500 salary. With other deductions, it will probably run up to $8,000 or $9,000. So persons in those brackets are let out.

Mr. McGRATH. I thought the Senator was trying to make an appeal for those in the low-income tax brackets.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am looking after the person receiving from $3,500 down. Practically every one of them is paying no income tax today, if they have wives or children or dependents. With the gifts and other deductions, they are paying no tax. Anyone who knows anything about income taxes knows that. So the bill lets out only those drawing between perhaps $3,500 and $4,000, going on up to $8,000, and perhaps even the $10,000 man.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HUNT. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from South Carolina if he does not feel that the Federal Government is doing a very thorough job in taking care of those in the higher income brackets with reference to income taxes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I answer the Senator by saying that so far as the Federal Government is concerned, in its particular way of taxation, it is not taxing too much those in the higher brackets, in comparison with what it is taking from the lower bracket people. If I had anything to do with it, I would put a little more tax on those in the top brackets and let out more of those in the lower brackets. That is what I would do with the taxes, as they now stand, and it would raise the same amount of money.

Mr. HUNT. With reference to equalizing taxes as between the low income group and the higher income group, speaking specifically about the sales tax, does not the Senator understand that those in the higher income groups, under the proposed sales tax we have submitted, will pay 10, 50, and even 100 times greater amounts in sales taxes than will those in the lower income groups, and would do it in this way? If the Senator from South Carolina is in position to and wishes to purchase for Mrs. Johnston a mink coat for, let us say, $3,000, he will pay a $60 tax. But in my circumstances, if I care to purchase for Mrs. Hunt a $30 coat, I will have to pay a 60-cent tax. The Senator from South Carolina would pay 100 times more tax on his purchase than I would pay on mine. The same principle applies to practically everything purchased in the District of Columbia today by those in the higher income brackets as compared to purchases made by those in the lower income brackets.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator from Wyoming speaks of the purchase of a mink coat. Why pick out a mink coat? How many people buy mink coats in Washington? I should say very few. I doubt whether very many mink coats are bought in the city of Washington. Most of those who wish to have mink coats, that is the rich, go to New York, to the fur market, and pick out the furs for the making of the mink coats. Cheaper coats may be bought in great numbers here, but most persons who want to have mink coats go to New York, to the fur market, where the furs are all laid out, and pick out the furs, and then the coats when made are sent to Washington, and no sales tax on such coats would be paid in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HUNT. Let us apply the same equation to buying a second hand $500 car, as compared to a $4,000 Cadillac. Let us apply it to the buying of furniture. Let us apply it to the buying of an ordinary rug as compared to an oriental rug costing $2,500 or $3,000. This is not something which applies only to mink coats. It applies to practically everything those in the higher-income brackets buy and use daily. They are the people who would pay and pay and pay under the sales tax. The sales tax is the lowest tax that would be assessed against the little fellow. In the case of the sales tax he pays the tax directly in the first instance. But do not for a moment think that all the taxes are not passed on to the little fellow, the ultimate consumer—with one exception, and that is the tax on his home, if he owns it and lives in it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator spoke of Cadillac cars. He will not see many Cadillac cars on the street. He will see a great many little Fords pass by, as well as Chevrolets and Plymouths, most of which are bought, of course, by people in the lower-income brackets. It is true that many rich people ride in the same kind of cars poor people ride in. I am sorry to say that some of the poor are buying Cadillacs. They will have to pay a heavy sales tax on those cars if the bill is passed. We find occasionally a poor man riding in a Cadillac and a rich man riding in a Chevrolet or a Ford. That is something true of life, and we know it.

When we go through the stores we find that the great bulk of the articles exhibited for sale are the small articles, but of course they all add up to a great number. They result in a great volume of business being done by the merchants. The workingman is obliged to buy boots. Not many rich men buy boots. Boots are quite expensive, too. It will be found that a workingman works his way out of a shirt faster than does a man who sits in a chair all the time. The workingman, under this bill, will have to pay a tax on the shirt he buys and on the boots he buys.

Mr. President, we must look at this subject realistically. We must see for ourselves what the sales tax really does to the workingman. The bill provides that no income tax shall be paid by one whose income is below $4,000. But, as I said previously, many of those who receive between $3,000 and $4,000 are practically exempt from income tax now.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. I now have information which I think is pertinent for the RECORD at this point. Of the 100,000 income-tax returns filed and payable in the District of Columbia, 75,100 are returns for under $5,000. So it can readily be seen that three-quarters of the income-tax returns which are made in the District of Columbia, and paid, are made and paid by persons with incomes of $5,000 or less. That does not bear out what the Senator is trying to tell us.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. How many returns are made by persons with incomes under $3,000?

Mr. McGRATH. I do not have a break-down to show.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I mean with returns of under $3,000 gross. If the Senator will check the figures he will find that but very few people, perhaps some old bachelors and probably a few women who are not married, are paying income taxes on gross incomes under $3,000.

Mr. McGRATH. The Senator can figure that pretty well for himself. It is certainly clear that not a great percentage of the 75,000 out of 100,000 could be between the $4,000 and $5,000 class. We do not have the break-down for persons with incomes below $5,000. I may say, however, that there are only 18,000 taxpayers in the District in the class of those whose income is between $5,000 and $10,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Is that $5,000 net or gross, or what?

Mr. McGRATH. The taxable income.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Or, yes, the taxable income. The Senator is talking about something else now than what I am talking about.

Mr. McGRATH. The only records we can have are the records of the people who pay taxes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Oh, yes, many persons are paying on the basis of a taxable income of $3,000. But remember, we are speaking of what a person actually makes gross—his actual gross income.

Mr. McGRATH. Of course, his exemptions must be added to his taxable income in order to obtain his gross. We have no way of knowing what the gross is.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. What I am trying to say is that it is the little fellow who will pay the sales tax. I do not care to discuss this matter at any length. If any Senator desires to make reply I shall be glad to give up the floor at this time. Then I may speak on the subject later.

CONFIRMATIONS OF NOMINATIONS IN THE ARMY, NAVY, AND AIR FORCE

During the delivery of the speech of Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina:

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question only.

Mr. TYDINGS. In the event that I should ask for unanimous consent to have some routine nominations in the Army, Navy, and Air Force considered, with the understanding that the Senator shall not lose the floor and that the interruption shall appear at the end of his remarks, would the Senator, under those conditions, yield in order that I might make such a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I would not object.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that certain routine nominations in the Army, Navy, and Air Force be considered and confirmed. They have been unanimously reported favorably from the Committee on Armed Services. There has been not a single protest of any kind filed. I am sure this statement is entered into mentally by the present occupant of the chair, who was in the Armed Services Committee room this morning when the subject came up. I ask unanimous consent that, as in executive session, the nominations be confirmed, that the President be notified, and that the action shall not in any way jeopardize the right of the Senator from South Carolina to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BALDWIN in the chair). Unless there be objection, the report will be received, as in executive session, the nominations confirmed, and the President notified.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator from South Carolina for his courtesy in yielding to me.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia.

Mr. McGRATH. I am ready to proceed with the bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] for himself and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I call for a quorum.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I should like to discuss the amendment very briefly, if I may.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Wait a minute.

Mr. HUNT. I suggest that we have a quorum call, on the condition that I may retain the floor, and that I may speak when the call of the roll is completed. I should like to make a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the Senator from Wyoming will lose the floor if a roll call is had.

Mr. HUNT. I shall proceed with my remarks, then, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Wyoming. Does the Senator from South Carolina insist upon a quorum call?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I do not insist on it if the Senator from Wyoming wishes to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina withdraws his suggestion of the absence of a quorum. The Senator from Wyoming may proceed.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina on behalf of himself and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] would place approximately 25 percent of the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia on the residents of the other various States in the Union. At the present time the contribution on the part of the Federal Government is something like 12½ percent, or $12,000,000, $11,000,000 of that going into the general fund and $1,000,000 being for payment for the water used by the Federal Government.

Mr. President, I am of the opinion that the plan suggested by the committee of raising the additional revenue by a sales tax is the fairer way to approach this particular situation. In the first place, I think it is a progressive step for the District to get its finances into shape so that we shall not have this recurring problem at every session of Congress. I think our plan distributes the load of taxation so broadly that it gives everyone an opportunity to participate. Therefore the revenue is extensive, and in large amounts.

Our proposed sales tax would collect revenue for the District from the many thousands of people who visit the city of Washington every year as tourists or in connection with their business with the Government. I see no reason why those visitors should not contribute to the Government of the District of Columbia. While they are here they receive all the benefits. They have opportunities to use the facilities of the District. In all sales-tax States the contribution by those not permanent residents of the State is considerable. Those who visit the District as tourists or who are here as semipermanent guests would pay taxes on their hotel rooms, and would pay a tax on the full cost of any meal costing in excess of $1.50.

I think we should look backward a few days to the passage of a bill by this body in the amount of approximately $300,000,000 for Federal aid to schools throughout the United States. Basically we passed that measure for the primary purpose of assisting the schools in the States which are referred to as poor States, which cannot maintain a minimum school system. In other words, the richer States are helping the poorer States.

In the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] we are exactly reversing the situation, for of all the States in the Union, 40 of them have a lower per capita income than do the people residing in the District. The per capita income in the District is $1,624. One State has a per capita income of $659. Is it reasonable that we collect from the people of that State, with a per capita income only a third of the per capita income of the people of the District, taxes to carry on the government in this very rich District of Columbia?

There are 10 States with per capita income of less than $1,000, as compared with the per capita income of $1,624 in the District. There are eight States with per capita income of less than $900; three with less than $800; and, as I say, one State with a per capita income of $659.

I have been in the city of Washington for only about 4 months, but it is my observation and belief that the people of the District do not want to ride a "gravy train." I do not believe they want to become—if it is an exaggeration—wards of the rest of the States. I do not believe that the people of the District of Columbia are looking for charity. Furthermore, I am led to believe that a contribution such as this has no opportunity whatsoever of passage in the House of Representatives.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAIN in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. HUNT. I yield.

Mr. FLANDERS. In giving the income figures and stating that the people of this city do not want to ride the "gravy train," and telling us, as he does, that they have a very large per capita income, is not the Senator making a pretty good plea for an income tax?

Mr. HUNT. I think not. The bill provides an income tax for the District of Columbia, starting with the bracket of $4,000, exempting the lower-income brackets. I think most of the Federal employees have an income closely approximating, or perhaps exceeding, $4,000. To emphasize my point, let me say that the proposed sales tax is so designed as to collect taxes from the 240,000 people in the District who are working for the Government, and many of whom pay no tax at home. They pay no income tax in the District of Columbia because they claim to be domiciled in one of the States. However, every one of those 240,000 employees would pay a sales tax. I think the Senator will agree with me that it is proper that they should.

Mr. FLANDERS. I recognize that that is one way of equalization; but after all, the income-tax law can be so drawn that there is no duplication of taxes. The procedure toward that end was worked out 2 years ago by the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], who now occupies the chair as Presiding Officer. I am still of the mind that the Senator from Wyoming has made an excellent plea for levying an income tax upon the citizens of this city to pay for the support of their government from income which makes the District of Columbia one of the highest-income cities in the United States.

Mr. HUNT. I believe the Senator has overlooked a provision in the bill which exempts a person living in the District of Columbia from paying a District income tax provided he pays an income tax in his own State. That is, he is relieved of an equal amount of payment, to be credited against the District tax. If the District tax is in excess of what he pays in his home State, he will pay the difference in the District.

Mr. FLANDERS. I understand that provision. It was a provision worked out by the junior Senator from Washington 2 years ago. It is so good that I hope it will be extended so that an income tax will carry more of the burden of the expenses of this city.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HUNT. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to ask him a series of questions relating to the comparison between the proposed sales tax for the District of Columbia, as included in the pending measure, and the sales tax now in existence for the State of Maryland, in those areas which adjoin the District of Columbia on two sides. Is the Senator able to state for the record the comparison between the Maryland sales tax and the proposed sales tax for the District of Columbia under the pending measure?

Mr. HUNT. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Florida that in writing the District of Columbia sales-tax provision we follow rather explicitly the existing sales tax in Maryland. With few exceptions the tax measure which we are presenting is very similar to the sales-tax law in Maryland. We went so far as to invite the sales-tax officials of the State of Maryland to sit with us and advise us in writing the bill. We did that so as to cause as little conflict and difficulty as possible on the borderline between Maryland and the District, and also having in mind all the while Virginia on the other side, which has no sales tax. So I should say that our bill, with minor differences, is very much like the Maryland law.

Mr. HOLLAND. Do I correctly understand the Senator, then, to this effect: That the proposed sales tax for the District of Columbia, as incorporated in the measure now pending, is almost identical, so far as the amount of tax levied on individual sales is concerned, with the sales tax now in existence for the State of Maryland?

Mr. HUNT. I should say, "Yes," with minor changes which are hardly worth going into.

Mr. HOLLAND. In drafting the proposed sales-tax law for the District of Columbia, as I understand, the subcommitte headed by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming was endeavoring to reduce the differences and possible friction, possible competitive advantages which might result as between the adjoining areas of Maryland and the area of the District of Columbia, to a minimum by keeping the proposed measure as nearly as possible identical with the Maryland sales tax now in existence.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I would say to the Senator from Florida that that objective was constantly kept in mind.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield for a further question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAIN in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HUNT. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. I note that the tax proposed in this measure on hard liquors or distilled beverages would be 50 percent higher than the tax now in existence, if I correctly understand the facts—in other words, the tax would be increased from 50 cents to 75 cents. However, I note that even at 75 cents, the District of Columbia tax on hard liquors would still be greatly below the corresponding taxes now being levied in the adjoining areas of Maryland.

So, Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Wyoming what was the reason for not proposing to raise the tax on hard liquors sold in the District of Columbia sufficiently to make it approximately equal to that levied in the adjoining areas of Maryland.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, the question is a very proper one, and I shall try to answer it to the best of my ability.

The District of Columbia—placed, as it is, with Maryland on one side and Virginia on the other side—has the difficult problem of fixing the tax at such a point that the sales price of such liquors to consumers would not be greatly above or greatly below the sales price in Maryland or Virginia. We tried to strike more or less of a happy medium.

I should also like to say to the distinguished Senator that the officials of the District of Columbia suggested a 60 cent increase, instead of a 50 percent increase in the tax per gallon on spirituous liquors. However, it was necessary, so I am told, for the House committee to agree to reduce the increase in the tax to 50 percent, in order to secure the passage of the bill in the House of Representatives.

I may say to the distinguished Senator that so far as I personally am concerned, I should like to see the tax made a great deal higher. The fact of the matter is that if I could tax that traffic out of existence, I should like to do so. However, that cannot be done, for under such circumstances we possibly would see a return to the situation existing in the twenties. The officials of Washington, D. C., tell us that they have some fear that even now some bootlegging is going on in the District of Columbia, and that if we were to raise the price to the consumer too high—as the Senator knows, a tax of $9 a gallon on liquor is now imposed by the Federal Government—the result might be to produce a situation somewhat similar to that existing in the twenties.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HUNT. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Then do I correctly understand that the reason for not proposing to increase by more than 50 percent the tax levied on hard liquor—as provided in this measure—was to avoid bringing about a condition under which there would be such a great difference between the price of such liquors when sold in the District of Columbia and the price when sold in the State of Virginia, across the river, that those who wished to buy spirituous beverages would be encouraged to go to Virginia to purchase them?

Mr. HUNT. That argument was presented to us. However, my personal reaction to that statement was that it would take a little more than the difference which would exist after the passage of this measure to persuade anyone to go to Virginia to buy liquor, because the transportation cost to such a person would be more than the difference in the price of liquor.

Three primary reasons were advanced to us: First, to try to keep the tax and resultant price on liquors sold in the District of Columbia between the price of such liquors in Maryland and the price in Virginia; second, to attempt to avoid imposing a tax which would place the price of such liquors so high that there would be to some extend a return of bootlegging; and, third, to write a bill which we thought would pass.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HUNT. I am glad to yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I believe Virginia has State-government control of the sale of liquor, does it not?

Mr. HUNT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. At the present time, is not the State of Virginia penalized because liquor is sold in the city of Washington at prices below the prices which must be paid in Virginia, and it is necessary for the Virginia officials to keep their tax on liquor at such a level that the price of liquor sold in Virginia is fairly close to the price of liquor sold in the city of Washington?

Mr. HUNT. I think the Senator from South Carolina is quite correct. Mr. President, I am quite willing to admit that that is the situation, and to agree with the Senator from South Carolina that the tax on liquor sold in the city of Washington has been very low.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should also like to ask a further question, if the Senator will yield once more.

Mr. HUNT. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Assuming that we were to double the present tax, let us say, and make the price $2.20—which is what my amendment calls for—does not the Senator from Wyoming believe that the Virginia officials who have control of the sale of liquor in Virginia could adjust the tax they impose on liquor sold in the State of Virginia in such a way that the only result would be that Virginia would make just a little more than it now does from taxes on whiskey sold in Virginia?

Mr. HUNT. I agree with the Senator; and I say to him that, after we defeat his first amendment, if he wishes to submit an amendment to increase that tax, possibly we could go along with him.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is the next amendment I shall submit.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me further?

Mr. HUNT. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Pursuing the course of questioning I was following before the Senator from South Carolina asked his series of questions, let me ask whether I correctly understand that it is the opinion of the Senator from Wyoming that the level of hard liquor taxes prescribed in this measure is as high as can safely be prescribed without bringing about an unsavory condition in the city of Washington, as contrasted either with conditions in the State of Virginia, on the one hand, or conditions in the State of Maryland, on the other hand.

Mr. HUNT. That is exactly the situation.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HUNT. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. With reference to the cigarette tax recommended in the pending measure, am I correct in my understanding that at the present time, under the tax structure presently existing in the District of Columbia, there is no tax on cigarettes?

Mr. HUNT. That is correct. There is no tax at all on cigarettes, under the present District of Columbia tax structure.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is it correct that the pending measure will, in effect, place a 1-cent tax on the ordinary package of cigarettes sold in the District of Columbia?

Mr. HUNT. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. Having in mind that many States have successfully imposed taxes ranging as high as 3 cents, and in some instances 4 cents, on the ordinary package of cigarettes, would the Senator from Wyoming mind stating for the record why in his opinion and in the opinion of the committee it would be unwise to provide a tax on cigarettes sold in the District of Columbia higher than the 1-cent tax recommended in the pending measure?

Mr. HUNT. I shall be glad to do so. In the committee it was developed—and I think the Senator from Florida will agree with me—that cigarette smoking is now almost a universal habit. There seems to be no income group whose income is too low to prevent the members of that group from smoking cigarettes. So the committee on more than one occasion said that we did not like to prescribe a heavier tax on cigarettes, because there again we would be directing a tax at the low-income group.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. HUNT. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, to conclude my own questions—and I apologize for the number and length of them——

Mr. HUNT. That is quite all right; I have been glad to have the Senator from Florida ask them.

Mr. HOLLAND. Would the Senator from Wyoming mind stating for the record and for the information of the Senate the situation in Maryland and Virginia in regard to cigarette taxes?

Mr. HUNT. I shall try to obtain that information, for I am not entirely sure about the situation in that respect. I shall have to obtain that information for the Senator.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield, or is he yielding the floor?

Mr. HUNT. I shall be glad to yield in a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming has yielded to the Senator from Florida for a question.

Mr. HUNT. I cannot answer the question of the Senator. In certain States, as the Senator knows, the tax on cigarettes is as high as 4 cents; in others, 3. Cities within my own State have a 2-cent tax. I regret I am unable to tell the Senator what the Maryland tax is, or what it is in Virginia. Possibly another Senator on the floor may be able to answer the question.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator procure that information and place it in the RECORD prior to the conclusion of the debate?

Mr. HUNT. I shall be glad to.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for one more comment, I should like to say that I am impressed with the fact that the Senator and his committee have done a real service, in that they have approached the subject matter from the standpoint not only of offering a proposed sales tax—and I think the reasons for which they recommend that tax are impressive—but they have also gone into other fields of taxation, such as the increased beverage tax mentioned, the imposing of a tax on cigarettes, the increase in the millage on real estate, the levying of a tax on lodgings, and various other changes of existing taxation, which it seems to me shows that this is a bona fide effort fairly to apportion the burden of the needed additional taxation among people of all types and conditions, and of all brackets of revenue.

I should like at this time, if I may, to commend the distinguished Senator and his committee upon what I think has been an exceedingly fair effort to work out a very difficult problem.

Mr. HUNT. I thank the Senator from Florida. In reply to a question asked a while ago by the Senator, I should like to say we have no information to the effect that either Maryland or Virginia has a cigarette tax.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HUNT. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. With regard to the liquor tax, the Senator mentioned that Maryland would have a higher liquor tax than the District, in the event the pending bill should be passed, but that the Virginia tax, as I understand from the Senator's statement, would be lower. However, is it not true that in Virginia there is alcoholic beverage control, under which a man must register and may purchase only a certain quantity of liquor during the year? Would that mean in effect that, even if the liquor tax in the District were higher than in Virginia, nevertheless there would not be in all probability much traffic made up of citizens of the District going over to Virginia to buy liquor?

Mr. HUNT. I may say to the Senator that, in my experience with sales tax matters, which extends now over some 14 years, people hardly go across the street in order to evade a sales tax. As to the Senator's conclusion that the price in either Maryland or Virginia would have a great bearing on the price in the District, I think the Senator is quite right. I do not believe it would. However, the evidence before the committee indicated that that might be the case.

Mr. LONG. With regard to liquor, it would seem to me that a person might leave the District and go to some State nearby, as for example Virginia, or possibly Maryland, if he wanted to buy a large quantity of liquor, but if he wanted to buy only a small quantity—and I understand most liquor probably is purchased in limited quantities—I doubt whether he would go anywhere outside the District to buy it.

Mr. HUNT. I should like to say for the information of the Senator from Florida and also for the information of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, that the 2-percent sales tax will also apply in addition to the increased revenue taxes on liquor.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUNT. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if he will permit me at this time to offer an amendment, which I understood from what the Senator from Rhode Island said this morning, the committee would accept. If the Senator will permit, I should like to offer the amendment now, because I have a committee meeting at 2 o'clock.

The amendment, which is on the desk, is offered to page 8, line 7, where it is proposed, after the comma following the word "religious", to insert "scientific," and on page 12, line 8, after the word "newspapers," where it is proposed to insert "and publications of semipublic institutions as defined in section 18."

I took the matter up with the Senator from Rhode Island yesterday. He stated on the floor this morning he had no objection. The junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON] had intended to offer a similar amendment, in a slightly different form, and he desires to join with me in offering my amendment. I may ask the Senator from Wyoming whether he will be courteous enough to permit me to offer the amendment, as it is in order, I understand, and whether he will accept it.

Mr. HUNT. I have no objection.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 7, after the comma following the word "religious", it is proposed to insert "scientific"; and on page 12, line 8, after the word "newspapers", it is proposed to insert "and publications of semipublic institutions as defined in section 18."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] for himself and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I thank the Senator from Wyoming for his courtesy.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, if I may inquire of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, how long does he intend to speak?

Mr. McCLELLAN. About 30 minutes.

Mr. HUNT. I am pleased to yield the floor at this time to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, am I correct in my understanding that I now have the floor in my own right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

TRENDS AND POLICIES AND COSTS OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, there is a deep and growing concern among the intelligent citizenship of this Nation with respect to present-day trends and policies of Government. Many people entertain grave doubts as to whether the ship of state is being steered on a safe and sane course. Others believe we have already embarked in a direction that if followed will lead to disaster.

Some of the extreme fears expressed may not be justified, but general apprehension persists, and it has reached such proportions that it is sufficient to arrest the attention of the administration and engage the interest and consideration of the Congress. This anxiety in the hearts and minds of so many of our people should cause us to proceed with unusual caution. We should pause, Mr. President, to reexamine many proposals that have been recommended and submitted to us before enacting them into law. Profound deliberation, sober judgment, and wise decisions are required if the Congress is to protect and serve the best interest and welfare of this Nation in this critical period.

The impact and aftermath of the most violent and destructive war in human experience have made uncertain and insecure the social, political, and economic structure of governments throughout the world. Many have already fallen. Others are in critical danger of either revolution or complete collapse. The very destiny of civilization seems to be swaying in the balance.

To say that world affairs are precarious may well be an understatement. No one can seriously contend that the assertion is an unwarranted exaggeration. It would border on the ironical to maintain that this is an era of peace. The forces of evil, of aggression, of totalitarian slavery are still arrayed in all their might and power against the forces of righteousness, of human liberty, and freedom.

The conflict between these inimical ideologies did not abate with the cessation of hostilities on VJ-day. Instead there has been simply a shifting of leadership and a reforming of lines with new, comprehensive, and calculated plans of conquest and destruction. Those plans do not lie dormant. They are fully activated and in process of being executed by pressure, threats, and subversive fifth-column assaults.

Yes, more, Mr. President, those plans and iniquitous designs are presently being carried out by war, both hot and cold.

In some countries the hordes of communism are now marching in blood and death to new frontiers. In other parts of the world furtive preparations are under way for further advances whenever the time may be propitious for invasion, the intensification of the present cold war, or the initiation of a hot one.

This, Mr. President, is the unhappy situation, the realistic condition, that confronts humanity, all peoples who abhor war, and who long for and pray for peace.

The imposing might of our military power and its potential, plus our tremendous economic strength and resources, are unquestionably the major factors that have been a restraining influence upon the dictators, who intend by force and subjugation to rule the world. Except for this presently insurmountable barrier, tyrannical communism could spread almost at will and unimpeded until it encompassed the globe.

That is the exalted and preeminent position we as a nation now occupy. This position and the frustration and instability of and dangers to human freedom have thrust upon the United States unprecedented responsibilities of leadership accompanied by staggering financial burdens. Those obligations involve not only our own enlightened self-interest, but they extend to a dependent and to an otherwise defenseless world. They present an inescapable challenge to the ingenuity of our statesmanship and resourcefulness.

This challenge cannot be successfully met by the ordinary functioning of our Government nor by the normal and usual peacetime duties of citizenship and tax contributions of our people. To discharge these responsibilities and be prepared for any eventuality, we must keep our strength mobilized and continuously develop and increase it. Our own security and world peace depend upon our prestige, capacity, and ability to prevent another world war. This transcends in importance all other objectives. There are many goals in our domestic affairs for which we should strive. Some are important and needed; others may be highly desirable. But if we fail to achieve that which is of paramount importance, the others cannot be attained.

It is, therefore, not only advisable, but it is imperative that we guard against extravagance and refrain from launching extensive new and costly social and other programs that will add billions of dollars annually to the operating cost of our Government. We can neither win the cold war nor prevent another hot one if we are unwilling or fail to make the sacrifices essential to the maintaining of a sound and vigorous economy. Overexpansion of taxing and spending for many things that we can do without can quickly lead to national insolvency. Any serious impairment of our fiscal policies will correspondingly weaken our military powers. We cannot overburden and shackle our free-enterprise economy with exorbitant and confiscatory taxes and expect it to survive. By destroying our free-enterprise system, we shall make certain that many of our other cherished freedoms will perish with it.

The cost of maintaining our military establishment at a strength required for our defense and security; the providing of minimum financial assistance to aid in the economic recovery of allied governments and peoples; the meeting of heavy fixed charges which war imposed upon us; and the tremendously swollen current operating costs of our Government place a terrific strain upon our entire economy.

The present budget, which we are finding it impossible to reduce, will exceed anticipated revenues for the next fiscal year—revenues that are produced by a tax rate that cannot be substantially increased without risking diminishing returns. The earnings of all business enterprise, of professions, and the salaries and wages of employees are all materially affected by the tax-take of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, I venture to assert that never before in the history of our Nation have the responsibilities of the Congress been greater, more grave, and more complex than they are now. We are confronted with conditions, and called upon to make decisions on vital issues before us that are fraught with unpredictable consequences for the future. With the heaviest peacetime expenditures and the highest rate of taxation, and with the national income concededly on the decline, we are asked at this session of Congress to enact a multitude of laws that would create new obligations of government for which annual appropriations would have to be made.

Among the proposals now pending in the Congress and sponsored by the present administration are these: First, to increase old-age and survivors insurance benefits to the present beneficiaries of this program, and to further expand the coverage to include some twenty to twenty-five millions of our people who are not now eligible for this assistance under existing law; second, to expand unemployment compensation to include many millions not now eligible and to substantially increase the payments thereof; third, to provide free professional treatment, medical services, and hospitalization to 80 to 85 percent of the American people under a compulsory national health insurance program; fourth, to subsidize the food bill of all consumers throughout the Nation. I refer to the proposed farm program. That is exactly what it does; fifth, to subsidize housing for millions of our citizens in the lower-income brackets; sixth, to pour out millions, which would soon run into billions, in various kinds of grants in aid to States and other political subdivisions and to institutions and agencies for many specific purposes; seventh, to further substantially raise the salaries of all of the present more than 2,000,000 Federal employees and to add additional hundreds of thousands to the Federal pay roll.

In addition to this, Mr. President, we are requested and expected to spend some eight to ten billion dollars annually abroad to aid and assist in the economic recovery of other countries. We will also be asked to spend billions for the rearmament of Europe in implementation of the North Atlantic Pact. We will likely be asked, Mr. President, to make other pacts and many, many other expenditures to implement them.

There are an undetermined number of other bills now pending in the Congress for increasing pensions, the creation of new functions of government, and for the expansion of existing governmental services, all of which will further increase expenditures. Many of these may not have administration approval, but some of them have considerable support, and will likely be enacted into law.

Mr. President, it would be impossible to estimate accurately the cost of all those measures. But it is conceded that just one—the compulsory health insurance bill—will cost from six to ten billions of dollars annually. It is no exaggeration to say that if this ambitious program or a substantial part of it is enacted into law, the operating cost of the Federal Government within the next 5 years will soar to a new peacetime high of some twenty to twenty-five billion dollars annually in excess of the forty-two billions we are now spending. That means, Mr. President, a Federal budget of approximately sixty-five billion dollars annually. If that budget is to be kept in balance, an equal amount in additional taxes will have to be taken out of the earnings of the American people.

Can this be done? Where is this new tax money coming from? Can the American people pay it out of present or expected earnings? If this additional cost—this exorbitant increase in Federal expenditures—is imposed on the American people, how will this affect our standard of living? Will it be higher, remain the same, or be lowered?

Mr. President, those are not irrelevant questions. Should we not try to know their answer before we plunge? Or do we propose to leap blindly? If it is conceded that such an expansion of governmental functions and services and their cost cannot be provided by even a much larger tax take out of the incomes of our citizens, but will compel deficit financing, should we borrow money and pile more debt onto our present $252,000,000,000 national obligation, to be paid out of the sweat, toil, and deprivations of millions of Americans yet unborn? I believe the pursuit of such a policy would prove destructive rather than constructive; that it would weaken and not strengthen our economy; that it would not increase but would impair our military power and its potentialities.

Mr. President, I am not quarreling with all these proposals. I am unalterably opposed to some of them. The objectives of others may well be meritorious and offer goals desirable of attainment. But I do doubt and seriously question the wisdom of the enactment of all or any of these proposed measures, which would create new functions of government, further expand governmental services, add more thousands of employees to already swollen Federal pay rolls, and thus impose either higher taxes or more debt, and probably both, on the already tax-burdened and debt-ridden American people.

How do the sponsors of this legislation and the Administration propose to finance this great expansion program? First, the President has recommended that this Congress raise general income and corporate tax rates so as to produce an additional $4,000,000,000 in revenues annually. Just how much higher present rates would have to be increased to produce $4,000,000,000 more, no one can accurately foretell. With a declining national income, the raising of taxes might continue to press the national income downward, so no one can predict just how high we would have to raise the present tax rates to produce an additional $4,000,000,000 in revenue.

Next, it is proposed that we take out of pay rolls of the American producers and earners an additional 7 cents to 10 cents on each dollar over and above the approximately 5 cents pay-roll tax now collected. These increased pay-roll taxes are expected to produce from $12,500,000,000 to $15,000,000,000 annually. This, with a $4,000,000,000 increase in general revenues, will amount to only about $18 or $19 billion, leaving a deficit of several billion dollars each year to be financed out of borrowed money, and by constantly increasing the national debt proportionately.

Mr. President, this is of great concern to every intelligent American citizen. Every laborer, every salary and wage earner, every consumer, and all business enterprises, can be, and in my judgment will be, seriously and adversely affected if our Government embarks on such an ill-advised taxing, spending, and debt-enlargement policy and program.

Let no laboring man or wage earner, consumer, or anyone else, be under any illusion that this is a simple "soak the rich" program. The pay-roll tax contributed by the employer will be paid indirectly by the consumer of its products and the user of its services. That tax will be added to the sale price of goods and services. In the end, "Jones pays the freight." And for all practical purposes, "Jones" will be those who are now being promised "security" and something for nothing by a beneficent and paternalistic government.

Mr. President, in 1935 we enacted the social security law, and provided extremely modest old-age and survivors insurance. Subsequently, the benefits were slightly but inadequately increased. We financed this program by pay-roll taxes—1 cent on the dollar each from employer and employee. We also provided in that law for unemployment compensation, also financed by a pay-roll tax. When this new tax and spending program was proposed, I became curious to know the present status of these and other trust funds that our government had collected. With the aid of the professional staff of the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the executive departments, and the cooperation of the Treasury and agency chiefs administering these funds, I have assembled the data and prepared tables giving the present status of these accounts. This information, I believe, will be of interest to Members of Congress and to the public generally. At the conclusion of my remarks I shall request that these tables be printed in the RECORD. I shall give here only a general summary of some of them.

Mr. President, in these tables I have covered the following trust funds: The Federal old-age and survivors insurance, unemployment trust funds, railroad retirement funds; veterans' life insurance funds, Federal retirement funds, supplemental trust acounts, Federal deposit insurance funds, and five other special trust accounts.

Mr. President, for these accounts the Federal Government up to June 30, 1948, had collected a total from all sources of $47,556,062,172. Total expenditures out of these funds up to June 30, 1948, are $12,049,429,592.

Receipts and expenditures for those purposes projected to June 30, 1949, will bring the total receipts to $52,962,060,172 and total expenditures to $14,505,429,592 respectively. So, as of June 30, 1949, there will be a credit balance in all these trust accounts in the amount of $38,456,630,580. Of this total, Mr. President, only $224,873,253 will be cash on hand. The balance in these accounts of $38,231,757,327 is and will have been invested in Government securities, as shown by "summary of investments," which appears in the table.

These investments, Mr. President, are a part of the present national debt. All of this money was collected by the Federal Government in the nature of taxes or fees for the specific purposes for which such trust funds were established. But, Mr. President, the facts are that $38,000,000,000 plus of these special funds have actually been expended for other purposes; that is, for general operating expenses of the Government and not for the purpose for which they were collected.

It is true that the Government has deposited, in trust, its bonds and certificates of indebtedness for the respective amounts of these special funds, which it has expended for other purposes. Such bonds and certificates of indebtedness, however, Mr. President, will have to be redeemed by the Federal Government from general taxes collected from the American people. That is, Mr. President, over $38,000,000,000 that have been paid into the United States Treasury from pay-roll taxes and other sources into these accounts will have to be paid again by general taxes collected from the public.

As a further illustration, I call specific attention to the Federal old-age and survivors insurance account, which has been running from August 14, 1935, when the Social Security Act became effective. In this account the Federal Government has collected and will have collected by June 30, 1949, in pay-roll taxes $13,028,169,014. With receipts from other sources, and transfers of accounts and interest on investments, total receipts from the Treasury for old-age pensions and survivors insurance will amount to $14,285,550,294 by June 30, 1949. Total expenditures out of this fund in payment of old-age pensions and survivors insurance by June 30, 1949 will amount to only $2,967,869,136, leaving a book balance in the old-age and survivors insurance account of $11,317,681,158 as of June 30 next. Of this amount only $109,901,901 will be in cash. The remainder of $11,207,779,257 will be in Government securities.

Mr. President, I call specific attention to the status of this old-age and survivors pension fund to emphasize that in reality we have levied and collected pay-roll taxes to provide a pension fund or an insurance fund for the old citizens of our Nation, but we are spending this money for other purposes.

Where has this money gone? All of it, except about $110,000,000, or approximately $11,000,000,000 of it, has gone to defray the general expense of the Government. In other words, Mr. President, it has been expended for an entirely different purpose from that for which it was levied and collected.

I point out to my colleagues that there has been five times as much collected as has been expended. Yet we are asked to raise these pay-roll taxes higher, and give the program a broader coverage. But according to past practices and customs, if we raise the taxes and expand the coverage and levy a pay-roll tax to meet that expense, we will simply be raising more money to be placed into the General Treasury for expenditure for general operating expenses of the Government.

Mr. President, it occurs to me that as a matter of simple justice to the old people of this Nation, to whom we owe an obligation, we should increase old-age pensions sufficiently to provide at least a decent minimum standard of living before we proceed to impose additional pay-roll taxes for other purposes and raise other billions that will be used and expended for the general expenses of the Government rather than for the purpose for which they will be collected.

Mr. President, the unemployment trust fund, which was also authorized by the Social Security Act of August 14, 1935, is in substantially the same status as the old-age and survivors insurance fund. As of June 30, 1949, $14,383,734,512, including interest, will have been collected. Total expenditures will be $6,123,705,845. There will be only $24,630,044 in cash in this account. The balance of $8,760,028,667 will be represented by Government securities, which means that these special unemployment taxes have been spent for other purposes.

Mr. President, I shall not take time specifically to comment on other trust accounts shown in these tables. I wanted to place them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD because I believe the Congress and the people should be kept informed about them. I think these tables provide a very interesting study and are quite revealing. In the light of the facts and the information they contain and in view of pending measures in the Congress to create new and additional trust funds for new and expanded governmental services, I believe the Congress should well consider them before it acts.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I wish to make these observations: New and expanded Government services, increased spending, and higher taxes do not pave the road to our economic security. Instead, Mr. President, such a course can well lead to depression, to economic distress, and to the collapse of our free-enterprise system.

It is not the responsibility of the Federal Government to guarantee to every individual citizen in this Nation economic prosperity and security. In my judgment, if our Government undertakes such a program, it will assume obligations beyond its ability to fulfill. To ever strive for economic progress and social gains is commendable.

Progress and gains can be made in the future and our standard of living made higher if we will simply adhere to and not abandon the basic fundamentals of industry and thrift that served to make our economy the most prosperous and our standard of living the highest that any people have ever attained. But socialism and state paternalism in America will operate here just as it has in all other countries that have tried it, and with the same results. It will promise much and give but little; it will provide temporary benefits, but they will not be of enduring value; it will stimulate false hope in our people, who will later be disillusioned. Mr. President, socialism and state paternalism is not the read to economic security and prosperity. Instead, it is the broad highway to insolvency and austerity. Let us take warning from the plight of Great Britain and other nations that have turned from the right and gone to the left. Let us assume only such obligations as we can keep, and make such social gains as we can afford and pay for. That, Mr. President, is the safe and sane policy our Government should pursue.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the tables to which I have referred be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Amounts equal to 100 percent of employment taxes are appropriated to fund.

[2] Certain benefits are paid from Federal old-age to dependents of World War II veterans. Transfers represent appropriations from general fund to reimburse Federal old-age.

[3] Received from States and Railroad Retirement Board for credit to State unemployment funds and railroad unemployment insurance account within unemployment trust fund.

[4] Originally there was no separate railroad unemployment insurance account. When one was established in 1938, railroad funds in State accounts were transferred to the railroad unemployment insurance account.

[5] When railroad unemployment system was established in 1938, Treasury was authorized to advance $25,000,000 to railroad account for benefit payments.

[6] A fixed proportion of charges to railroads to support the railroad unemployment insurance system are deposited in the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Administration fund. At June 30 of each year all amounts in Administration fund in excess of $6,000,000 are required to be transferred to railroad unemployment insurance account.

[7] Appropriations from general fund to support railroad retirement system. Appropriations are usually in line with receipts, but the appropriation is made from general fund.

[8] Premiums are paid by insured to cover cost of insuring ordinary risks.

[9] General fund appropriations are authorized to cover extra hazards of military service.

[10] At the present deduction rate is 6 percent of gross pay. When an employee has rendered service for which he may receive credit toward retirement but deductions from pay were not made at time service was rendered, he may get full credit for the service by paying the amount due the fund.

[11] Employees may make voluntary deposits into the retirement fund and thereby purchase additional annuities.

[12] System is supported in part by contributions from Government in form of annual appropriations.

[13] Fund has been invested in part in marketables and in part in specials. Sales of marketables may result in profit.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 679. An act to authorize the admission of Mrs. Julia Balint to the United States; and

H. R. 2360. An act for the relief of Theodore Papachristopoulos.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 42) granting the consent and approval of Congress to an interstate compact relating to the better utilization of the fisheries (marine, shell, and anadromous) of the Gulf coast and creating the Gulf States Marine Fisheries Commission.

UNIFICATION OF THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, before I proceed with my discussion of the sales-tax problem, I wish to make a very brief statement for the record concerning my position on the so-called unification bill which was voted upon in the Armed Services Committee this morning. I shall speak at some length on the entire problem when the bill is before the Senate for debate.

I voted against reporting the bill favorably to the Senate this morning. I cast the only negative vote. There are many parts of the new so-called unification bill which have great merit, particularly the part of the new bill which embodies former President Hoover's recommendations in regard to accounting. Those provisions have my complete endorsement. I propose, in the substitute bill which will be introduced at an appropriate time, to incorporate what I consider to be the good features of the bill which was reported from the committee this morning, including the recommendations of former President Hoover. I propose to incorporate in the substitute bill the recommendations of some other outstanding authorities in this country who recognize the need for a true unification bill.

But, as I stated in the committee this morning, Mr. President, I could not vote for the so-called Tydings bill, because in my judgment the bill does not, to the degree that it should, take advantage of what I think is not only our opportunity, but our duty, really to unify those services from top to bottom and make perfectly clear once and for all that the American people are a little weary of jurisdictional disputes and jealousies and drives for personal power within the administration of our armed forces.

In my judgment the bill which was reported this morning is completely unsatisfactory, insofar as it does not come to grips, to the degree that it should, with the question of lodging command, so to speak, in the Secretary of Defense so that he truly would have the power to knock the heads together that must be knocked together, if we are to have true unification of our armed forces. The bill does not even scratch the surface of the great procurement problem which confronts us in connection with the armed services. We can save billions of dollars if we really unify the procurement system for the armed services. I am talking about billions of dollars, not millions of dollars.

So I say that, although the bill which was reported to the committee is a step in the right direction, I think the obligation of the Congress is to meet this challenge head-on and enact a unification bill which gives the Secretary of Defense the power which he ought to have as a Cabinet officer, to operate his Department. We have plenty of congressional checks upon any Cabinet officer who, in operating an agency of the Government, seeks to abuse his power or to usurp unto himself power which is not in the public interest. I believe that the idea of providing a great many titles in the Pentagon Building for so-called prestige purposes, which is the argument which ran through a great many of our discussions in the committee, is merely tommyrot. The American people are not interested in form, nor are they interested in brass and braid. The American people are interested in an armed forces establishment which will give them security in time of threatened war. That is what they want.

Mr. President, the American people also know that the time has come for economies in governmental expenditures to be made. Of course we hear much said these days about economy, and in my judgment a great deal of artificial discussion is occurring in the Senate over superficial proposals for economy. It is suggested, for instance, that some magical formula be adopted, perhaps one for a 5-percent cut in all departmental budgets, although heretofore the general assumption has been that the job of bringing about economy in our Government is being done in the committees. Mr. President, if the committees are not doing that job, let us point out specifically, item by item, where savings can be made. As a member of the Armed Services Committee, I stand ready and willing to point out where some savings can be made in the Armed Services Establishment of the United States, so as to result in substantial savings of money. But to do that job we need to recognize the importance of establishing a single procurement system applicable to all the armed forces.

Mr. President, the very suggestion which I make in that respect causes trembles among some of the persons in the Pentagon Building. I know whereof I speak, because when I introduced my bill on that subject several years ago—and in a moment I shall say something about it—I received a call from the Pentagon Building, from a great public servant, who said to me, in substance, "Although I do not mean to imply that I agree with every provision of your bill, Senator, I do want you to know that I think you are making a fine contribution to bringing about economy in the administration of our armed services, with your various suggestions, including your suggestion for a single administration of procurement." I say to the American people, from this desk, today, that unless their representatives in the Congress and in the administration are willing to come to grips with the tremendous waste in the procurement service of our armed forces, in my judgment there is no chance to make any substantial economies in the expenditures of our Military Establishment.

In the committee I heard a most interesting statement along that line by a former Secretary of War, Bob Patterson, one of the greatest public servants of this country within my memory; a man who goes straight to the facts; a man whose integrity, whose intellectual honesty, whose patriotism cannot be questioned; a man who is devoted to preserving the democratic ideal. I do not attempt to quote him verbatim at this time; we shall let the transcript speak for itself, and I do not happen to have the transcript before me at the moment. He said, in substance, before the Armed Services Committee, while we were considering the bill which was reported earlier today, I would have to guess how many millions and millions of dollars were wasted during the war—in fact, Mr. President, as I recall his language, it was, "how many millions and millions of dollars went down the drain as waste, as the result of a two-headed administration of our Military Establishment."

A Senator cannot be a member of the Armed Services Committee, as it has been my privilege to be, without recognizing that the waste in the administration of the armed forces is colossal. It is also inexcusable. Although I think the bill reported by the committee today will, if enacted, bring about some improvement in that situation, it simply does not go far enough; it fails to go as far as I think we have a right to expect the committee to go. It fails in that respect to such a degree that I could not in good conscience sit in the committee and vote to report the bill, although I wish to pay this tribute to my colleagues on the committee: There is no doubt about the fact that they have worked very conscientiously on the bill and have sought to bring forth at least some conscionable compromise which will be a great improvement over the monstrosity the Senate passed several years ago when it voted for the first armed forces unification bill, which provided for unification in name only. My criticism of the bill which has been reported today by the committee is that it still represents too much of unification in name only, rather than in fact. I have wished to make that statement today because I intend to carry the fight on the floor of the Senate for an armed forces unification bill in fact.

I suppose I shall be defeated when I make that fight, too. Of course, I am used to that. In fact, I am almost tempted to dispense with some of the business before the Senate very quickly, by proposing a unanimous-consent agreement—and, under present circumstances, entering into it all by myself, I suppose—in short, to ask unanimous consent for the immediate displacement of the measure now before the Senate. Were I to offer such a unanimous-consent agreement, I imagine the swinging doors to this Chamber would begin to swing very rapidly. I even see the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] already on his feet.

But, Mr. President, the point I wish to make—and I do so good naturedly—is that I am used to carrying the people's case on these issues in the Senate—and sometimes I do so very much alone. I notice, however, that when some of my colleagues go into the campaigns, they do some very fast rationalizing in regard to the action of the Congress in failing to meet some of these issues head-on. As I say, we are failing to meet the issue of true economy and true unification in the armed services of the United States.

Mr. President, it is said that the expenditures required for our Military Establishment amount to $15,000,000,000. Fifteen billion dollars does not cover the expenditures for our Military Establishment, because in addition to $15,000,000,000, we must add the deficiency appropriations which the Congress makes months after it passes the first appropriation bill for the Military Establishment. We are kidding the American people, we are almost guilty of practicing deceit upon them in connection with the waste we are permitting to be continued in the administration of our armed services. We should tell the American people that it not only cost $15,000,000,000 to maintain the armed services, but it costs several billion dollars more, in the form of deficiency appropriations.

Certainly I favor economy in government, and in a moment I shall have something to say on that matter in connection with the District of Columbia sales tax. But I shall put into the RECORD now, for the benefit of those who will read it, this charge: Unless the Congress does something about decreasing the over-all expenditures for armaments in the United States, we cannot keep a free economy forever.

Mr. President, I wish to refer for a moment to a few simple economic laws. I speak to a great many businessmen's conventions. Invariably they have a great deal to say about the operation of the law of supply and demand and about the need to return to the principles of a free economy. I say from this desk today to the American businessmen that we do not now have a free economy. The economic law of supply and demand is not working in the United States, and cannot work in the United States, and never will work in the United States so long as we have to spend for the operation of our Military Establishment anywhere near $15,000,000,000 of the total national budget.

I shall continue to vote for every dollar that is needed to keep America secure, or as secure as we can keep it, against the threatened spread of the form of totalitarianism known as communism. I am perfectly aware of that threat; and one cannot sit on the Armed Services Committee, one cannot be briefed in regard to the security problems—as we in the committee are briefed in regard to them frequently, off the record—without realizing that no man can sit on that committee, or for that matter in the Senate, and safely relinquish for a moment constant vigilance in regard to keeping America strong, in order to keep her secure. That, however, does not justify waste. That does not justify using a fear argument to get political support in the country for expenditures which the facts do not substantiate. If it is going to take $15,000,000,000, and the boys at the Pentagon Building can get the waste out of their expenditures, I will vote for it, if they can prove the need for it. Mr. President, it grieves me to vote for $15,000,000,000 when great authorities, such as President Hoover and "Bob" Patterson, come before the Armed Services Committee and give us testimony, which I am willing to accept because I am certain they know the facts, that there is enormous waste.

So I would say to my colleagues on this side of the aisle, as well as to my Democratic friends on the other side of the aisle, here is another great opportunity to take up an issue that belongs to the American people and treat it nonpartisanly. Here is an opportunity to eliminate from our discussion of economy, so far as the armed services are concerned, any attempt to gain party advantage. Let us save the money for the people. Some way, somehow, I have the notion that that is what we were sent here to do, along with other things, irrespective of whatever party allegiance we may owe.

Mr. President, many months ago, in the Eightieth Congress, I introduced a bill for the unification of the armed services; not as a perfect bill; I said so at the time. I was perfectly willing to consider amendments to it. I did not write the bill, but I had some very able and expert help from men who know, because they have been a part of it, what goes on in the Pentagon Building in the administration of the armed forces. I reintroduced the bill this year. Do you know when, Mr. President? On January 5, rather early in the session, would you not say? When the report of the Armed Services Committee is examined, one will not be able to find from the deliberations of the committee any cause to believe that Senate bill 108 was introduced on January 5. I do not have any objection to any committee in the Congress taking from any measure I introduce suggestions which they may think are good. I have no pride of authorship. If I introduce a measure, and then a committee, or a Member of the other party takes entire sections out of it and incorporates them in another bill, and the credit of that committee or of that Member of the Senate helps push through the Senate needed reform, I shall always welcome making that type of contribution.

Mr. President, I think the Armed Services Committee ought to be able to present a written record showing what is wrong with Senate bill 108. But except for such comments as I made in the committee, there will not be found in its printed record any evidence that the committee ever even gave careful consideration to S. 108. The drive was to push the Tydings bill through the committee.

It is pointed out that I did not attend some of the meetings of the committee, particularly those held on afternoons when the Senate was in session. That is true. However, the members of the staff of the committee will testify that I kept myself informed as to what happened. As the Presiding Officer knows, a great deal of my time has been devoted in this session of the Congress to labor legislation. But I attended some of the morning sessions of the Armed Services Committee, and when I discovered, what was perfectly clear, as to the final position of the committee, I served notice that if that was the type of legislation they were going to report, they might as well count me out, and I would introduce as a substitute what I considered to be a true unification bill. That I shall do, in due course of time.

But one word, by way of advance rebuttal, Mr. President. I know that if it is not said on the floor, it will be said in the cloakrooms, that the junior Senator from Oregon did not attend those meetings of the committee that were held on afternoons when the Senate was in session. Indeed I did not. I did not do it because of a point of view I have expressed several times on the floor of the Senate. That is, I am not going to sit, as a member of a committee, unless circumstances are truly extraordinary and of emergency character, in a committee hearing, while the people's business is supposed to be transacted on the floor of the Senate of the United States. I say the holding of committee meetings as they are being held this afternoon while the Senate is in session not only violates the spirit and intent of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946; it violates its direct language, as evidenced by the fact that every time a committee meets its chairman has to come on the floor of the Senate to ask consent to meet while the Senate is in session. The fact that the right to do that was preserved in the Reorganization Act of 1946, was in order to cover the exceptional case, not to provide a general rule. But the section of the Reorganization Act of 1946 which sought to bring to an end what we are witnessing here today, the meeting of many committees while the Senate is in session, might just as well not have been written into the law, because almost every day when the Senate is in session there are many committees meeting, with the result that the Senate floor is rapidly ceasing to be what the founding fathers intended it to be, a forum for the discussion of views before men with open minds, not previously committed and tied down and pledged to vote for a piece of legislation irrespective of what is said on the floor of the Senate. I happen to believe that I know the American people do not approve of the way we have scuttled the Legislative Reorganization Act in respect to this practice of the Senate. I think I am right also when I say that the American people expect us as Senators to be in the Senate to participate in the debates with open minds, and to be willing to change our minds on the basis of facts as they are presented on the floor of the Senate.

But, Mr. President, so long as the present general attitude and practice prevail in the Senate, I shall continue to speak to the RECORD and build up the RECORD, issue by issue, on behalf of what I think is the people's interest, and then let them determine at the ballot boxes in my State and in other States whether they approve of the fight which the liberals on both sides of the aisle in the Senate of the United States are constantly and consistently making in trying to carry out the true principles of republican government. If Congress seeks only to give effect to what I call a threat to republican government in the United States, namely, government by pressure groups, I think we better make that issue very clear to the voters in the various States, because I know what their answer will be.

Mr. President, one final word in regard to the armed forces bill. When it comes to the floor of the Senate I hope that Members of this body will go to the written committee record and not do, as we so frequently do, make the assumption that, because the bill has been reported favorably by the committee, the presumption is in favor of the bill. I say, Mr. President, that if Members of the United States Senate really want to give true unification to our armed services and bring about genuine economy, they will not give the committee bill any presumption one way or the other, but they will approach the unification problem tabula rasa, and let the facts be developed on the floor of the Senate as to the type of bill we should have.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

The following occurred during the delivery of Mr. MORSE's address:

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I am very happy to yield, with the understanding that I will not lose the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator allow me to propose a consent arrangement whereby I might introduce a bill, with the understanding that the Senator would not lose the floor?

Mr. MORSE. I shall be very happy to do so, because I hope it is the bill on the armed services, about which I have already expressed my opinion, which, as the Senator knows, is an opinion of disapproval.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Oregon yields to the Senator from Maryland, with the understanding that his right to the floor will not be prejudiced.

Mr. MORSE. And with the further understanding that the discussion of the Senator from Maryland and any colloquy it produces shall follow immediately after my earlier remarks on the unification bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPARKMAN in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Armed Services, I report an original bill and I submit a report (No. 366) thereon.

The Committee on Armed Services having had under consideration amendments to the National Security Act of 1947 report favorably a bill (S. 1843) to convert the National Military Establishment into an executive department of the Government, to be known as the Department of Defense; to provide the Secretary of Defense with appropriate responsibility and authority, and with civilian and military assistance adequate to fulfill his enlarged responsibility, and for other purposes, and we recommend that the bill do pass.

I send to the desk the bill and the report.

I should like to say that the report and the bill come from the committee with a vote of 12 in favor to 1 against.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report will be received and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1843) to convert the National Military Establishment into an executive department of the Government, to be known as the Department of Defense; to provide the Secretary of Defense with appropriate responsibility and authority and with civilian and military assistance adequate to fulfill his enlarged responsibility, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and placed on the calendar.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I now turn my attention to the pending bill. It is no news to this body to hear the junior Senator from Oregon say he is opposed to sales taxes in principle. It is no news to this body to hear the junior Senator from Oregon say that one of his fears about the proposal for a sales tax in the District of Columbia is that it establishes a precedent for the possibility of a Federal sales tax.

Mr. President, in this Nation we are getting ourselves into a very serious fiscal condition. We have a tremendous national debt, with much indication that it is going higher and higher if certain world trends make it necessary for us to spend additional billions of dollars in the fight for the peace. Of course, we must get ourselves into a position so that we can meet that emergency, if necessary, and have the soundest possible dollar with which to meet it. We should come to grips with tax reform in America. We have not done so. For years, in my judgment, the Democrats and the Republicans have played cheap politics with the tax issue. The Democrats, in the main, so far as their party strategy is concerned, have been playing politics on the principle of "soak the rich," with the result that we now have in our tax structure some inequities which amount to what I consider to be confiscation of wealth, not taxation on the basis of ability to pay. On the other side, I wish I could say that the Republican Party has followed a statesmanlike course of action in regard to taxation, but it has not. It has played politics with the issue by making great pretense about economy, about tax reduction. It has even gone so far that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will show that on one occasion a statement on the floor of the Senate from this side of the aisle was made that the proposals which the junior Senator from Oregon offered for tax reform were highly meritorious, but they involved proposals for tax revision, not tax reduction. If that statement had been made in any freshman economics class in taxation in any college in the country the spokesman would have been laughed out of the room, because, and I repeat what I have said before, we cannot have real tax reduction except in terms of tax revision, eliminating inequities from the existing tax laws.

When I talk about real tax reduction, Mr. President, I use the word "real" in the same technical sense in which it is used when we speak of real wages. The wage earner has been too much interested in his money wages rather than in his real wages. He has been too much interested in higher hourly rates of pay rather than in terms of what his wage dollar will buy, because in an economic sense real wages, of course, can be gauged only from the standpoint of the purchasing power of the dollar, which rests, of course, upon the soundness of the dollar.

Those are simply elementary economic principles; but I sometimes despair of even elementary economic principles being given due consideration in the Senate of the United States, particularly when two great parties have been motivated primarily by trying to get votes on the basis of their uneconomic proposals concerning the problem of taxation.

So, once again, this year, perhaps more discouraged than before, but not at all in a spirit of defeatism, Mr. President, I shall offer the tax program of the Committee for Economic Development, from top to bottom, and I shall issue again the challenge in the Senate of the United States for any Senator to stand up and offer a better tax program. Until that is done—I shall go further than that—until some of the Members of the Senate can stand up and point out any serious economic holes in the program of the Committee for Economic Development, I shall say it is the duty of this session of Congress to consider the need for tax revision, and stop this political talk about tax increases or tax reductions in terms of tax rates and tax percentages.

Have we not had enough politics in taxation, Mr. President? Is it not about time, with the mounting danger to our economy which the pressing fiscal problems are bringing about, that we lessen the danger to a free economy by a top-to-bottom revision of the tax structure, to the end of really putting into practice what has become, I think, a politician's slogan—"Ability to pay?" It ought to have a richer economic meaning, and one can be given to it if we remove the inequities from our tax structure, if the Democrats stop their drive of political propaganda on a soak-the-rich theory, and the Republicans stop talking about percentage tax reductions and come forward with a constructive tax program for a revision of the tax structure. I say, until Congress does that, until both parties do it, danger to a free economy as the result of unsound attitudes is going to mount from year to year.

I like to say to the businessmen of the country—and they cannot successfully rebut the statement—that it is about time conservative businessmen look to the liberals in the Congress to protect our free economy. On the record, as one will find if he goes to the record, it is the liberals in the Congress who are fighting for the fiscal reforms which are necessary to stabilize the dollar. It is the liberals in the Congress, who have been proposing for the past several years a complete overhauling and revising of the tax structure. Who in the Congress but the liberals have been saying, not only to the Congress but to the businessmen of America, "Why do not you get behind the proposal of the Committee for Economic Development which proposes a 5-year carry forward on losses for the present carry-back on losses?"

Mr. President, you have heard me say before what I am about to say, but the truth has to be repeated time and time again in order to get people to start thinking in terms of the truth, rather than of political propaganda on taxation. I utter this truth again, that if we had to pick just one amendment, if we were limited to just one amendment, if we would pick the amendment of the Committee for Economic Development that proposes the 5-year carry-forward on losses, it would be the greatest possible incentive to American business to risk its venture capital in new wealth-creating industry and economic projects so essential if we are really to protect the value of the dollar.

Or take the proposal of the committee for a modification of the present inheritance tax structure. The Democratic Party, as a tax policy, has permitted the rates to become so high that today they are in the nature of confiscation. American labor needs to recognize that its standard of living is endangered by the continuation of the present inheritance tax structure. What is happening is that the small fellow who is subject to the inheritance tax, that is, the man with the wealth that gets him into the inheritance tax structure, is not being provided with the incentive which he needs in order to free, in order to liquefy, what now is frozen capital, what should be producing capital, what should be venture capital, what should be capital that is put to work in support of programs which will create new jobs and new wealth out of which workers can expect and hope to maintain and perpetuate their standard of living.

Since I wish to devote most of my attention to the sales-tax problem, I am not going to take time this afternoon to go through the various amendments on taxes proposed by the Committee for Economic Development. I understand the Committee for Economic Development is coming forth shortly with certain revised suggestions of its report on taxes. I have been confidentially informed as to some of the suggestions, and I wish to serve notice here and now that it is my intention, when the report this year is publicly released, to put it in the form of a tax bill, and once again, for the third time, to offer the tax program of the Committee for Economic Development to the Senate.

Mr. President, I shall await with interest the objections which can be raised to the report on the floor of the Senate, because the past two reports of the Committee for Economic Development have been presented to the Senate, and one will read the RECORD in vain to find any Member of this body who was able to find any fault with the recommendations of the committee, or at least who was willing to express any disagreement with them. How did we treat the recommendations of that great body of public servants on that committee? Except for those of us who urged the adoption of the recommendations of the committee, we treated them with the thunders of silence.

It is rather interesting, Mr. President, that so many sound proposals, particularly sound, liberal proposals, are treated in the Congress of the United States with the thunders of silence. That has been the experience of liberals in the Congress of the United States for decades gone by. Eventually their point of view prevails. But frequently so much time has elapsed between the proposals and their final acceptance that the American people have suffered untold hardships and losses because of the failure of the majority of the Congress to keep up with a liberal point of view.

I am going to offer the tax proposals of the Committee for Economic Development, composed, for the most part, as Senators know, of outstanding American businessmen and industrialists and economists—not of Government employees or officials at all, but of American industrialists and businessmen, of American economists—as the soundest liberal program for tax revision the Congress of the United States can consider. If we would adopt the program, we would go a long way toward eliminating the inequities in our present tax laws which are today endangering the fiscal soundness of our Government.

It is such tax reform, and it is such principles of tax reform, that should be eliciting the attention of the Senate now as we consider the revenue problems of the District of Columbia. But what are we doing instead? In my judgment, we are running away from the real obligation we owe not only to the people of the District of Columbia but of the country. In my judgment, we are adopting tactics toward the District of Columbia we could not get by with in our own States. In the last analysis, the Congress is the city council of the District of Columbia. But we happen to be in the position of a city council that cannot be held to responsibility by the citizens for whom it acts, because we have not had the courage and the foresight and the statesmanship in the years gone by to give to the citizens of the District of Columbia the elective franchise, which every American ought to enjoy. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let there be order in the galleries.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, we talk about discrimination in this country based upon race, color, and creed. We ought to be talking also about civil rights in regard to the right of the citizens of the District of Columbia to vote. We are denying them what I think is a precious civil right because of a discriminatory policy which the Congress of the United States has held toward them.

Mr. President, what do Senators think would happen if we offered to the citizens of the District of Columbia that good old American right to vote on this issue? I have been a little amused today, because I have said, in good humor and facetiously, or as we say in the cloakroom, in a joshing way, to some of my very close friends in the Senate, "How would you like to give the people of the District of Columbia a chance to vote on the question of the sales tax?" Senators know the answer. We know that if we put the question to any Member of the Senate he would tell us he would take it for granted that if we put the sales-tax proposal contained in this bill to a vote of the residents of the District of Columbia they would vote it down.

That is a nice business, is it not? We are not responsible to them. They cannot do anything to us. We do not have to fear the vote of a single resident of the District of Columbia. But we sit here in an almighty attitude, as an oracle, and we say to the taxpayers of the District of Columbia, "This sales tax will be good for you. Just swallow it and see what happens to you." There are many persons who are not going to like the taste of that medicine because of the hardship it will cause them.

Mr. President, I am somewhat surprised to find as champions of the sales tax so many spokemen of the Democratic Party who some way, some how, were successful prior to last November 2, in creating the impression that the Democratic Party is the little fellow's friend. I wonder what the little fellow in Washington, D. C., thinks about it. I wonder what the little fellow across this land will think when he becomes aware of the fact that the pressure for the sales tax in the District of Columbia has been primarily a Democratic pressure. And as to all the professions of the Democratic Party about being the guardian angel of the little man's interest, I wonder if the little fellow in regions of the country where he has the right to vote will not see through this kind of business and recognize that Democratic leaders were willing to put this tax upon people who had no right to vote on the question or to exercise what I think ought to be the right of representation if there is to be taxation. That is a rather historic doctrine in our system of government, and this is the first time we have so distorted the principle of ability to pay in the District of Columbia taxation system. The Congress has said to the citizens of the District "You are going to have to take it and like it." I simply say it is a fact, Mr. President, that the Eighty-first Congress does not dare let this issue go to a referendum in the District of Columbia. I think we should let the question go to a referendum. If we are going to impose taxes without representation I believe we should at least try to get an advisory opinion from the people. Of course, I know I am talking about a hypothetical proposal which does not have the slightest chance of becoming a reality, because I know that the proponents of this sales tax know they could not win if they submitted it to a vote.

It has been very interesting to note in sections of the country where the good old system of direct democratic government still lives, where the right of the people by initiative and referendum to protect themselves against politicians still lives, what the people have done to sales taxes. As a general rule the vested interests that profit by passing a tax burden to the backs of the low-income people of the country do not like the initiative and referendum, because they cannot get by with their selfishly motivated proposals when the people come to understand the facts and have an opportunity to register their views at a secret ballot.

So I close this point by saying that to me the $64 answer to the $64 question in this debate, "What would the residents of the District of Columbia do with this proposal if we should let them exercise the referendum?" is unquestionably that they would vote "No" by an overwhelming majority. In my State this type of taxation has been tried four times, and the people of my State defeated it the last time 3 to 1. If it is tried again, we will defeat it again, because it is premised upon a basically unsound taxation principle. If we were to work on a tax-revision program designed to take the inequities out of our tax structure, there would not even be the paper argument, plausible as they try to make it, available to the proponents of the sales tax, because if we were to revise our tax structure on a true ability-to-pay basis there would be the funds to balance the budget and to meet the fiscal needs not only of the District of Columbia, but of the Nation.

I could speak at great length on this issue, but to do so would be repetitious of the arguments already made by those opposed to the sales tax. I have on my desk an analysis of the sales-tax proposal for the District of Columbia prepared by the Americans for Democratic Action for the District of Columbia. In offering this analysis for the RECORD, which I now do, I make their arguments a part of my argument, and associate myself completely with the analysis of the Americans for Democratic Action in opposition to the sales tax.

Perhaps my offering the arguments of the Americans for Democratic Action may appeal to some as being a little humorous and possibly amusing. Many people have come to look upon that great organization as a sort of political army for the Democratic Party. I have never so regarded it, but I am sure that many of my Republican colleagues think it is; in fact, as I recall, we had a debate on the floor of the Senate not so long ago which gave that general impression. I have noticed that in a good many States the Americans for Democratic Action have tried to take a nonpartisan or at least a bipartisan, approach to great liberal issues. They have given their support to Democratic liberals and Republican liberals alike who have been trying to put into effect minimum controls and regulations of Government necessary to protect the people as a whole from selfish interests, which always have to be watched in their attempt to pervert and distort the private economy system into a system of license to exploit the general public for the economic gain of the owners of wealth.

So, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point in my remarks the analysis of the sales-tax proposal prepared by the Americans for Democratic Action of the District of Columbia, in opposition to the District of Columbia sales tax.

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICANS FOR DEMOCRATIC ACTION'S STAND ON DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE—AGAINST A SALES TAX—FOR AN INCOME TAX

1. There is no doubt that the District of Columbia government needs more revenue, not only to meet the inadequate budget submitted to Congress but also to finance the overdue pay raise for District employees and to provide much-needed improvements in educational, health, and welfare services.

2. There is no doubt, either, that the additional revenue can be raised, fairly, and without undue burden on the people of the District. The District is a rich community, with income per person 60 percent higher than the average for the United States. The people of the District are lightly taxed—on almost every kind of tax—the rates in the District are lower than in most States. The "crisis" in the District finances is a fiction, invented to alarm the people and the Congress into accepting a sales tax as the only means of balancing the budget.

3. But a sales tax is one of the worst means of balancing the budget. It is widely recognized as a bad tax anywhere, to be imposed only when there is no alternative. It is bad because, even when food and medicines are exempt, it bears most heavily on those least able to pay, and most lightly on those who can best afford it. From the typical low-income family, which spends its income on essentials of living and even then often goes into debt, the sales tax takes money needed for those essentials. Even in 1947, the typical Washington family with income of $3,000 or less paid more than $100 in direct personal taxes and went into debt. This included more than 20 percent of Washington families. From the typical high-income family on the other hand, the sales tax takes only a small fraction of the surplus which goes into savings. In 1947, Washington families with $6,000 and more showed average savings of over $500. This can be demonstrated by official statistics of incomes and expenditures in the District. Low-income families are already hard pressed by high living costs and heavy burden of direct and indirect taxes; they should not be burdened further.

4. A sales tax is cumbersome (most merchants would have to keep elaborate records of sales of taxable and tax-free items), and expensive to administer (a large sum would have to be paid to the merchants to collect it). It is an unnecessary hardship on both the merchants and the people.

5. The proposed sales tax, even when it reached its full yield in 1951 and after, would not raise enough to support the increase in the budget which will certainly be required in later years, if only to meet the needs of a growing school population. If Congress were to pass the proposed sales tax, the District would be back again in a year or two with a new crisis.

6. Fortunately, the District has available to it a superior source of revenue: a graduated personal income tax. The present District income tax is a farce, with absurd and unjust exemption of Federal employees who claim a legal residence in another State. There is no constitutional, legal, or financial reason why the District should not have a general income tax that will yield all the revenue that is needed. With a concentration of incomes in the middle brackets, the District is in an ideal position to use such a tax, which places the burden of additional revenue on those best able to bear it.

7. An income tax with the same exemptions as now in the District law, and with rates comparable to those in Virginia, would raise $19,000,000, which is $14,000,000 net of the present income tax and unincorporated business tax (which it would supplant) and more than the full yield of the sales tax. With rates comparable to those in New York State, it could raise $24,000,000, or $19,000,000 net. And these rates are not exorbitant; in many States the rates are higher. The problems of residence versus domicile and the problems of double taxation can be avoided by provisions such as those now incorporated in H. R. 1385.

8. Additional revenues of more than $2,000,000 can be raised by doubling the beer and liquor taxes, which are now almost the lowest in the country and would still be among the lowest even if they were twice as high.

9. The Federal payment in lieu of taxes is too small, considering what it was in the past and considering the increase in the cost and scope of municipal services. A payment of $17,000,000 ($5,000,000 more than at present) would be only about 16 percent of the proposed budget. (Twenty years ago, the Federal Government paid more than 25 percent of the District budget).

10. Prudent, conservative financing, to avoid recurrent crises and hand-to-mouth financing, requires a tax structure that will provide for increasing revenues and a margin for larger budgets that are sure to come. Equity, and indeed common decency, requires that the additional revenues come from those best able to pay them. An income tax satisfies both requirements; a sales tax satisfies neither. Do not be misled by those who plead for sales tax because it is the only solution (and incidentally will cost them less), and who oppose an income tax because it is impracticable. If an income tax is practicable in two-thirds of our States, it is practicable here.

Mr. MORSE. I shall read the first three points made in the analysis or report. I have no doubt that if we took a poll of the District of Columbia Chapter we probably would find that at least 90 percent of them were Democrats. Perhaps the percentage would be higher. I am almost sure that in my State it would be about 95 percent. I understand also that they are all opposed to me. So I doubly enjoy introducing this argument of the Americans for Democratic Action, because not even political opposition causes me to run away from the truth once I am satisfied that a certain proposition is true. I commend the Americans for Democratic Action, even though I may find them in the camp of my opposition in 1950, for preparing such a sound analysis in opposition to the District of Columbia sales tax. They say in this analysis:

1. There is no doubt that the District of Columbia needs more revenue, not only to meet the inadequate budget submitted to Congress, but also to finance the overdue pay increase for District employees and to provide much needed improvements in educational, health, and welfare services.

2. There is no doubt, either, that the additional revenue can be raised, fairly, and without undue burden on the people of the District. The District is a rich community, with income per person 60 percent higher than the average for the United States. The people of the District are lightly taxed; on almost every kind of tax the rates in the District are lower than in most States. The "crisis" in the District finances is a fiction, invented to alarm the people and the Congress into accepting a sales tax as the only means of balancing the budget.

Let me say that the District of Columbia does not know what a depression is. The businessmen of the District of Columbia do not know what a depression is. Governmental operations themselves assure rather healthy economic conditions in the District of Columbia, which is the capital of the world, when other sections of the country are from time to time in the depths of a serious, bankrupting depression. When I listen to some District of Columbia business men rail against the suggestion that there should be the slightest increase in business taxes in this community, I say to myself—and to one or two of them on occasion I have said directly—"Oh, what selfishness can do to a man's thinking."

The business fraternity of this city does not begin to appreciate the level of economic stability that it is able to enjoy because of the continuity of governmental operations in the District. Yet they cry to high heaven when anyone suggests that business taxes and income taxes might be increased a little. Read last night's Washington Star editorial. It is enough to nauseate one, Mr. President, to think that such propaganda can be fed through the editorial columns of a newspaper. I wonder what the District of Columbia newspapers would do if in the sales-tax proposal newspapers were not exempted. Then we would have read an editorial which I could almost dictate. What a threat to freedom of the press and the dissemination of knowledge such sales tax would be. I think it would be a good thing to put a little higher tax on the newspapers, because they have enjoyed considerable prosperity in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I am happy to yield for a question.

Mr. McGRATH. If the Senator from Oregon is willing to offer an amendment to include a tax on newspapers, I am quite sure the committee would be willing to accept it.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I would not think of offering an amendment to a sales tax bill which would permit the continuation of the principle of a sales tax. I think too much of my duty to the people of my country to adopt any such principle of taxation as that which the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGRATH], the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, has agreed to by means of this bill. I do not think the Senator from Rhode Island was in the Chamber a short time ago when I paid my "compliments"—and I use the word in quotation marks—to the Democratic Party's position on the pending sales-tax bill; but when the Senator reads my statement in the RECORD tomorrow, he will know that I did not give it my endorsement.

Mr. President, I wish to read the third point of the recommendations of the District of Columbia Chapter of Americans for Democratic Action. That group, consisting predominantly of Democrats, say:

3. But a sales tax is one of the worst means of balancing the budget. It is widely recognized as a bad tax anywhere, to be imposed only when there is no alternative. It is bad because, even when food and medicine are exempt, it bears most heavily on those least able to pay, and most lightly on those who can best afford it. From the typical low-income family, which spends its income on essentials of living and even then often goes into debt, the sales tax takes money needed for those essentials. Even in 1947, the typical Washington family with income of $3,000 or less paid more than $100 in direct personal taxes and went into debt. This included more than 20 percent of Washington families. From the typical high-income family on the other hand, the sales tax takes only a small fraction of the surplus which goes into savings. In 1947, Washington families with $6,000 and more showed average savings of over $500. This can be demonstrated by official statistics of incomes and expenditures in the District. Low-income families are already hard pressed by high living costs and heavy burden of direct and indirect taxes; they should not be burdened further.

We have in that statement paragraph after paragraph of sound economic doctrine, as stated by the local chapter of Americans for Democratic Action. Those statements drive one hole after another right through the body of this proposed sales-tax hold-up of the people of low incomes in the District of Columbia.

On the House side of the Capitol Building some very valuable alternative suggestions have been made for raising revenue in the District of Columbia. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted at this point in the RECORD a communication entitled "Alternative Revenue Plan for Washington," and I say to the proponents of this sales-tax bill that it is their obligation to show why that plan cannot be adopted in order to raise the revenue needed without burdening the poor people of the District of Columbia with a sales tax.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ALTERNATIVE REVENUE PLAN FOR WASHINGTON

(By six Members of the House of Representatives)

Your editorials, Pauperized Washington, of March 16, and A Ward of Congress, of March 19, charged that the Members of the House of Representatives who voted down the sales tax showed not the slightest regard for the real financial problems (of the District) and that their action was irresponsible.

Editorials like these serve only to confuse issues. We should like to take this opportunity to present a revenue program which will demonstrate that the situation is not as desperate as your newspaper would have the public believe. This program would yield more revenue than the sales-tax measure recently rejected by the House. It is also superior to the sales tax because it is more equitable, easier to administer and will provide the basis for expanding revenues in the future to provide necessary services for District residents.

The program consists of the following: a broadened personal income tax which will tax all persons who reside in the District; a somewhat higher property tax; a larger Federal payment; and authorization to finance long-term improvement by borrowing.

The income tax and property tax features of this program are included in six identical bills which we introduced in the House last Tuesday. The increased Federal contribution and the repeal of the law of 1878 prohibiting the District from borrowing, will be included in other legislation.

The District of Columbia already has the elements of a good personal income tax. This produces a small amount of revenue at the present time because employees of the Federal Government domiciled elsewhere are specifically exempt. If this exemption for Federal workers were eliminated, the personal income tax would immediately yield at least an additional $5,000,000 a year.

Opponents of a broader income tax have argued that it would result in double taxation, since some residents of the District pay tax to their home States. This double taxation charge is simply not true. Existing law already provides a credit for residents of the District who pay tax to other States for the full amount of such taxes paid.

Without further amendment, the law would provide the same credit to persons who would be subject to tax under the broadened income tax proposed here. Double taxation would, therefore, be impossible.

As a matter of fact, the credit for taxes paid to other States will not greatly reduce the yield of the tax for the following reasons: First, most District residents, who are subject to income tax in their home States do not pay that tax because enforcement by State authorities is difficult and expensive.

Second, a few States do not tax domiciliaries if they do not reside there—for example, California and Idaho. New York exempts them providing they do not spend more than 30 days a year in the State. Third, 17 States do not levy a personal income tax and 2 States, New Hampshire and Tennessee, tax only income from intangibles. In total, double taxation of salaries earned by Federal Government employees is not possible in at least 22 States, even without the credit in the District law.

The estimated $5,000,000 yield which would be obtained from the broadened income tax does not exhaust its revenue potentialities. Revenue can be increased by raising the rates and increasing progression. For example, the income tax provisions of the bill introduced last Tuesday would raise an additional $10,000,000, or a total of $15,000,000 more than the revenue from present law, when the $5,000,000 produced by broadening the base is included.

In the immediate situation, it would be unnecessary to increase rates to higher levels than those provided under the new bill. It is well to note, however, that the rates in this bill are by no means excessive in comparison with rates in other States. Thus, the income tax could be made to produce even higher revenues without unduly burdening District residents.

Increased revenue requirements can, therefore, be met by way of the income tax even if this bill were adopted. Clearly, it is prudent and sound policy to anticipate the need for further revenue and there is no more equitable way to provide for such expansion than by the income tax.

Proponents of the sales tax will argue that Congress has voted down a comprehensive income tax in the past and will also point out that the Klein bill was defeated by the present House during the sales tax debate. The performance of past Congresses is, however, no indication of how the new Congress will act, nor can the vote on the Klein bill be taken as conclusive.

The vote on the Klein bill was less than half the total vote on the sales tax. A number of influential Members of the House have stated publicly that they support a sales tax only as a last resort. If they were to vote for the newly introduced bill, their vote added to the vote polled against the sales tax would be sufficient to pass that bill by a substantial margin.

The property tax in the District of Columbia may be low by comparison with other large cities in the country. There is no easy method to make such a comparison since the valuations in the various cities differ substantially. Even if it is granted that the District property tax is relatively low, this is by no means a justification for increasing it substantially.

Basically, the property tax is subject to the same criticism as the sales tax: it tends to be more burdensome on low-income families than on those in the higher income levels. Moreover, under rent control, a large increase in the property tax rate is likely to be fully shifted to renters, many of whom are already hard pressed by high prices for the necessities of life.

In view of these considerations, the property-tax rate might be increased, but in the interest of equity, by no more than 25 cents per $100 assessed valuation. This would mean a 12.5 percent increase, or about $4,000,000.

The Federal contribution to the District of Columbia has varied considerably since it was formally adopted. The first formula, adopted by Congress in 1878, provided a contribution of 50 percent of total District expenditures. This formula remained unchanged until 1921, when Congress reduced the Federal contribution to 40 percent of District appropriations. However, the 40–60 formula was superseded by lump-sum contributions beginning in 1925.

Lump-sum contributions have varied as follows since the fiscal year 1925:

Fiscal years:
1925–30	$9,000,000
1931–32	9,500,000
1933	7,775,000
1934–36	5,700,000
1937–39	5,000,000
1940–46	6,000,000
1947	8,000,000

[1] Includes $1,000,000 contribution to the water fund.

During the period 1925–30 expenditures from the general fund varied between thirty million and forty million, and the nine-million contribution of the Federal Government in these years varied between 21 and 32 percent of general-fund expenditures. The general fund has reached almost ninety million in the current fiscal year, and the Federal contribution to the general fund of eleven million is only slightly more than 12 percent.

There seems to be no question that a significant proportion of the increase in expenses is due to the increased cost of services to the Federal Government. Such costs have increased both because the Federal Government has enlarged its property holdings and also because the costs of running local government, like all costs, have been increased by the war and the postwar rise in prices. Clearly, it would be unfair to expect District residents to pay for higher costs of services rendered to the Federal Government.

Whether or not a formula is reintroduced or the lump-sum contribution is continued, it is obvious that the present 12,000,000 contribution is wholly inadequate. A minimum increase of 5,000,000 in the permanent contribution is essential.

The District government must finance all long-term improvements and construction projects out of current revenues. Elsewhere in the country, such improvements are almost always financed out of borrowed funds. Private business also finances long-term construction either by issuing bonds or by borrowing from banks or insurance companies. This practice is so widespread because it is a sound and businesslike approach.

Necessary improvements and construction projects in the District have been delayed by the wartime and postwar shortages. The need for many improvements is urgent and cannot be put off longer without seriously undermining the education, hospital, public welfare, and other programs. It would be impossible to provide even for minimum needs out of current revenues. The District is one of the wealthiest communities in the country, and its credit rating would be excellent. It is, therefore, both essential and safe to permit the District of Columbia to borrow funds for construction of long-term improvements.

In summary, the revenues which might be obtained from the sources enumerated above are:

Personal income tax	$15,000,000
Property tax	4,000,000
Subtotal from District sources	19,000,000
Federal contribution	5,000,000
Total from all sources	24,000,000

The financial situation in the District is by no means desperate, with revenue possibilities of these magnitudes available to be tapped. The program outlined above is a moderate and equitable one and, as already noted, will provide substantially more revenue than the sales tax. Its adoption would enable the District to proceed with plans for improvement in current services to District residents. If, in addition, it is allowed to borrow funds for construction purposes, the District will have the elements of a sound fiscal structure which can well serve as a model to other communities, as it should.

WASHINGTON.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a document entitled "Yield of Personal Income Tax in the District of Columbia as Proposed in the Minority Bill of the House District Committee."

There being no objection, the document was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

YIELD OF PERSONAL INCOME TAX IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AS PROPOSED IN THE MINORITY BILL OF THE HOUSE DISTRICT COMMITTEE

At the present time, the personal income tax in the District of Columbia yields about $4,200,000 and the unincorporated business tax yields another $800,000, giving a total for the two taxes of approximately $5,000,000.

It is well known that the personal income tax is a poor revenue producer in the District of Columbia because the tax is not applicable to Federal Government employees who claim domicile elsewhere. Only 65,000 persons pay the District of Columbia tax. This number would be increased to at least 240,000, or almost tripled, if the tax were made applicable to all residents of the District regardless of their State of domicile. Clearly, the revenue potentialities of the personal income tax can be increased greatly if its coverage were extended to cover all residents.

The House minority bill would increase the personal income tax in two ways: first the tax would include all persons who maintain a place of abode in the District of Columbia for more than 7 months of the year;[1] second, the rates which start at 1 percent on the first $5,000 of taxable income and end at 3 percent on taxable incomes in excess of $20,000 would be raised, beginning with 2 percent on the first $2,000 of taxable income and ending at 5 percent on taxable income in excess of $10,000. The bill also repeals the unincorporated business tax because that tax is levied at a flat rate of 5 percent on business income in excess of $10,000, or the same rates provided under the bill.

The reliability of estimates of the yield of a proposed income tax depend upon the nature of the data available on the distribution of income. For the District of Columbia, we are fortunate that the United States Census Bureau recently completed a survey on 1947 incomes for the Washington Metropolitan area. The results of this survey have been published in sufficient detail to provide a good basis for estimating the yield of the tax proposed in the proposed alternate bill.

The method used to make this estimate is, briefly, as follows:

1. The total number of families and single persons residing in the District was first estimated on the basis of the estimated population and the average size of family given in the Census survey.

2. Distributions of income in 1947 were made for families of different sizes and single persons separately, on the basis of the Census survey. The incomes of the families and single persons in these distributions were then raised somewhat to take account of the increase in incomes since 1947.

3. From the distributions obtained in step (2), exemptions of families and single persons in each income class were estimated. These exemptions plus an average allowance of 10 percent for personal deductions under the income tax were subtracted from the income figures to obtain taxable incomes.

4. These taxable incomes were then arranged by classes and tax rates were applied to the amounts of taxable incomes in each tax bracket to obtain the total estimated tax.

Given the present rates (from 1 to 3 percent), the above procedure yielded an estimated $10,000,000 as the tax which would be obtained if the base were broadened to include all residents in the District.[2] This is about $5,000,000 more than is now collected from the personal tax and the unincorporated business tax combined. It may be noted that this is the same estimate given by Congressman BATES, of Massachusetts, in debate on the floor of the House of Representatives.[3]

Using the same procedure, the higher rates under the House minority bill would yield an estimated $20,000,000 in total or $15,000,000 more than the present personal income tax and unincorporated income tax. The $20,000,000 figure was, of course, obtained by applying the tax rates to the amount of taxable income in each bracket as described in step (4) above. This estimate is obviously reasonable, since the yield of the present rates would be about $10,000,000 if the base were broadened to include all residents. This bill doubles the starting rate, increases the top rate by two-thirds, and has greater progression in the lower taxable brackets. Consequently, the bill raises just about double the amount that the present rates would yield on the broadened base.

Mr. MORSE. Of course, Mr. President, speaking briefly regarding those suggestions in the alternative, they propose to increase the income-tax rates, rather than to increase the exemptions in respect to income taxes. Although all the features of the pending proposal are undesirable, I think one of the most undesirable features of it is the provision

[2] A credit is provided under the law for all persons who pay tax to other States. However, an examination of the tax laws of other States indicates that the amount of the credit will undoubtedly be small, for the following reasons: California and Idaho do not tax their domiciliaries if they do not spend there. New York State exempts them providing they do not spend more than 30 days a year in the State. Seventeen States do not levy a personal income tax at all (these include many large States like Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Indiana), and New Hampshire and Tennessee tax only incomes from intangibles. In toto, double taxation of salary earnings in the District of Columbia is not possible for domiciliaries of at least 22 States, so that the credit would lose no revenue from this segment of the District population. For the remainder, it is doubtful whether many who are subject to income tax in their State of domicile actually pay tax there because enforcement by State authorities is difficult and expensive. Thus the loss in revenue due to the credit is bound to be very small, especially if proof is required by the District before a credit is granted.

for raising the income-tax exemption, trying to create the impression that by raising the exemption, the little fellow will be helped. We should realize that the exemption is also taken off at the top of every high income earned in the District of Columbia.

Of course, the second alternative is to increase the direct Federal Government appropriation, to the District of Columbia. I think it should be increased. When we consider the total amount of tax-exempt property owned by the Federal Government in the District of Columbia, I think that we, as representatives of the Federal Government, must come to the conclusion that we are not carrying our full load; and I think the suggestions in respect to adding to the direct appropriation made by the Federal Government for District expenses—I refer to the suggestions made by the minority in the Senate and by the minority in the House—are very sound.

I wish to take several minutes to speak, from direct personal experience, of the need for increasing the direct appropriation the Federal Government makes to the District of Columbia. For the past 2 years I have been the president of a home and school association at one of the junior high schools in the District of Columbia. Before I had that experience, I simply had no idea how derelict the Congress has been in regard to its educational policies, particularly from the standpoint of having the Federal Government pay adequately for the maintenance of the standards of education which should be maintained for the boys and girls who live in the District of Columbia. We should be ashamed of ourselves as a Congress for the inadequate support we have given to education in the District. Mr. President, we could possibly pursue such a policy as members of city councils in our home towns or as members of the State legislatures in our home States; but the people would have a very effective check on us as members of such bodies, and certainly we would listen to them. Show me the politician who would not.

But we do not listen to the people of the District of Columbia. Mr. President, do you know that if a new high school or a new grade school is built in the District of Columbia, we, the Congress, do not even provide the funds for landscaping the grounds of the school or for constructing adequate sidewalks leading to the building? Do you know, Mr. President, that if, at the Alice Deal Junior High School, the plaster began to fall off the ceilings of the corridors of the school, the Home and School Association would be asked to raise the funds needed for the replacement of the plaster, because the Congress does not supply any money in the budget for that purpose? If the equipment in the school cafeteria wears out, does the Federal Government supply the funds for its rereplacement? No; the mothers and fathers, through the home-school associations and the parent-teachers associations of the District, hold bazaars, entertainments, fairs, and what not to raise the money. If we want visual education in the schools, does the Congress supply it? No; the mothers and fathers have to raise extra money for it.

To say that such a condition is a disgrace is to put it mildly, but that is about the strongest language that may be used on the floor of the Senate The inadequacy of school support for the District of Columbia by the Congress of the United States is a disgrace. We should make direct appropriations to give the youngsters decent facilities, to give the teachers decent pay, to give the schools adequate support. The people of the United States owe it to the District of Columbia, too. I agree with the minority views of the Senate committee, and I agree with the minority views of the House committee, that the Congress of the United States has not lived up to its obligation to give direct appropriations in the amounts that it ought to give for a great many of the services which it now is not adequately supporting.

I said the first proposal of the minority is for an increase in income tax rates; the second, for an increase in the direct appropriation; and the third, for an increase in the property rate. The assessments are too low and the rates on the assessments are too low. I know of a Member of this body who about 2 years ago bought a home in the District of Columbia. He was talking to me the other day about the taxes he pays on his home. I shall put it in his language. He said, "WAYNE, I have a feeling of guilt when I pay those taxes, because my conscience tells me they are entirely too low." Is it better to tax the fathers and mothers, through a sales tax, when they have to buy shoes for their youngsters, than to tax that United States Senator and other property owners in the District by way of property taxes which they should pay and which their ability to pay decrees they should pay?

I think, Mr. President, we are stained with much guilt in the Senate of the United States, and we should wash it off. We covered ourselves completely with guilt 2 years ago when we took care of our own pockets, and presented to the people of the United States the spectacle of Senators increasing their salary from $10,000 to $12,500, and then voting themselves an additional $2,500 of unaccountable expenses, tax-exempt. I said then, and I repeat now, it was a shameful thing to do. If we want a $15,000 salary, let us vote a $15,000 salary and make every dollar of it taxable. If we are going to have an expense account, then let us make it one for which we must account. Let us tell the people of the country what we spend it for. If the Congress can adopt such tactics, if it can follow such a course of action as that, and then impose a sales tax upon thousands of people in the District of Columbia, who cannot do anything about it, because we will not even let them vote on the issue, the Congress deserves censure. We should make the people of the District voting citizens of America and let them run their city, deciding for themselves what their municipal policies shall be and what their tax structure shall be.

The burden of proof is on the proponents of the pending bill—and they have failed miserably to sustain that burden—to show the need for a sales tax to meet what they allege is a revenue crisis in the District. They have run away from proposals to increase income tax rates, to increase property tax rates, and to increase direct appropriations to the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, I wish to close by reading a few paragraphs from a speech I made on another occasion, at another place, in opposition to a sales tax. In that speech I warned, as I warn again today, that we need to be on the alert for a movement for a Federal sales tax. In fact, we have gone a long way in that direction, through the imposition of excise taxes. A good many of the excise taxes can be justified in time of war, but it is impossible to justify in times of peace the type of economic discrimination which is represented by existing excise taxes. One of the inequities we ought to eliminate from the tax structure is the many excise taxes. They are having a detrimental effect upon the Nation's economy. Therefore, for some time I have been in favor of the complete abolition of certain excise taxes and a marked reduction in all the excise taxes that remain.

For some reason, Congress has in a manner developed what I call an excise tax complex. An excise tax is rather easy to impose, and, looking at each little group alone, it does not represent a great deal of political power. I think some of the Senators are overlooking the fact that the blanket has been spread out over so many that it is beginning to have political repercussions, and that may give us some hope of a change. I sometimes think the only hope of our passing good legislation is that our actions are subject to political repercussions.

But let me say, Mr. President, that we need to watch out for a Federal sales tax. One of the best checks against the development of a Federal sales tax is to eliminate some of the excise taxes, and, certainly, to fight the establishment of a precedent in the form of a sales tax in the District of Columbia. So, I wish to refer to a few paragraphs of a speech I made on another occasion—and I shall do so not merely by way of quotation this afternoon, but directly—because I shall supplement these statements as I go along.

I am opposed to a general Federal sales tax because I think it violates the basic principle which should be followed in imposing taxes, namely, the ability-to-pay criterion. A family's need for the necessities of life is certainly no test of ability to pay. Although it is a broad generalization, there nevertheless is a great deal of truth in the general opposition to a sales tax, namely, it is a tax which taxes the need of people for the necessities of life rather than being a tax which calls upon them to support their Government in accordance with their ability to pay. Thus, a man with a large family and a low income discovers that the pennies which are taken away from him, by way of a sales tax every time he or his wife goes to the grocery store, butcher shop, shoe store, and clothing store are all out of proportion, from the standpoint of his ability to pay.

to the sales tax that is collected from his more wealthy neighbors.

Furthermore, I would point out that a tax based upon the principle of ability to pay is consistent with the taxation theory that those citizens who have been able to accumulate from our economic system through their own initiative and hard labor or through inheritance have a great interest in and a great responsibility for maintaining that system, by way of supporting the Government expenditures through reasonable taxes. I think it is very easy to, and I believe many proponents of certain types of taxes push the argument I have just mentioned entirely too far. However, I think it must be admitted that the majority of people who fall into the class of citizens generally referred to as people of moderate and wealthy means are the beneficiaries not only of their own hard labor and business acumen but also are the beneficiaries of an economic system which has made available to them economic advantages which they did not create but which have had a great deal to do with the accumulation of their property and savings, in addition to their own personal endeavors.

For example, economic developments throughout the Nation, including the development of a war, produced a tremendous shortage of steel in recent years with the result that owners of steel resources and operators of steel mills became the beneficiaries of a national economic development which they, as individuals, did not produce but which they, as individuals, were able to capitalize on because of the economic position in which they found themselves. I recognize that there are many other factors that also must be considered when one is trying to determine what is a fair tax to be imposed upon any one group but, nevertheless, I think it must be admitted that it is only fair to impose the heavier burden of taxation upon those individuals in our society who are the beneficiaries of our economic system as tested by their accumulation of property and wealth. The sales tax does not meet that test.

Now I would be the first to insist that the tax on wealth and property must not be so burdensome as to destroy incentive or as to amount in fact to a form of confiscation but, at the same time, I think, when one looks solely at the criterion of the ability to pay, it must b admitted that the sales tax is not a fair tax because it does not gage ability to pay but rather rests on a need of an individual to make purchases for necessities.

Workers and farmers generally oppose the sales tax because they see in it a passing of the tax buck, so to speak, from those most able to pay taxes on accumulated wealth to those who have, relatively speaking, little accumulated wealth. I think they are right about that. However, as I have mentioned above, I am not one who holds to the view that taxes should be levied upon the principle of soak the rich, or on the principle of soak the real-property owners. I think in many sections of the country real-property taxes are too high and income taxes are too low.

But in the District of Columbia, Mr. President, both real property and income taxes are too low.

As far as Federal taxes are concerned, you will find, if you will check into my record in the Senate, that I think there is a need for a good many changes in the Federal tax laws in order to get rid of certain gross inequities which have developed in those laws because those inequities have turned into a soak-the-rich principle.

When I say that as a matter of tax principle, ability to pay should be our prime criterion, I do not mean that unreasonable taxes should be imposed on various forms of wealth, such as real property, or inheritances, or any other source of wealth and income, for after all, the objective and incentive of our capitalistic system are that there should be an opportunity for any man of ambition and ability to accumulate wealth and to become rich.

In some quarters, one would think it were almost a crime to be a rich man. On the contrary, I think the economic objective of becoming rich should be encouraged as an incentive to young men and women, and boys and girls. But what I am saying is that there goes along with the advantages of being rich also a great social obligation to pay for the expenses of a system of government which makes it possible for such great economic opportunities to be available to people of ambition and incentive.

It will be very unfortunate for the economic welfare of our country if we ever impose a system of taxation which discourages men from trying to accumulate wealth. In a good many respects, our present tax laws are doing that very thing now. I am trying to secure the adoption of some amendments which will correct the most gross inequities of our Federal tax laws.

I refer, of course, Mr. President, to the amendments of the Committee for Economic Development which I discussed earlier in my remarks this afternoon.

Now, to go back to my discussion of the Federal sales-tax problem, I would point out that there is another theory of taxes to which the opponents of the sales tax call attention. They point out that the operation of our economic system inevitably results in certain numbers of our citizens becoming fairly well off financially, whereas a much larger number accumulate very little savings, but rather live pretty much on a day-to-day or month-to-month basis. So it is proposed to tax them. There are a great many reasons for the plight of these people. In some instances the fault lies directly with the individual in that he may be inclined to waste his money or to be a spendthrift. One who accumulates wealth usually gets the money of the spendthrift.

On the other hand, there are many people who are confronted with one adversity after another, such as illness, accidents, crop failures, and hard luck generally. There are many others who either lack the native ability or who from a combination of circumstances beyond their control make it impossible for them to do more than just about make both ends meet from pay-check period to pay-check period. But the proponents of the sales tax would tax them.

The opponents of the sales tax point out that this large segment of our population, composed of families who do not accumulate any considerable amount of savings and many of which always remain either in the debt or just barely meet the expenses of a really low standard of living, are responsible, nevertheless, for a very large share of the production of our national wealth.

Mr. President, the proponents of the sales tax frequently overlook that fact. They, too, frequently overlook the fact that the millions of American citizens who are barely able to make both ends meet, and some of whom fall in debt time and time again, after all are a terrific economic resource working in favor of the accumulators of wealth. The accumulators of wealth would not be able to build up their assets if it were not for the fact that they are dependent upon this great reservoir of labor, much of which, as the records show, does not accumulate great savings, but which finds that the limited income it takes is spent by the end of every work period, and frequently the new pay check is already heavily mortgaged.

Thus, it is argued that the large number of people who do not have the economic ability of the smaller number in our population who own a larger share of our wealth, nevertheless, are the producers of a large share of that wealth. Inconsistent and paradoxical as that argument may sound, nevertheless, any analysis of it shows that there is a great deal of soundness to it, when viewed from the fact that if all the productive efforts of all the millions of people of the United States, who have no savings or whose total assets as individuals are less than $1,000 per person; should all of a sudden completely stop their economic efforts, our entire economic system would collapse.

If you can imagine that happening, then I think you will agree with me that production of wealth in this country would practically come to a complete standstill. This is exactly what Lincoln had in mind when he pointed out that all wealth is dependent upon the mass of the people who produce it.

Mr. President, I sometimes become a little amused at the fellow who tells me that what he has accumulated is all the result of his own labor and his own initiative, and that he is a self-made man. I would not for a moment discourage initiative, ambition, and incentive. However, to many of those who boast that their accumulations of wealth are the sole product of their own hands and their own minds, I call attention to the fact that that is only partially true. They are the direct beneficiaries of the economic advantages of the community in which they live which gave them their opportunity. They are the direct beneficiaries of this reservoir of human beings whose daily work makes it possible for the economic life of the community to operate. Without that group there would be no self-made men in America, from an economic standpoint.

In view of the fact that the people in that great reservoir, as the records show, do not have the ability to pay, I think there is something grossly unfair and unjust about imposing upon them a sales tax which taxes their necessities of life. It is a reflection on the capitalistic system—and I know of no one who has defended or will defend that system more vigorously than the junior Senator from Oregon to say that in order to make it work we have to tax the necessities of life of the great reservoir of our population that does not find it possible to accumulate sufficient economic wealth so that they can fall within the brackets of even the moderate income-tax payers.

I have more confidence in the capitalistic system than that. I have more confidence in the capitalistic system than does the Washington Board of Trade. I have more confidence in the capitalistic system than do the selfish merchants of Washington, D. C., who want to impose the sales tax on the purchases of the necessities of life in the District of Columbia, and who also recognize that on the small purchases they will collect a 5 percent tax and return 2 percent of it to the Federal Government, putting in their pockets 3 percent of the tax for collection purposes. That is nice business if one can get away with it, and apparently they are going to get by with it. They should be ashamed of themselves so to distort the tax system as to produce that inequitable, unfair, and unjust result.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield for a question.

Mr. LONG. I understand that certain necessities are exempted in the bill. Is that correct?

Mr. MORSE. The sponsors have inserted what we call in big business sales leaders. Exemption of some necessities is one of the leaders in the bill. It is the "come-on" note. They have some "come-ons" in the bill, and that is one of them.

They also have another "come-on" in the bill, and that is the little kick-back for administrative costs which allegedly the merchant is going to have to pay, kicking back 3 percent of the tax on the small sales and giving the Federal Government 2 percent. That is a "come-on," too.

Is it any wonder that the businessmen of the District of Columbia are all for it? The wonder is that the Democrats, on the other side of the aisle, are for it. That is what I simply cannot get through my head.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina rose.

Mr. MORSE. I am not sure where the Senator from South Carolina stands in the party; but that is another matter. I see sitting on the other side the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGRATH], the chairman of the Democratic National Committee. We know where he stands. He is a Democrat.

Mr. McGRATH. Some of us do not understand where the Senator from Oregon stands in his party.

Mr. MORSE. I can assure the Senator that there are many in my party who do not know where I stand, but I assure the Senator, too, that millions of voters in America know where the junior Senator from Oregon stands. I want to assure the Democrats of something else. They are going to have an extremely hard time defeating me in 1952. And let me tell them, the fight I am making this afternoon against the Democratic sponsored sales tax will be great campaign ammunition in Oregon. Do not forget that.

Mr. President, I am almost through. I might as well conclude with what I have just said, but there is a closing paragraph I should like to have in the RECORD.

The point I am trying to make clear is that when I say, as a matter of tax principle, ability to pay should be our prime criterion, I do not mean that unreasonable taxes should be imposed on various forms of wealth, such as real property or inheritances or any other source of wealth and income.

As to the general sales tax, the sound argument of the opponents is that it takes too great a burden of taxation off the backs of those best able to pay taxes and places that burden on the large mass of our people who already are most responsible for the production of the wealth owned by those most able to pay taxes. It is this attempt to shift the burden of taxes from the wealthy to the poor through the medium of the sales tax, that has led to the almost universal defeat of sales-tax proposals, whenever the people themselves have had the chance to cast a direct vote on the issue. There have been some exceptions to this, but not many.

I close, Mr. President, by reiterating my original challenge. If the Democratic Party really believes in home rule for the District of Columbia, I suggest to the Chairman of the National Committee of the Democratic Party, the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGRATH], that he offer to the Senate a proposal to submit the sales tax bill to the residents of the District of Columbia for a referendum vote, and abide by the results.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Washington rises to reflect rather briefly on the fiscal problems which presently surround the District of Columbia. But before doing that I should like to make an observation on a subject which was first presented a few days ago in the Senate by the distinguished senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN].

For the past few days the junior Senator from Washington has listened with considerable interest and respect to the discussions by the senior Senator from Nevada and the senior Senator from Michigan concerning our relations with Spain. I have listened with respect because it has been my experience that these two gentlemen often speak with authority, with sincerity, and above all else with the interest of the United States paramount in their hearts. I was therefore interested to read in the press the reaction to the statements of the Secretary of State. The Secretary is quoted as saying that the attitude of the United States toward full diplomatic recognition of Spain will not change until that nation undertakes a liberalization of its domestic policies and of the civil rights of Spanish people. I am pleased by the concern of the Secretary of State and the administration which he represents for the civil rights of any nation.

I am, however, forced to admit to a large degree of confusion. I do not remember the Secretary of State or the party and administration, on whose behalf he speaks, showing any such concern for the civil rights of the Russian people when they recognized the inhuman dictators of the Kremlin back in 1933; a dictatorship Mr. President which far surpasses in horror and terror anything that has ever happened under the present Government of Spain and perhaps even surpasses the brutality of the medieval Spanish Inquisition.

Mr. President, I do not remember the Secretary of State or the administration which he represents showing any concern for the civil liberties of the people of Yugoslavia when they hastily recognized the dictatorship of Tito. I do not remember, Mr. President, any such concern by the Secretary of State or the administration and party which he represents when they recognized the dictatorships of Poland, of Rumania, of Hungary, of Bulgaria. I am forced, Mr. President, to the conclusion that the Secretary of State and the administration and party which he represents are concerned with civil liberties only when that concern coincides with the current Communist Party line, but not when it concerns the security and defense of the United States of America. If the Secretary of State sincerely believes the words which he has uttered let him show his good faith by taking the same action in the case of dictatorships which far surpass anything that this world has ever seen in Spain or elsewhere, and I mean by that the dictatorships established in recent years by the Communists.

Now Mr. President I wish to reflect on the fiscal situation which we find in the District of Columbia.

During the Eightieth Congress, which covered the years of 1947 and 1948, the junior Senator from Washington was highly privileged in having been the chairman of the Fiscal Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia. Out of this sometimes frustrating but always worth-while experience came knowledge and positive convictions concerning the financial needs and requirements of the district of Columbia and a firm determination to be of service to our magnificent Capital City whenever that was possible. Perhaps I can be of some small service to the District of Columbia at this time as I speak in support of the pending revenue bill which has been so ably presented by the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], and by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGRATH].

I think it will be helpful if I reflect briefly on how a sales tax need was established, when it was first advanced, the character and ability of those within the District who have supported the sales tax proposal, where the District would find itself today if a companion measure had been approved by the Senate a year ago, where the District finds itself because that measure was not approved, and what will the financial status of the District be a year or more from now if the pending measure is either laid aside or defeated.

It continues to surprise and concern me that some Senators are in opposition to a sales tax for the District of Columbia. Unless I am mistaken no Senator has ever appeared as a witness before the Fiscal Subcommittee of the Senate District Committee to express his opposition to a sales tax. It is only after the committee has approved and reported a sales-tax measure that some Senators seek to defeat it. There is no doubt in my mind concerning the sincerity of the opponents for I take for granted that they are expressing what they consider to be the sentiment of their home constituencies.

I think we had a remarkable illustration of that fact just a few minutes ago. The distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] in opposing the pending measure, and in an answer to an inquiry or observation made to him by the able Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH] said, as I remember, that the speech the Senator from Oregon was giving this afternoon in opposition to the pending measure would make first-class political ammunition to be used in a coming campaign—where? Not in the District of Columbia where the sales tax we talk about is to be established, if approved, but 3,000 miles away from here, in a sovereign and magnificent commonwealth known as Oregon.

It seems to me to be a fact, however, that the opponents of a sales tax are not expressing the feelings of a majority of those who are residents of the District of Columbia. It is likewise true that few of the opponents are members of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I even consider it to be a probable fact that few among the opponents have ever looked at a District budget or considered and studied the staggering and difficult financial problems which confront the District. For the most part the opponents to a sales tax are simply opposed to a sales tax in principle and probably they feel, as I think the distinguished Senator fror. Oregon strongly inferred, that if a sales tax can be defeated in the District of Columbia that it will make less likely the adoption of a sales tax for the States from which they come. From my point of view this approach to the serious financial problems and burdens of the Nation's Capital City is extremely unfair to its local government and to the nearly 1,000,000 citizens who live within its confines. As these most distinguished opponents endeavor to defeat the pending measure I would suggest to the Senate that unless a more reasonable proposal can be immediately advanced the Senate should approve the pending bill without delay if the wish of the Senate is to continue to extend and improve the required services which are given by this city's administration today to those who live within our jurisdiction.

If we take our minds off the primary consideration—and I think there is only one—which is the good of the District of Columbia, we can too easily create and be responsible for financial trouble of such proportions that no solution will present itself for many years to come.

I am inclined to agree with those Senators who believe that the Federal Government ought to increase its present annual payment to the District of Columbia. During the Eightieth Congress the annual payment was increased from $8,000,000 to its present $12,000,000. It could well be more, but how much more it ought to be I am not qualified to say. It happens to be my considered view that we ought first to require the District of Columbia to avail itself of every reasonable tax source before we seek the easier way out through turning to the Federal Treasury. A few words on the fiscal relationship between the District of Columbia and the Federal Government will suffice for the moment.

FISCAL RELATIONS WITH THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

To me and to many others there are compelling reasons why the Federal Government should not permit the residents of this city to assume all the extra financial burdens which have been brought about mostly by the legislation of the Congress during recent years. We in this Congress pass the legislation. They of the District pay for it. We do not often enough stop to provide means with which to satisfy the obligations. We sometimes impose on the District heavy burdens without consulting with the Commissioners of the District. It should be remembered, however, that the Federal Government's obligation is not and should not be based on the District's ability to function without assistance. This obligation should not be considered as a contribution, but it should be acknowledged and recognized and considered to be what it is, a payment which is due to the District of Columbia.

Washington, D. C., is national in character, and the Nation should share in its maintenance and upkeep, certainly to the extent of those measures enacted here and those improvements made under the direction of this Congress that a city of the same size in the States would not ordinarily be expected even to consider.

Just what the payment should be and the type of formula to be adopted has been a matter of controversy for a long period of time, and, in all probability, it will be essential to have further studies and investigations made, as has been suggested by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], before we can arrive at the fair share of Federal participation.

My primary point, however, is this: I do not believe that the District of Columbia, or the people resident in this District, or the millions who enjoy its facilities as the Nation's Capital, should be penalized because of the inability of Congress to reach such an equitable agreement.

Under the Constitution we act as the municipal council and the State legislature for the District. We are not considering a helpless indigent city, but we are legislating for one with power and influence, wealth, and ability, combining all the aspects of a State, county, and municipal government. There is no city on the face of the earth to compare with the potential and actual might and influence of Washington, D. C. This city, State, and county government—for it is all of those things—is a creature of the Congress and it partakes of the characteristics of a city, county, and State, and renders services on this basis to the people living here. From 660,000 individuals, according to the official census in 1940, the population leaped to an estimated 938,000 on VJ-day.

During the war years many services were necessarily curtailed, and the cost of government was somewhat reduced. But, with the resumption of insistent public demand for full scale municipal service following the cessation of hostilities, it early became clear to the Commissioners that a review of the tax structure of the District of Columbia should be and it was undertaken. In May 1945 the Commissioners appointed a committee of District officials to make such a review and to submit recommendations for such changes as might be required to enable the District of Columbia to meet the increased costs occasioned both by the mounting population and the higher costs for personnel and materials. Who constituted this committee? I have not heard its membership named on this floor, though I have heard it said by some of the opponents of the pending measure that no consideration has actually been given to furthering a careful study of the financial needs of the District. The committee was first made up of the Corporation Counsel as chairman, the Assistant Engineer Commissioner, the Assessor, the Budget Officer, the Assistant Superintendent of Schools, the Auditor, and the Director of Highways.

After this official-family committee had made preliminary studies of the subject, and before any final conclusions were arrived at, the Commissioners felt that it was desirable to secure a cross section of public opinion, and accordingly appointed a number of representative citizens also to serve on the committee. These were B. M. McKelway, president of the Board of Trade; Claude W. Turner, vice president of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association; Bruce Baird, president of the Bankers Association; Wilbur S. Finch, president of the Federation of Citizens Association; Woolsey H. Hall, president of the Federation of Civic Associations; Fred S. Walker, publisher of the Trades Unionist; Edward Carr, president of the Home Builders Association; J. M. Heiser, president of the Federation of Businessmen's Associations; James C. Wilkes, Bar Association; and Robert V. Fleming, president of the Riggs National Bank. The full committee—and it was full in the sense of ability and in the sense that it represents, so far as I have been able to determine, most of the interests in this community—gave careful consideration to the sources from which additional revenue might be obtained, studied almost every conceivable method of taxation, and selected those which it believed would produce the greatest amount of revenue, distributed in the most equitable manner.

After that committee made its report, but before any action was taken thereon, the Commissioners for the District of Columbia took the next step, as they should have done, and held a public hearing to which was invited all interested individual citizens, as well as representatives of citizen, civic, and trade organizations, all of whom were given a full opportunity to express their opinions on the tax program. I do not know who were in attendance at that public hearing; but I venture the guess—and I should like to be informed otherwise if I am incorrect in that respect—that obviously no Senator attended that meeting to advise the citizens against the adoption of a sales tax. At a public meeting to which all interested persons were cordially invited, probably there were none of those who now, for reasons sufficient unto themselves, say we must disregard the recommendations of the committee which would lead to the adoption of a sales tax, but that we must find revenue, in the amount of many millions of dollars, from sources as yet not only undisclosed but certainly unagreed upon.

At the conclusion of those hearings the Commissioners of the District of Columbia approved the tax program proposed and forwarded it to the Congress.

The sales tax we are debating this afternoon was included in that program in 1945 and is the principal part of it. That committee, which was appointed by the Commissioners in 1945, was composed of representative citizens and taxpayers of the District of Columbia, as well as of a number of District of Columbia officials; and the committee recommended that additional revenue be sought in seven different directions. Because the problem of what to do with the finances of the District of Columbia will continue to be before us in future years, I think I might state for the RECORD what those avenues of tax availability were considered to be by the committee to which I have referred. They were as follows:

First. Broadening the District income tax.

Second. Levying a 2-percent sales tax on all tangible personal property sold at retail, with food for human consumption in the home, medicines, and sales under 25 cents exempt.

Third. Levying a tax on unincorporated business at the same rate—5 percent of net income—as that imposed on corporations.

Fourth. Increasing tax on spirits, beer, and wine.

Fifth. Levying a 2-percent tax on utility bills.

Sixth. Levying a 1-cent tax on each package of cigarettes.

Seventh. Levying a 10-percent tax on the purchase price of each ticket to a place of amusement.

In February 1947 the Commissioners transmitted to the Speaker of the House a bill entitled "To Provide Revenue for the District of Columbia, and for Other Purposes."

In March and April of 1947 a Joint Subcommittee on Fiscal Affairs of the Committees on the District of Columbia of both the House and Senate conducted thorough and extensive hearings on the question of raising revenue for the District of Columbia. I think the record indicates that in February 1947 124 witnesses were heard before that Fiscal Affairs Joint Subcommittee. So far as the Senate side of those hearings was concerned, I do not recall that a single Senator or a single Representative appeared at any time during that month to express his opposition to a sales tax.

In 1948 quite a few District sales-tax bills were introduced. One bill—H. R. 6759, Eightieth Congress, second session—passed the House June 8, 1948. In the Senate the bill was designated as "S. 843, Eightieth Congress, second session," and it was reported favorably by the Senate committee on June 3, 1948. That bill, with all its hopes, including the hopes for the raising of revenue with which we could not only have balanced the budget of the District of Columbia but also could have increased wages and salaries, where increases were required, and could have extended services where needed, was defeated, as most Senators will recall, in the dying hours of the Eightieth Congress, in the month of July 1948.

Mr. President, not only some Senators who for a long time have been interested in this problem, but also most of the citizens of the District of Columbia, as well, might be interested to know where their and our District of Columbia would be today if the sales-tax bill had been passed by the Senate in July 1948 and had become law. It was estimated that the sales-tax bill which the House of Representatives in the Eightieth Congress passed, would yield for the District of Columbia $6,000,000 in 1949, and $13,500,000 in 1950. Under that bill, the collections would have been made quarterly, rather than monthly, as provided in the pending measure.

I was one of those who, in terms of figures, were convinced that if the sales-tax bill had been passed in July 1948, it would have produced, at a conservative estimate, $6,000,000 in the year 1949. It is obvious and clear to all of us that from a sales tax which was defeated in 1948 we are not going to derive a penny's worth of benefit in 1949. The least we can say is that in recent months we had an opportunity to raise $6,000,000, but we passed it by, and therefore we are subject to all the resulting headaches which necessarily come from that loss of revenue, which this city from within its own citizenry could reasonably have provided for a more proper conduct of its municipal business.

The expenditures in the general fund are estimated at $86,210,000 for the fiscal year 1949. The revenue availability, including the liquidation of over $6,000,000 in securities for public works, amounts to $86 527,000. There was a liquidation of those $6,000,000 worth of securities, or before this year is over the liquidation will become complete in order to meet prevailing obligations. I myself do not like to think about that liquidation, because those securities had been set aside for a rainy day, and for constructing and making possible some capital improvements. But the liquidation of those securities had to be made in order to meet the fiscal needs for current operations.

There is not a single city in the United States, to my knowledge, which could long survive with the type of management which has been given to this great municipality. If the sales tax had been enacted in the Eightieth Congress, there would have been an additional $6,000,000 available in 1949, or a total of $92,527,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. I am glad to yield for a question.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator whether he knows of any city the size of Washington that does not have a bonded indebtedness?

Mr. CAIN. I cannot say that I do.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. What is the Senator's view in regard to the District being able to float bonds for permanent improvements?

Mr. CAIN. In my opinion we should first straighten out the prevailing tax structure, or the lack of one, within the District of Columbia, before we concern ourselves too much with the floating of bonds as an easy way out.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Is it not true that every year there would be available several million dollars which could be devoted to permanent improvements within the District?

Mr. CAIN. I think that is correct.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. How do other cities finance permanent improvements?

Mr. CAIN. They do it in a number of different ways.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It is done mostly through bond issues, is it not?

Mr. CAIN. A good part of it is; yes.

It is estimated that salary increases for District employees would have cost approximately $5,000,000 and increased the obligations to $91,210,000, leaving a surplus of $1,317,000 at the end of 1949.

In the fiscal year 1950, the estimated obligations in the general fund amount to $88,376,000. If the pay raises had been effective, these obligations would have been increased by approximately $5,700,000, or a total of $94,076,000. The estimated revenues from present sources for 1950 amount to $80,950,000. If the sales tax had been enacted, this would have been increased by $13,500,000 with a balance of $1,317,000 brought forward from 1949, which would have resulted in an availability of $95,767,000, leaving a surplus of $1,691,000 at the end of 1950. But, a sales tax was defeated during the latter part of July 1948. I think a good many of us are interested in the question, Where is the District of Columbia today, by reason of the failure to enact the sales tax?

Although the general fund budget of the District of Columbia is balanced for the fiscal year 1949, the failure to grant pay increases similar to those given to Federal employees has caused the resignation of numbers of employees and increasing difficulties in recruitment of certain personnel.

Because of the failure to enact the sales-tax legislation last July, many hundreds of individuals receiving relief from the District of Columbia have been forced to subsist on 1946 relief levels. I think we should bear in mind that last year, when there was an obvious need for additional revenue for the District, the Senate thought it proper to defeat a proposed sales-tax measure, but it replaced it with nothing else.

Because of the failure to pass the sales-tax measure last July not a single additional school building or room is included in this year's budget, even in the face of testimony by an expert hired by this Congress to make a school survey showing that hundreds of our children are not receiving proper education.

Because of its failure of passage, the District authorities were unable to consider any additional capital improvements, although they are fully cognizant of the intolerable situation existing in some of our welfare institutions.

Because of its failure they could not and did not to any appreciable extent increase police protection, although crime is rampant and mounting in the District of Columbia.

These are but a few of the evil and sad consequences which have come about as a result of the failure of the Congress to provide the District with authority either to increase its revenue or to appropriate funds to take the place of revenue, which can, and from my point of view should, be derived from the establishment of a sales tax for the District of Columbia.

I have but one other question to raise and to answer, for the information of the Senate. Senators must be concerned with the question, "What will be the condition of the District of Columbia in the fiscal year 1950, in the event the bill H. R. 3704 is not enacted?"

The requests of the Commissioners for the fiscal year 1950 as presented to the Senate Appropriations Committee show a deficit of approximately $7,500,000. This budget was considered an inadequate submission. It made no provision for many acute needs of the District of Columbia. If H. R. 3704 is not enacted this budget must of a necessity be further reduced, which would be extremely detrimental to the people of the District, including those of us who are in this body. Furthermore, and I think it will become increasingly more important, pay increases must necessarily be delayed in the future as they have been in recent months, if this legislation is not passed at this session of the Congress.

Eighteen thousand employees, including school teachers, policemen, and firemen, including every public servant, regardless of his task, within the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia, will, if the pending measure fails, be denied the salary increases which Congress enacted in July 1948, which were intended, as was plainly said, to cover the personnel of the District of Columbia as well as Federal employees working in the District of Columbia.

Because of the failure of the Senate to enact legislation proposed by the Senate District Committee last year, many of the 18,000 employees have become disheartened, discouraged, and understandably bitter at their failure to receive the pay increases which went so rapidly and so fully to those employed on either side of the District of Columbia workers.

I think the Senate, Mr. President, has quite a great deal to think about with reference to its obligations to the District of Columbia. Speaking only for myself, I think the Senators who are managing the pending bill have proved, (1) that the legislation is reasonable; (2) that it is needed; and (3) that it will be a very great pity and a loss to everyone if the pending bill is defeated, or if, on the assumption that it may be defeated, comparable revenue-raising legislation is not approved by the Congress and signed by the President of the United States.

Mr. President, in closing, I want to invite the attention of the Senate to a series of short articles on the fiscal situation in which the District of Columbia finds itself involved. These articles, six in number, and bearing the titles "A Fairer Deal Here at Home," "Spending Your Tax Dollar," "Borrowing Could Help," "Our Shrinking Taxable Real Estate," "Real Estate—the Tax Goat," and "A Sales Tax Is Necessary," were written by a Mr. John W. Thompson, Jr., who is a writer for the Washington Evening Star. I think that any objectively thinking and disinterested Senator who finds it convenient and possible to read these articles will have a more thorough understanding of the problems which involve our city of Washington, D. C., and will secure from that knowledge a determination which is comparable to mine and that of other Senators to make as certain as we can the finding of a solution for the needs of this great city before many days shall have gone by.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask that these articles be inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that they be incorporated in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Star of January 24, 1949]

A FAIRER DEAL HERE AT HOME

Beginning today the Star will print on this page a series of five articles by John W. Thompson, Jr., bearing on Washington's tangled budget problem.

The articles touch merely some of the highlights and are designed primarily to explain some interesting charts prepared by the District Budget Officer, Walter L. Fowler.

Readers may find them interesting as background for the discussions at the Capitol this winter over ways and means to make both ends meet in running this expensive city. The problem is no simple one. Congress must find the best and fairest means of raising some $15,000,000 to meet obligations, over and above existing revenue, arising in this fiscal year and the one beginning next July.

Some of the revenue should come from increasing the Federal payment. Most of it is apt to come from new and higher taxes. It is in local taxation, especially, that Washingtonians have a right to expect a fairer deal than they have received from Congress in the past decade. Functioning in respect to the District of Columbia as a local legislature, Congress should approach its task as any other local legislature would, from the point of view of the people to be taxed.

The past decade has shown a dangerous trend in local taxation. It has resulted in placing too large a part of the burden on too few of the people. The local income tax is a singular example of discriminatory taxation. By its wholesale exemptions, particularly of Federal employees claiming legal residence elsewhere, it has left only some 95,000 persons, in a population exceeding 850,000, affected by the local income tax. The tax does not produce the money it should. It is probably the most difficult of all taxes to administer. It is indefensible in that it requires one man to pay the tax and exempts his neighbor, though both enjoy equally the services of the community. It should either be repealed or it should be amended to include everybody.

The real-estate tax has become another discriminatory tax, insofar as its share of the total tax load is concerned. It is now carrying about 52.72 percent of the local tax burden. It is paid directly by about 120,000 persons and as a rule these are the persons liable to the local income tax. The real-estate tax itself is a high tax when the standard of assessment—compared with assessments elsewhere—is considered.

Less than half the land area in Washington (not counting streets) is now taxable. Yet this 48.7 percent of the area is assessed for taxation at a higher total figure than all of nearby Baltimore. Washington's fraction of taxable land and improvements is more highly assessed than any of the cities between 500,000 and 1,000,000 population in the country. Its per capita assessment, with half the area exempt, is second only to New York.

The taxable area is steadily decreasing. Below is a chart, prepared by Mr. Fowler, which shows the size of the slice that has been taken from taxable real estate principally by the Federal Government in the past 14 years. This "slice"—the white, unshaded area—represents the 2,942 acres, or 16.35 percent withdrawn from taxation since July 1, 1934:

As Washington is the seat of the Federal Government, it is natural to expect continued Government expansion within the District. This type of tax exemption will be increased by purchases of property by tax-exempt institutions and by foreign countries as sites for embassies and legations. No one can reasonably complain about that trend. The needs of the Government in its Capital City are paramount. The point is that this condition must be recognized by Congress and faced realistically. Congress cannot in justice, or as a practical matter, expect the diminishing taxable area to carry as great a proportion of the tax load as in the past, without highly injurious results. And it must increase the payment it makes in lieu of the taxes lost.

Taxes in the downtown business area of Washington amounted to about 8.5 percent of annual rentals before the war. According to the District Assessor, the increases in assessments and rates have brought them to about 15 and even 20 percent now. Comprising only 1.7 percent of the total taxable area, the downtown business section pays about 21 percent of the total real-estate tax. Further real-estate-tax increases may hasten the trend toward decentralization, with the blighting effect on productive property that has become a major problem in many other cities. It is easy to kill the goose that lays the golden egg.

Apartment houses have received substantial increases in assessments and taxes in the past few years. Many are passed on to tenants. In the past fiscal year 19,351 applications for higher rentals, based on tax increases, were sent to the Rent Administrator. About 90 percent were granted, the great majority being in smaller apartments and private dwellings. Higher maintenance costs under rent control have brought complaints from tenants, based on lessened services and neglected repairs. Such factors have been mentioned as contributing to sales of apartments as co-op. Some owners want to get out from under.

Private home owners have had to pay an average increase of 29 percent in taxes in the past 2 years. A majority of new homes constructed in Washington during the past 3 years, according to the Assessor, have been small homes, sold to people in the low-income brackets. The last increase in the real-estate tax brought an unprecedented volume of complaints, especially from these owners.

The following table shows very clearly what has taken place in the past 8 years in development beyond the District of Columbia's fixed boundaries. New residential units in the District of Columbia, in number and in dollar volume, have steadily declined. The real increase is taking place in Montgomery, Prince Georges, Arlington, and Alexandria. (Fairfax figures are not complete and have not been included):

Review of residential building activities, District of Columbia and adjacent counties

	District of Columbia		Adjacent counties
	Units	Valuation	Units	Valuation
1940	8,072	$28,838,505	6,860	$29,988,166
1941	9,720	31,668,705	10,511	42,580,200
1942	9,032	23,640,490	10,665	37,364,144
1943	2,662	13,109,350	6,557	22,593,841
1944	2,111	6,295,361	1,688	6,161,755
1945	2,912	9,627,250	2,289	12,592,530
1946	3,017	13,814,157	7,205	46,174,578
1947	4,287	23,983,722	14,430	106,616,883
1948	3,797	22,518,736	14,862	110,815,442

The District's tax sources have always been limited. It is a residential, not a commercial, city. Its boundaries cannot be extended to take in new, tax-paying suburbs. Its taxable area is shrinking and a discriminatory income tax exempts a large proportion of its residents.

Yet it must meet the needs of a greatly increased population and its government has become enormously expensive. That is one reason why a sales tax has become unavoidable. The amount of taxes paid for support of the District must be increased by enlarging the number of taxpayers and decreasing the proportion of the total burden that is borne by a relatively small number of taxpayers and a diminishing area of taxable property.

SPENDING YOUR TAX DOLLAR—PRESENT COST OF RUNNING OUR CITY IS EXCEEDING THE AMOUNT OF AVAILABLE REVENUE

(By John W. Thompson, Jr.)

Financially, the District's slip is showing again.

For the second straight year President Truman has sent to the Capitol a city budget well beyond the city's ability to pay.

He has cut an expenditure garment for the District and provided at least $8,000,000, according to the official prediction, too little to cover it.

Should District employees be granted a cost-of-living pay increase for the year beginning next July 1 similar to that granted Federal employees this year, the gap between expected income and expenditures would widen by $5,000,000. Made retroactive to last July 1, such a pay boost would add still another $5,000,000.

Thus even allowing the usual leeway for District forecasters, traditionally conservative when it comes to predicting revenues 18 months in advance, the deficit is apt to lie between six and eight millions, plus whatever happens on the pay increase.

Briefly the problem may be summed up in this way:

The city pays for its operations out of three funds—the water, highway, and general funds. Under the new 1950 budget proposals the water fund will be able to pay its way by dint of the increased water rates put in this year, the allocation of $1,000,000 to water purposes from the annual Federal payment to the city, and the sale of some invested securities saved up. The highway fund may even show a surplus of some $200,000 which, however, may not under the law be diverted for other purposes. The shortage is in the general fund and this is the fund against which most public services here are chargeable.

This time last year all three funds faced deficits. Tax legislation last summer increasing the gasoline tax a penny and boosting water rates prevented deficits in the highway and water funds.

This general fund shortage is the crux of the local fiscal dilemma for the fiscal year 1950.

There are just three ways to meet this situation:

1. Through major cuts in expenses chargeable to the general fund.

2. Through long-term borrowing from the Federal Government.

3. Through new legislation to increase revenues.

This third solution is suggested by the President in the new budget. Each will be considered separately in this series.

Before deciding to make up the deficit by cutting expenses chargeable to the general fund, look at the chart above and see how the general fund tax dollar is being spent. Note that major cuts here would result in major curtailments in the schools program, public safety (police and fire), health services, welfare services, recreation services.

Bear in mind that the Community Chest drive for private funds to supplement many of these public services fell short and that hence private effort must be curtailed.

Then ask yourself if these municipal services are adequate in your section of the city.

Note that less than 3 cents of the tax dollar goes for administration and remember that the budget requests submitted by President Truman to Congress have in most cases already been trimmed or slashed by the Commissioners from the original requests of their department heads.

Certainly there will be cuts made at the Capitol. There always are. But there will be additions too. The final figure is not apt to be much under the $103,000,000 in the President's requests unless taxpayers are willing or compelled to go without city services they are receiving or have demanded.

BORROWING COULD HELP—PLENTY OF PRECEDENT, ALSO WARNINGS, FOR FINANCING COST OF WASHINGTON IMPROVEMENTS THAT WAY

(By John W. Thompson, Jr.)

There is plenty of precedent in recent years for mild borrowing by the District to relieve financial pressure.

There is also in the city's past history eloquent warning against overborrowing.

It is against this background that the taxpayer today should decide how far the District should go, if at all, in seeking a long-term low interest or interest-free Treasury loan to offset the threatening general fund deficit for the year beginning July 1.

Officials say this deficit will be at least $8,000,000 and may be much more, depending upon whether Congress grants to District employees the cost-of-living pay raise it gave last year to Federal workers.

Obviously mild borrowing for new construction could release for other purposes the money now allocated to those projects.

Historically, the city was in debt almost constantly from its founding in 1800 to 1878, when the present commission form of government was created. Twice in that period it was ruined by borrowing. Both times the Federal Government bailed it out. Yet both instances were the result of the failure of the Federal Government to share with local residents the burden of developing a National Capital. It left them to wallow in the mud of Washington's unpaved streets.

During these experiences the Federal Government apparently learned that it was bad business to allow the District to borrow from private lenders. At any rate all loans to the city since then have been Federal loans.

From 1878 to 1921 there was no need for the District to borrow because the Federal Government under the law was paying half the cost of Capital development. From 1921 to 1925 the Federal share was reduced to 40 percent. Since 1925 an arbitrary lump sum has been appropriated annually which in recent years has represented only a fraction of the cost of Capital operation and improvement.

District borrowing in recent years probably dates from 1930 when the Capper-Cramton Act authorized appropriation of $16,000,000 for park land and playground purchase to be repaid by the District without interest at the rate of about $1,000,000 a year. To date $11,499,000 has been appropriated in small sums. Of this the District has spent some $10,235,000 and repaid $9,137,000. Thus only $1,100,000 remains to be repaid.

During the thirties and President Roosevelt's recovery program the city received public-works grants and loans along with the States. Total loans of about $17,000,000 were accumulated at less than 2 percent interest.

After Pearl Harbor came the so-called black-out loans to finance civilian defense. These totaled eventually about $2,000,000 and also bore interest at slightly above 1 percent.

Still another loan for selected public improvements was made available to the city in 1942 under the Lanham Act. This totaled about $1,700,000 at less than 2 percent and all but $185,000 has been repaid.

The wartime clamp-down on construction and the diversion of personnel and supplies to defense purposes left the Commissioners with a big cash surplus they could not spend and a vast backlog of unmet construction needs as the Capital population swelled from 600,000 to nearly 1,000,000.

Using the surplus the Commissioners paid off the PWA debt, the black-out and Capper-Cramton obligations. They salted the $10,000,000 remainder away in Federal securities against the day when they would have to catch up on city construction.

With relaxation of building controls, however, high prices intervened to cancel out the savings. The Commissioners, basing their estimates on higher-than-prewar prices, still found no one willing to bid on city projects. Projects once started had to have their cost limits raised. A cost-of-living pay boost was given city employees by Congress along with Federal employees. Thus did the surplus evaporate.

Two years ago the subject of long-term loans from the Federal Government to finance improvements in the water system was broached in Congress by the city heads. Other arrangements were made.

Today there is at the District Building perhaps more than a little sentiment that pay-as-you-go is dead. That if the city is ever to cut down the backlog of war-accumulated needs a little judicious borrowing from the Federal Government à la Capper-Cramton or à la PWA may be desirable. The Board of Education, and Superintendent of Schools Hobart Corning, have boldly stated their belief that loans offer a solution to the problems of the schools. The list may be expected to grow.

OUR SHRINKING TAXABLE REAL ESTATE—LESS THAN HALF CITY'S AREA IS TAXED NOW—INCREASED RATES WOULD BE DANGEROUS

(By John W. Thompson, Jr)

A real danger in the District's impending money crisis is that Congress will take the easy way out and simply raise the real-estate-tax rate.

This has been the pattern established in the two most recent fiscal crises—the late thirties and last year.

In each instance Congress became the battleground between sales- and income-tax advocates, who ended by passing a grossly discriminatory income levy and kicking the real-estate rate a little higher.

Both Budget Officer Walter L. Fowler and Assessor Edward A. Dent are convinced that any further increase in property taxes would hasten the decentralization of high-value downtown business to the lower tax havens of the nearby counties.

Thus, far from adding to District income, a realty-rate boost might well lead to a collapse of the firm property tax base upon which the whole revenue structure is mounted.

The key to this situation is wrapped up in Washington's nonextensible boundaries and the progressive removal from taxation of land acquired by the Government.

The boundaries of the District are fixed in the Constitution. Therefore the city may not, as many others have done, extend its limits to include choice taxable suburbs.

At the same time the Federal Government has been acquiring more and more land for Federal purposes as it expands. This land, mostly in the high-value area, is thus withdrawn from local taxation and the value of the remaining acreage increased.

Today less than half of the land area here is taxable. The percentage is 48.7.

Of the nontaxable acreage 42.2 percent is Federal property, 3.4 is city government property, and 5.7 percent is private exempt land used for church, educational, benevolent, or diplomatic purposes.

Examination of the chart will show the steady trend of Federal acquisition during the past decade or so while the other exempt categories have increased only slightly.

The complaint of District officials is not that the Federal Government has taken this land. This is the National Capital, and where else should the Government establish? The complaint is that having taken this land for perfectly valid purposes and withdrawing it from local taxation, injury is heaped on injury by boosting taxes on the decreasing remainder to make up for what was taken.

This situation, plus the legal requirement that property here be assessed at full value, has resulted in the anomaly of the nonindustrial taxable half of Washington being valued for tax purposes at more than almost the whole of teeming, industrial Baltimore.

Here 48.7 percent of the city is valued this year at $1,594,242,065. All taxable Baltimore this year is valued at $1,399,559,099.

Nor is the flight of business to the suburbs imaginary. Already major stores have acquired or have planned nearby branches. A survey made by Mr. Dent of comparable properties in the District and nearby revealed that in most cases the real-estate tax paid here was higher than that in the adjacent counties of Maryland and Virginia.

In one instance a chain store here was found located on ground valued at $150 a square foot. A store owned by the same chain was located in Maryland on land valued at $5 a square foot. Although the real-estate tax of the District store was much higher, the gross business done by the Maryland branch was considerably more, Mr. Dent reported.

Downtown properties here, on less than 2 percent of the land area, make up more than 20 percent of the realty-tax income to the city. If and when they go, the District financial stability will go with them.

[From the Washington Star of January 27, 1949]

REAL ESTATE—THE TAX GOAT—DEPENDENCE ON IT AS A REVENUE PRODUCER IS GREATER THAN ANY FAIR DEAL WOULD PERMIT

(By John W. Thompson, Jr.)

There is and seemingly always has been at the Capitol a prevailing belief that the District real-estate tax is too low.

This has stemmed in part from the rate—now $2 per $100 of assessed value—which is less than the rate in cities of similar size.

In other cases perhaps Members of Congress have actually paid higher taxes on property owned elsewhere than on comparable property here.

The tax is computed by multiplying the rate by the assessed value of a piece of property. A piece of property here assessed at $10,000 would be taxed at $200 at the present rate. A comparable house in Podunk assessed at $5,000 for tax purposes but with double the rate here—$4 per $100—would pay $200 also.

Thus a comparison of tax rates alone proves absolutely nothing.

In the matter of assessments, the District is required by law to assess at full true value and no less. Many other communities value properties for tax purposes from 40 percent on up. It is 40 percent in nearby Arlington.

This does not mean that the city assesses at the market value of property. Neither District financial institutions nor Assessor Edward A. Dent construe the postwar inflated property values as true values.

But, as Mr. Dent has pointed out, an assessment is only an opinion. Therefore even among cities where it is supposed to be at full value, assessment of comparable properties can and does vary.

In many places where the job of assessor is political the jobholder has an incentive to make that theoretical full value low enough to satisfy the voter. Mr. Dent's post here is not subject to election.

Thus the only fair basis for comparing real-estate tax burdens is not the rate, not the assessment or its relation to true value, but rather the actual tax paid on comparable properties.

But even this sort of comparison does not clearly reveal whether a real-estate tax burden is too low. Is it low because some other comparable property can be found somewhere where the tax is higher? Or is the higher one too high?

The test of the adequacy of a property levy would seem better reflected in the proportion it supports of the total income than whether it is higher or lower than some city of the same size.

Cities have traditionally depended upon the real-estate tax for the bulk of their revenue especially since the States and counties have tended to reserve for themselves other sources of income.

Only a few weeks ago representatives of 9,500 cities meeting here emphasized that the day has passed when this condition can continue. Other sources of revenue must be made available to cities, they declared.

The charts above indicate the share which taxes on real property play in the total District income picture and also the share with relation to taxes alone.

Remember that the realty tax percentages shown in these charts represent almost 100 percent collection by the assessor. The actual collection figure of realty taxes due since 1877 is 96.96—which Mr. Dent unhesitatingly calls the best collection record in the world for a major city.

A large part of this unquestionably is due to the fact that the levy here has not reached the exorbitant stage. If it should, then Mr. Dent predicts collections will come much harder and more property will be sold annually at auction for unpaid taxes.

"It's not what you carry on the books that counts," he said, "it's the cash you take in at the counter."

Last year only 2,500 of some 150,000 pieces of taxable property were put up for auction for unpaid taxes.

Theoretically, the most equitable tax program would seem to be that which levies fairly against property, ability to pay, special excises, and broad base coverage. In this way the majority of the residents would contribute to the city's support pretty much in relation to their ability to pay.

Many other cities because of the claims of counties and States on levies cannot do this and have to kick up their realty rates and assessments to meet their mounting costs. The District, if Congress will permit, has in its unique, city-State situation the opportunity to establish a balanced tax program at a single level, without overburdening property, income, or commodities subject to excise.

A SALES TAX IS NECESSARY—OTHERS HAVE COME TO IT AND FOUND IT PRODUCTIVE—THE DISTRICT HAS NO REASONABLE SUBSTITUTE

(By John W. Thompson, Jr.)

It is almost certain to take new revenue legislation to balance the 1950 District budget.

This is because—

1. It is going to prove almost impossible to cut from the budget items totaling $8,000,000—the amount of the expected deficit by June 30, 1950—without seriously hurting public services here.

2. While Federal loans for new construction may permit reallocation of funds now allotted to these projects in the budget, in the end new construction is going to add to the operating costs of the city. This will require a stable tax support rather than temporary relief. It is clearly unsound to use borrowed money for operating expenses.

This new revenue legislation could be a sales tax, a combined sales-income tax, increased excises such as the liquor tax, an increase in the annual Federal payment toward city expenses, or a reasonable combination of all these.

The Commissioners are counting on the sales tax as the one levy they know of that can definitely raise most of the money they need. They are also believed likely to pair with it a new income tax to replace the unsatisfactory one they got from the last Congress.

This combination would eliminate the present exemption of Federal employees who claim legal residence elsewhere. It would also sweeten the unpopular sales tax for its opponents, the city heads hope.

At present District officials are talking in terms of a 2-percent sales tax with a tax on incomes over $5,000. Their bill, which passed the House in the last Congress, called for a similar sales-tax rate but a tax on incomes over $8,000. Assessor Edward A. Dent has expressed his feeling that anyone making

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA LIBRARIES

$5,000 ought to pay an income tax. The Commissioners, so far, have not acted on this.

The device of the combined sales-income levy originated in 1938 with Dr. Chester Pond, New York tax expert, who made a study of the situation here.

At the time it was thought his solution was ideal for the Capital, in that the sales tax would reach the large transient population which uses city services and pays nothing toward them. At the same time the income tax would levy against ability to pay and thus temper some of the objection to a sales tax. His original exemption, however, was $14,000, which, he figured, would eliminate the controversy over taxing Federal employees locally, since Federal salaries rarely reached that level.

Modifications of this plan, consisting chiefly of lower exemption figures, were defeated then and in the last Congress.

Labor and liberal groups—traditional foes of the sales tax—are expected to renew the fight. In general they may be expected to support a new income tax with higher rates and no exemption of Federal workers. Similar attempts to broaden the local income levy coverage have always been defeated since the first income tax was enacted in 1939. Such legislation has already been introduced in the new Congress by Representative KLEIN, Democrat, of New York.

Old arguments against the sales tax are that it hits the poor man harder than the rich; that it is a tax on spending which the poor have to do with their earnings while not touching savings which are open to the wealthy; and that, in effect, it is a wage cut for the poor man.

Proponents contend that the tax is a proven money raiser, easy to administer and collect; that it is peculiarly adapted to Washington; that with proper exemptions it is not an excessive burden on low-income groups; that the rich man buys more taxable items anyway.

The Commissioners may propose increases in the liquor taxes to help offset the deficit. But even doubling the levies, which are lower than those nearby, would not yield enough to absorb it all. The estimate to the last Congress on doubling the liquor tax was $2,800,000. Liquor interests may be expected to fight this proposal if it comes up again.

An increase in the Federal payment is indicated. If millions are to be raised in new taxes, the Federal payment should be increased in some proportion. There was no opposition to increasing it by $4,000,000 last year. The conditions now faced call for another increase this year.

Twenty-four of the 26 States shown above as having sales taxes use the bracket system.

This was the type proposed for the District last year and likely to be resubmitted. No coupons or tokens would be used here under present plans.

This system involves establishment of price brackets and attachment of a tax of approximately 2 percent to each bracket. Items priced within a given bracket range would all carry the same tax.

The District proposal probably will require merchants to collect the tax, turn in all collections less a small discount to cover collection expenses. Eight States do this. Fourteen of them require the retailer to remit a certain percentage of his taxable gross receipts, thus getting the tax whether the merchant has collected it or not.

Illinois, it is said, has no provision for collecting the tax from the customer. A tax of 2 percent is levied against 98 percent of gross receipts of the retailer which may be absorbed by the retailer or passed on to the customer. It is still generally recognized as a sales tax, officials say.

In Ohio the tax is collected through prepaid tax receipts bought by the retailer from the county treasurer. On each sale the retailer cancels receipts for the amount of tax collected from the customer.

OVERHAULING THE PAY SCALES OF CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES AND MILITARY PERSONNEL

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, during this session the Congress is engaged in overhauling the pay scales of both civilian employees and military personnel. These two major pieces of legislation will be handled by different committees. As one concerned primarily with revisions in the civilian pay schedules, I am interested in seeing coordination of the work of the Congress in these important areas.

I have been particularly interested in knowing what coordination has taken place in the Executive Branch of the Government with respect to the proposed military and civilian pay schedules, maintaining a comparable compensation schedule for all Federal employees.

I wrote the Director of the Bureau of the Budget for information on the relationship between the proposed pay schedules. That information has now been sent me, and, believing that it is of the utmost importance that we keep the regular classified service schedules of pay in private industry and in the armed services in line with each other, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point the material which I have received from the Bureau of the Budget.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPARISON OF MILITARY AND FEDERAL CLASSIFIED CIVILIAN COMPENSATION—PRESENT SYSTEMS AND PROPOSED REVISIONS

[Source for all tables, U. S. Bureau of the Budget. Prepared by U. S. Bureau of the Budget]

TABLE 1 (A).—Comparison of major elements of present and proposed military pay with civil-service pay

	Military	Civilian
Components of compensation.	Military compensation is composed of base pay, longevity pay, allowances for quarters and subsistence (tax-free cash or furnished "in kind"), and under certain circumstances, a series of special pays. Although certain minor changes are proposed in H. R. 2553, the basic structure remains the same. Military pay attaches to the serviceman regardless of the job to which he is assigned. 1. Base pay.—An annual amount ranging from $2,160 for second lieutenants to $8,800 for major generals. For enlisted personnel the range is from $900 to $1,980 per year. H. R. 2553 would materially increase these amounts and would correct inequitable relationships between certain officer grades, particularly between lieutenant colonel, colonel, and brigadier general, which now result in an improper grade structure. 2. Longevity pay.—At present this increment amounts to 5 percent of base pay for each 3 years of total military service and is cumulative throughout the period of total military service to a maximum of 50 percent of base pay. It applies to all officer grades below the grade of brigadier general and to all enlisted grades. H. R. 2553 would combine base and longevity pay in stated dollar rates for each grade with increases at 2- and 4-year intervals, except for the seventh enlisted grade, generally according to career expectancy. 3. Quarters allowance.—A tax-free allowance is now provided officers in varying amounts depending upon grade and dependency status when occupying other than Government quarters. The allowance ranges from $540 a year for second lieutenants without dependents to $1,440 a year for colonel and general officers with dependents. H. R. 2553 would continue the quarters allowance with rates ranging from $720 a year for second lieutenants without dependents to $1,800 for general officers with dependents. Cash quarters allowances to enlisted personnel are generally restricted to married personnel of the top 3 grades who are authorized to quarter separately and amount to about $456 per year. Under H. R. 2553 they would be increased to about $810 per year, and would also be allowed to personnel of the fourth grade after 7 years' service. When public quarters are occupied, the allowance is not paid. 4. Subsistence allowance.—At present, officers of all grades receive a tax-free subsistence allowance of approximately $236 per year if without dependents. Officers of all grades with 1 dependent receive about $511 per year, except that officers in the grade of major and lieutenant colonel with dependents receive about $767 a year. H. R. 2553 would provide a subsistence allowance of $540 per year for all officers regardless of dependency status. Cash subsistence allowances for enlisted personnel are now generally provided only to married personnel of the top 3 grades who are authorized to mess separately, and amount to about $383 a year. Under H. R. 2553 they would also be allowed to personnel of the fourth grade after 7 years' service and would be at the rate of $378 a year. 5. Pay "in kind."—Under both the existing and the proposed pay systems enlisted personnel receive only a part of their total compensation in cash, while the balance is made up by subsistence, clothing, shelter, etc., furnished "in kind" and nontaxable. For example, the base pay of a private is $900 per year while the subsistence, clothing, and shelter provided in addition was valued by the Advisory Commission on Service Pay at $1,296 per year. All personnel receive perquisites "in kind" such as medical care.	Civilian rates of pay provided under the Classification Act for graded employees are established by Congress in the form of a gross annual salary, all of which is subject to income-tax liability. Civil-service pay attaches to the civil-service employee while performing duties classified at this grade. 1. Compensation.—Personnel subject to the Classification Act enter each grade to which allocated at a stated entry rate for that grade, regardless of years of Federal service in lower grades, and receive within-grade promotions based upon time and performance of satisfactory service in grade. Ungraded employees are paid on an hourly or daily basis at rates of pay provided for by wage boards established by departmental action; these rates are based on average pay in the private economy in the locality for the type of work performed. 2. Overtime.—In general, overtime for work authorized in excess of 40 hours per week is compensated at time-and-half rates for employees with basic compensation of under $2,980 per annum and at somewhat lesser amounts for employees in higher grades. 3. Night differential.—In general, additional pay of 10 percent of basic compensation is authorized for employees whose normal work period is other than during daytime hours.

	Military	Civilian
Components of compensation—Con.	6. Special pay.—In addition to the above basic compensations and allowances, various special pays are provided. Flight and submarine pay at present amount to 50 percent of base and longevity pay. H. R. 2553 would establish a somewhat reduced scale ranging from $1,200 per year for second lieutenant to $2,520 per year in the grade of colonel and a flat $1,200 per year for general officers. Certain other types of hazard pay are now provided for glider and parachute duty, deep-sea diving, and for observers in aircraft at a flat rate a month of $50 for enlisted personnel and $100 for officers. Special pays would be continued by H. R. 2553 for these and certain additional types of hazardous duties. Officer personnel ordered to sea or foreign duty are presently entitled to 10 percent in addition to base pay and longevity and enlisted personnel are entitled to 20 percent; H. R. 2553 would terminate the sea and foreign-duty pay for officers and provide a flat $15 per month to enlisted personnel in lieu of the present 20 percent. At present doctors and dentists receive an additional $1,200 during each year of voluntary service if they enter military service prior to Sept. 1, 1952. H. R. 2553 would continue this special pay.
Hours of work	Military personnel are on call at all hours of the day, 7 days a week. Work performed at headquarters and field installations and wherever else possible is accomplished within an administrative workweek of about 40 hours.	The statutory workweek for both graded and ungraded employees has been established at 40 hours, and work performed in excess of that is authorized to be compensated by payment of overtime or granting of compensatory time off.

(3) II-A, but commencing not earlier than age 62. (4) Return of contributions with interest.
VI. VOLUNTARY SEPARATION	No provision	do	No provision	No provision	Same as V-(2), (3), and (4).
VII. DISABILITY RETIREMENT
A. Eligibility condition	(1) Disability incident to service. (a) Failure to pass physical examination for promotion, retired in grade entitled by seniority; (b) Found by retiring board to be incapacitated for active service; approval by President; retired in permanent grade in no higher temporary grade held: (c) On promotion list but found incapacitated as in (b) above; (d) On active list (or recalled from retirement and disabled) if officer has served temporarily in higher grade, he is retired in highest grade in which disability incurred or determined. (2) Disability not incident to service. (a) Found by retiring board to be incapacitated, may be wholly retired or placed on retirement list at discretion of President; (b) Failure to pass examination, retired or assigned to light duties until completion of 30 years, at discretion of Secretary.	(1) Disability incident to service. (a) Permanent incapacity after 20 years' service; (b) Less than 20 years' service may be eligible for veterans' benefits.	(1) Unfit to perform duties of rank by reason of physical disability resulting from injury or disease—not due to misconduct or willful neglect—disability, 30 percent or more by current VA schedule—disability resulted from performance of active duty or training. (2) Regular entitled to basic pay, or reserve entitled to basic pay ordered to active duty in excess of 30 days, who is unfit to perform duties of rank by reason of physical disability resulting from injury or disease incurred while entitled to basic pay—not due to misconduct or willful neglect—disability 30 percent or more by current VA schedule—15 years of service. (3) Otherwise eligible under (1) or (2), but with disability less than 30 percent; or otherwise eligible under (2), but with less than 15 years' service. (4) Unfit to perform duties of grade by reason of disability resulting from misconduct or willful neglect.	(1) Same as officers. (2) Same as officers. (3) Same as officers. (4) Same as officers.	Totally disabled for useful and efficient service in grade or class of position occupied, by reason of disease or injury not due to vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct (within 5 years prior to becoming disabled)—5 years' civilian service.

VII. DISABILITY RETIREMENT—continued
B. Amount of benefit	(1) 75 percent of total base and longevity pay for rank to which entitled.	(1) 75 percent of average base and longevity pay of grade in which last 6 months' service.	(1) II-A with minimum of 50 percent of basic pay without requirement of 6 months in grade; if disability is found to exist at time of examination for promotion, pay of rank to which member would have been promoted except for disability is used in computation, if higher than any rank which would otherwise be used.	(1) Same as officers	II-A: or if eligible for compensation because of injuries while in performance of duties under act of Sept. 7, 1916 (employees compensation) may elect either benefit but may not receive both covering the same period of time.
			(2) Same as (1)	(2) Same as officers
			(3) II-B, with minimum of 3 months' basic pay as defined in (1); or, if eligible for involuntary retirement, benefits as stated in V.	(3) Same as officers
			(4) No benefit	(4) Same as officers
C. Benefits under veterans' laws	Under veteran's law pensions are available for injury or disease incurred or aggravated in service; regardless of rank; discharge other than dishonorable; pension barred for disability result of willful misconduct; ratings based on impairment for civil occupation. Peacetime rates are 80 percent of wartime rates which are: (a) Partial disability, from $13.80 to $124.20 per month; (b) Total disability, $138 per month; (c) Various additional payments also authorized, but total pension may not exceed $360 per month (maximum total peacetime rate: $288 per month). Individual with 60 percent disability and overeligible for payments for dependents; peacetime payments are 80 percent of wartime rates.	Same as for officers	Same as under existing laws	Same as officers
D. Physical examination	No provision	No provision	May be required periodically during first 5 years of retirement or until age 60, whichever is earlier.	Same as officers, except age 50.	Annual examination required until age 60 unless disability is permanent.
E. Recovery from disability	do	do	(1) If examination shows less than 30 percent disability, monthly benefit ceases; and, if eligible under VII-A-(3) above, receives severance pay as in VII-B-(3).	(1) Same as officers	If an annuitant recovers before age 60 and is restored to an earning capacity which would permit him to be appointed to some appropriate position fairly comparable in compensation to position occupied at retirement, annuity is continued temporarily after recovery, not exceeding 1 year, to afford opportunity to seek such available position. If recovered annuitant fails to obtain reemployment under Civil Service Retirement Act, he is entitled to deferred annuity at age 62, as in V.
			(2) If examination shows physical fitness to perform duties of rank, monthly benefit ceases and member, with his consent, is reappointed to component from which retired at permanent rank held at retirement, or next higher rank. On subsequent retirement, time on disability retirement is credited for continuity and eligibility but is not used in computation.	(2) Same as officers.
VIII. DEATH BENEFITS AFTER RETIREMENT
A. Eligibility condition	do	do	(1) Any member who dies while receiving disability retirement pay (VII above).	(1) Same as officers	(1) Married male employee retired under provision III, IV, V-A-(1), or VII above, who elected a reduced annuity (90-75 percent depending on age of wife).
			(2) Regular who is receiving service retirement pay and dies within 1 year after retirement (except a member who, when retired, elected deferred retirement pay).	(2) Same as officers	(2) Unmarried employee in good health retired under provision III, IV, or V-A-(1) above, who elected a reduced annuity (90-60 percent) depending on difference in ages of employee and beneficiary.
			(3) Same as (2) except dies subsequent to 1 year after retirement.	(3) Same as officers	(3) Married male employee retired under provision III, IV, V-A-(1) or VII above, who is survived by widow and child or children.
			(4) Regular who was separated for disability less than 30 percent and dies within 1 year after separation.	(4) Same as officers	(4) Employee retired under provision III, IV, V-A-(1) or VII above, who is survived by child or children but not by widow or widower.

VIII. DEATH BENEFITS AFTER RETIREMENT—CON.
A. Eligibility condition—Continued	No provision	No provision	(5) Regular with 25 years' service, separated for disability less than 30 percent who, though qualified to receive service-retirement pay, elected severance pay and dies subsequent to 1 year after separation. (6) Regular who was involuntarily separated because of failure of selection or failure to qualify for promotion, and dies within 1 year after separation. (7) Regular with 25 years' service who was involuntarily separated because of failure of selection or failure to qualify for promotion, who though qualified to receive service-retirement pay, elected severance pay, and dies subsequent to 1 year after separation.	(5) Same as officers	(5) Any death after retirement not included in (1)–(4) above.
B. Amount of benefit	do	do	(1) Maximum $10,000 payable in monthly installments equal to monthly rate of retirement pay. (2) Maximum: $10,000 multiplied by fraction equal to retirement pay divided by basic pay decedent would have received if on active duty at death; payable as in (1). (3) Maximum: lesser of (2) above of 1 year's retirement pay; payable as in (1) (4) Same as (1). (5) Same as (3), assuming decedent had elected to receive retirement pay (6) Same as (1). (7) Same as (5)	(1) Same as officers. (2) Same as officers. (3) Same as officers	(1) 50 percent of employee's annuity prior to reduction. (2) 50 percent of employee's reduced annuity. (3) (a) Widow—50 percent of employee's annuity prior to any reduction under A–(1) or (2). (b) Child: one-half of widow's annuity, but not to exceed $600 divided by number of children or $360, whichever is lesser. Upon death of widow, annuity of children recomputed as in (4) below. (4) Same as (3) (a) but not to exceed $1,200 divided by number of children or $480, whichever is lesser. (5) Excess, if any, of contributions with interest to retirement over total annuities received; similarly on termination of all survivor annuities under (1)–(4).
C. Eligible beneficiaries	do	do	(1) Widow or widower; children under 18; parents. (2) Payments made to one or more beneficiaries designated by decedent; if no designation made or if it becomes inapplicable, then in order of precedence indicated above	Same as officers	(1) Widow—must be at least age 50 before annuity commences. (2) Any person with insurable interest. (3) Widow under age 50 children under age 18 or disabled. (4) Children under 18 or disabled. (5) Any designated beneficiary; or if no designation to estate.
D. Termination of eligibility	do	do	Death; remarriage of widow or widower; attainment of age 18 by child.	do	(1) Death or remarriage. (2) Death. (3) (a) Widow—death, remarriage, or attainment of age 50. (b) Child—death, marriage, attainment of age 18 or recovery from disability if over 18. When annuity of child is terminated, annuities of other children are recomputed as though such child had not survived employee. (4) Same as (3) (a).

IX. DEATH BENEFITS BEFORE RETIREMENT
A. Eligibility condition	Death must be not as result of own misconduct, must be incident to service ("service connected") and individual must be on active duty.	Same as officers.	Death of any member while entitled to basic pay or while acting under competent orders on inactive duty training. NOTE.—After effective date of proposed act, no national service life insurance shall be granted (including reinstatement of lapsed policies), nor shall any Government or national service life insurance on which the United States pays the premiums be issued. This does not prohibit conversions.	Same as officers—also any cadet, midshipman, or aviation cadet, who dies in active service.	(1) Married male employee with 5 years' civilian service: (a) Survived by widow; (b) survived by widow and child or children. (2) Any employee with 5 years' civilian service, survived by child or children but not by widow or widower. (3) Any deceased employee not included in (1) or (2).
B. Amount of benefit	A total of 6 months' pay, at rate received at time of death. Lump sum.	No provision	Maximum: $10,000 payable in monthly installments equal to monthly rate of basic pay. Lump sum not exceeding 6 months' pay may be advanced in case of urgent financial need.	Same as officers.	(1) (a) 50 percent of amount as computed in II-A; (b) (i) widow—same as (1) (A); (ii) child—$\frac{1}{2}$ of widow's annuity but not to exceed $360 divided by number of children or $360 whichever is lesser. Upon death of widow, annuity of children recomputed as in (2) below. (2) Same as (1) (a) but not to exceed $1,200 divided by number of children or $480 whichever is lesser. (3) Contributions with interest.
C. Eligible beneficiaries	(1) Widow	do	Same as VIII-C	do	(1) (a) Same as VIII-C (1); (b) same as VIII-C (3). (2) Same as VIII-C (4). (3) Same as VIII-C (5).
	(2) Children
	(3) Designated dependent relative (previously designated by the individual and having an insurable interest in him). Payments made in above order of performance.
D. Termination of eligibility	No provision	No provision	Same as VIII-D	do	(1) (a) Same as VIII-D (1); (b) same as VIII-D (3). (2) Same as VIII-D (4). (3) Same as VIII-D (5).
E. Benefits under veterans' laws	Death compensation for death incident to service (incurred in service) payable to children under 18 (up to 21 if undergoing schooling), unremarried widows and dependent parents; peacetime rates are 80 percent of wartime monthly rates which are: Widow, no children, $75; widow, 1 child, $100; each additional child, $15. Children only: 1 child, $58; 2 children, $82; 3 children, $106; each additional child, $20; dependent father or mother, $60; dependent parents (each), $35.	Same as officers. (Both enlisted personnel and officers can also obtain national service life insurance up to $10,000 with premiums paid by deduction from pay. This insurance can be converted after separation from service.)	Same as under existing laws.	do
X. BENEFITS TO MEMBERS ALREADY RETIRED	• • •	• • •	Provisions of proposed plan (including new pay scales as a basis for computation) are extended to retired members, with proviso that no benefit should thereby be reduced or that no presently retired members should be made ineligible for benefits based on prior laws. Various temporary savings provisions retain rights under present laws to members not yet retired.	do	The act of Feb. 28, 1948, granted to members retired prior to Apr. 1, 1948, the choice of: (1) An increase of 25 percent not to exceed $300; or (2) retention of present annuity and provision of survivor annuity to wife or husband equal to 50 percent of present annuity not to exceed $600. Prior amendments provided for recomputation of annuities to retired members in accordance with amended formulas, with proviso that no annuity should thereby be reduced.

[1] These are entry years under normal conditions as estimated by Advisory Commission on Service Pay. At present the years of service are generally lower as the result of wartime recruitment and promotions.

[2] Figures cover base and longevity pay, quarters and subsistence allowances (including subsistence, shelter, and clothing "in kind" to enlisted) and value of military tax exemptions. Other special pay and allowances are in addition. For details refer to tables 2a and 2b. It should be noted that the value of the $1,500 income exemption from tax, which expired on Dec. 31, 1948, is included in these figures. See table 2a.

[3] These pay rates are subject to 6 percent deduction for retirement which therefore reduces current take-home pay by that percentage. See table 2c.

[4] Estimates cover Government's share of cost of retirement and survivors' benefits provided under civil service retirement system. The Government payment to the retirement fund (assuming 2½ percent interest per annum) approximately matches the employees' contribution of 6 percent.

[5] These estimates cover the cost to the Government of disability, retirement, severance, and death benefits provided to military personnel on a noncontributory basis, as based on data assembled by the Advisory Commission on Service Pay. The figures represent the cost to the Government for each employee for each year of active service, assuming 2½ percent interest per annum from date of accrual, for retirement and other benefits to be ultimately paid to the employees who qualify for such benefits.

NOTE.—The comparisons here presented have been made on the assumptions that at the upper levels the grade of major general is equivalent to the present CAF-15 or proposed GS-18 grade, since both under existing or proposed statutes are of bureau chief level; at the lower end of the officer scale the second lieutenant grade has been related to the present CAF-7 or proposed GS-7 grade since both are generally filled by professionally trained persons without job experience.

[2] These are entry years under normal conditions as estimated by Advisory Commission on Service Pay. At present the years of service are generally lower as the result of wartime recruitment and promotions.

[3] In addition the Government contribution to dependents' allowances under temporary wartime authority amounts to about 18 percent of the pay and basic cash allowances to enlisted personnel. The additional hazard pay, sea- and foreign-duty pay, and other special pays on the overall average about 19 percent of the total basic pay and basic cash allowances to all personnel. Some of these special pays (e. g., sea- and foreign-duty pay) are relatively widely distributed; others (e. g., flight pay) go at relatively high rates to relatively small groups.

[4] As estimated by the Hook Commission.

[5] The tax advantage on tax-free pay "in kind" which is not counted here amounts to $30 for grades 1-3, and to $150 for grades 4-7.

[6] These estimates cover the cost to the Government of disability, retirement, severance, and death benefits provided to military personnel on a noncontributory basis. Based on the actuarial estimates of the Advisory Commission on Service Pay (averaging its high and low assumptions, and assuming 2½ percent interest per annum) the "present annual value" or discounted annual cost of these deferred benefits for regular nonflying officers is about 30 percent of basic pay. For enlisted personnel the cost to the Government is about 28 percent of basic pay. (If not discounted for interest the cost is much higher.) The figures shown in column 11 represent the amounts the Government would have to lay aside for each employee for each year of active service, assuming 2½ percent interest per annum would be earned by the retirement fund, to ultimately pay the retirement and other benefits to be provided to the employees who qualify for benefits. Viewed from another standpoint, these are the extra amounts the Government would have to pay its military employees if they all took out private insurance policies (at cost, without loading, and assuming 2½ percent interest) to give them the same protection now provided by the Government.

[1] In addition, hazard pay, sea- and foreign-duty pay, and other special pays would average about 10 percent of the proposed basic pay and basic allowances on the overall. Some of these special pays (e. g., sea- and foreign-duty pay to enlisted personnel) would be relatively widely distributed; others (e. g., flight pay) would go at relatively high rates to relatively small groups.

[2] These are entry years under normal conditions as estimated by Advisory Commission on Service Pay. At present the years of service are generally lower as the result of wartime recruitment and promotions.

[3] As estimated by the Hook Commission.

[4] Tax advantage on tax-free pay "in kind" to enlisted personnel which is not counted here amounts to additional $30 for grades 1 to 3, and to $190 for grades 4 to 7.

[5] These estimates cover the cost to the Government of disability, retirement, severance, and death benefits provided to military personnel on a noncontributory basis. Based on the actuarial estimates of the Hook Commission (averaging its high and low assumptions, and assuming 2½ percent interest per annum) the "present annual value" or discounted cost of these deferred benefits for regular nonflying officer would be about 27 percent of basic pay. For enlisted personnel the cost to the Government would be about 31 percent of basic pay. (If not discounted for interest, the cost would be much higher.) The figures shown in column 10 represent the amounts the Government would have to lay aside for each employee for each year of active service, assuming 2½ percent interest per annum would be earned by the retirement fund, to ultimately pay the retirement and other benefits to be provided to the employees who qualify for benefits. Viewed from another standpoint, these are the extra annual rates the Government would have to pay its military employees if they all took out private insurance policies (at cost, without "loading", and assuming 2½ percent interest) to give them the same protection now provided by the Government.

[1] These pay rates are subject to 6 percent deduction for retirement which therefore reduces current take-home pay by that percentage. This deferred pay is returned to the employee or to his estate upon separation from the service or upon retirement or death.

[2] It is estimated that the 6 percent contribution for retirement by the employee is approximately matched by the Federal contribution to the civil service retirement fund (assuming 2½ percent interest per annum). The present annual value of these additional deferred benefits paid for by the Government has been taken, therefore, to be 6 percent of the active service salary rates.

[3] These grades are not presently provided for under the Classification Act; personnel holding positions of varying responsibility are now classified as CAF-15.

NOTE.—Rates shown cover only "active duty" compensation and do not include value of deferred benefits (retirement, etc.). As is indicated in table 2 the value of retirement and other deferred benefits received by military personnel is 2 or 3 times the value received by Federal classified civilian employees; typical industry retirement and benefit plans are less liberal than the civil-service retirement benefits to Federal-civilian employees. From the standpoint of employee contributions, military personnel do not contribute toward retirement; roughly ½ of industry retirement systems require employee contributions; Federal civil-service employees contribute 6 percent of their salaries toward retirement.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I may say that these tables compare House bill 2553, the administration's military pay bill, with Senate bill 1762, the administration's civilian pay bill. I understand that a new bill has been introduced in the House for the military, being House bill 4591. It is my understanding that this bill will be acted upon by the House committee this week. In general, the pay schedules and retirement benefits provided for in House bill 4591 follow rather closely those provided in the administration's original military bill, House bill 2553. The Budget Bureau analysis, which I wish to discuss briefly, is based upon this original bill.

The following major points are indicated by an examination of the material supplied by the Budget Bureau:

First. Under present statutory pay schedules Federal civilian employees with few exceptions have a lower or substantially equivalent take-home pay—after the 6 percent retirement deduction—than military personnel in comparable grades. This comparison does not take into account the special pays—flight pay, sea- and foreign-duty pay, and so forth—which run to a substantial amount for military personnel. Table 2, columns 1 and 2.

Second. The proposed Classification Act revision for civilian employees carries practically no pay increase—$50 on the average—but rather realines the outmoded pay structure. Table 2, columns 2 and 4.

Third. The proposed military pay bill, H. R. 2553, not merely readjusts the pay structure, but gives a big pay increase. For example, the officer ranks—who already generally make as much as their civilian opposites—seem to be slated for a raise of $600 and up. Table 2, columns 1 and 3.

Fourth. If these proposals are both enacted without change, it appears that a substantial inequitable relationship would be created between the active service pay for the two largest groups of Federal employees. Table 2, columns 3 and 4.

Fifth. This is only part of the story, however. For the first time the Budget Bureau has estimated the discounted annual value of retirement and other deferred benefits to civilian and military employees of the Federal Government. These benefits add a sizable percentage—over 20 percent of total pay and allowances in some cases—to the compensation of military employees, since the Government pays the entire cost of military retirement benefits. But civil-service employees contribute 6 percent of their total pay and the Government contributes another 6 percent on the average. Thus civilian employees generally receive retirement benefits with only one-half or one-third the benefits which military personnel enjoy. Table 2, columns 5, 6, 7, and 8. There would be no real change under the proposed bills in these benefits.

Sixth. When the value of retirement benefits earned each year are added to the active service pay, we find that the proposed civilian pay adjustment will leave civil-service employees far behind the military personnel in total compensation per year of service. Adding and comparing the figures supplied by the Budget Bureau, a grossly disparate situation is indicated.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have a table titled "Administration's Proposed Military and Civilian Compensation Schedules" inserted at this point in the RECORD. This table was prepared from data supplied by the Bureau of the Budget.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Assumes normal years in services.
[2] Take-home pay is actually 6 percent lower for classified civilian employees because of retirement deduction which military personnel are not required to make.
[3] Average.

Mr. FLANDERS. Seventh. It is not hard to see why this kind of situation has not been recognized in the past. The Congress has never before considered the value or cost of retirement benefits when fixing current pay rates, and it has not insisted that the employees bear their full share of the cost of retirement benefits. Furthermore, the Congress has allowed an unusually complex military pay structure to be created. For example, the Budget Bureau lists 11 columns in its table describing the present military pay—see table 2a—and then has to account for additional special pays and allowances in footnotes. How can the Congress legislate rationally when such complex pay systems exist? See, also, table 1a.

Eighth. The military retirement system is far more liberal than the system used for the civil-service employees. The costly features of the military retirement system can be spotted from table 1b:

(a) Every insurance man knows that life annuities at an early age are extremely costly. We permit military retirement after 20 or 25 years of service, or at 40 or 45 years of age. This is a practice which is not ordinarily permitted under civil service.

(b) Disability retirement at 75 percent of pay without regard to the real severity of injury is wasteful—but this would be tightened under H. R. 2553.

(c) Computation of military retirement pay is on the basis of the highest grade held for 6 months. Under civil service the highest average salary for 5 years is the basis.

(d) Most important of all, military personnel do not contribute toward their retirement. This encourages them to seek increased free benefits.

Ninth. The proposed military pay increase is reported to be based on industry pay scales as reported by the Advisory Commission on Service Pay. (See table 3.) However, the military pay rates recommended seem to be higher in the heavily populated officer grades—major and lieutenant colonel—than industry rates. And, of course, when it comes to retirement, the liberal military retirement system far outstrips industry retirement systems.

Tenth. One other outstanding fact has been brought to light by the Budget Bureau study. The cost of the proposed civilian pay readjustment is $50,000,000. On the other hand, the cost of the military pay increase has been publicized at $400,000,000. But, I believe, the ultimate cost would be over $1,000,000,000 a year. Furthermore, these figures are all on the present basis of figuring the cost of retirement on the pay-as-you-go basis, under which we pay the retirement costs of the small armed forces of 30 or 40 years ago and ignore the huge accruing retirement costs for today's large forces. Thus, if we were to compute military retirement cost on an accrual basis, as we do now for civil-service employees, we would find that H. R. 2553 will cost much more in fiscal 1950 and future years. The Senate should look at this matter of costs from a fresh viewpoint. A billion-dollar pay increase for the military is not in keeping with today's $40,000,000,000 plus budget.

Eleventh. This material suggests that the responsible committees of the Senate get together and see that the necessary coordination of these costly civilian and military bills be accomplished. Otherwise, the stage will be set for costly competing demands for further pay increases by big Government groups who have been left behind by unduly large increases for other big groups of employees.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I should like to advert the editorial which appeared in the Evening Star on Wednesday, May 11, to which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] referred earlier in the session today. It seemed to me, as I read the editorial, that it was written more in sorrow than in anger, and I appreciate the friendly spirit of the editor in writing it. There are certain things in it which have been commented on by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina. I do not intend to repeat the arguments he made, because I am in sympathy with 90 percent of them, which is a very high record indeed, for any Senator to apply to the opinions of another Senator, but it is the means by which we finally arrive at conclusions.

I want to refer to one or two things in the editorial which I think are important. The editor says:

> Careful estimates of the yield of such an income tax indicate that the District would receive about $8,000,000 additional. But everybody, including Senator JOHNSTON, knows that Congress is not going to approve such a local income tax.

I raise the question with the editor of the Star whether he believes it is the duty of a Senator to lie down on the job, refuse to open his mouth, refuse to make suggestions of what he believes is for the good of the District of Columbia or of the Nation, simply because he is dubious as to whether his fellow Senators will follow through with him. I say that the editor of the Star has a complete misapprehension of the duty of a Senator of the United States.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

The same point occurs later on, when the editor says:

And working both sides of the street, so to speak, he couples his erroneous statement to the Senate concerning Washington's low tax burden with the pious demand that the United States increase its annual payment by 100 percent—something that Congress would refuse to do.

Again, Mr. President, I ask the editor of the Star whether he thinks that no Senator should raise his voice for something he thinks is right because, perchance, 49 out of 96 Senators might vote against it, or even that 80 out of 96 Senators might vote against it, or even that 95 Senators out of 96 Senators might vote against it. I say again, the editor of the Star completely misapprehends the duty of a Senator.

I desire to say only one or two more things very briefly. One of the proposals in the minority report was that the real-estate tax be raised more than the amount called for in the majority report. I am in favor of that. I am in favor of it in spite of the fact that I own my home in Washington and pay real-estate taxes on it. In owning that home and paying real-estate taxes I was surprised to find that the rate was lower than it is in my little home town of Springfield, Vt., with 10,000 population, according to an optimistic informal census. I say that we can raise the real-estate taxes in the city of Washington without getting out of line at least with a little village in Vermont.

Mr. President, I should like to advert also to another point of which I have been reminded by hearing the latter end of the talk by the very able and amiable junior Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN]. My information is that there is no State income tax in the State of Washington. I may be wrong, but that is the information gathered for me by the Legislative Reference Service. I honor in retrospect and honor in prospect for other things the junior Senator from Washington, because 2 years ago, when he and I were both on the Committee on the District of Columbia, he fought for an income tax in the District of Columbia in spite of the fact that he would have had no offset due to taxes in his own State. That was an unselfish crusade on his part in which I supported him to the best of my ability. I am sorry I cannot support him at the present time.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 60, line 21, it is proposed to insert the following:

(k) Subsection (k) of said section is amended to read as follows:

"(k) Solicitor's license: Such a license shall authorize the licensee to offer for sale to or solicit orders from licensees for the sale of any beverage on behalf of the vendor whose name appears upon such license and whom the solicitor represents. The name of only one vendor shall appear upon the license but if a solicitor represents more than one vendor a license may be issued such solicitor for each vendor such solicitor represents.

"The annual fee for each such license shall be $100.

"Nothing in this act shall be construed as repealing any portion of section 7 of the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved July 1, 1902, as amended."

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, the amendment just read is recommended by the committtee. It provides that what is known in the trade as "detail men," or liquor salesmen, who call on the trade, shall be licensed. The amendment provides for a license fee to be attached to each license issued. I think this explanation is all that is necessary. I ask that the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I do not exactly understand whether the license as proposed is in line with those prevailing in surrounding territory, that is, the States adjoining Washington, Maryland, and Virginia. Can the Senator give me any information on that point?

Mr. HUNT. I cannot say positively, but my information is that the same type of licensing is in vogue in other States. I know it is in my own State.

Mr. BUTLER. I have been told that the license in Virginia is $1, whereas the license proposed in the pending amendment is $100. If that is the case, I wonder what might be the reaction, when it is a matter of only a few blocks distance between the area where a dollar license prevails and the one where a hundred-dollar license prevails.

Mr. HUNT. I cannot see that it would make any difference at all. The detail men, who are, we might say, traveling salesmen for the various distilleries and breweries, may call on the trade, if they are properly licensed, in both the District and Virginia. I cannot see that the license fee makes any appreciable difference.

Mr. BUTLER. Do the authorities expect to collect a considerable amount from this license fee?

Mr. HUNT. They expect some returns. Another situation we are attempting to correct is where one detail man can be the solicitor for various distilleries and breweries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have printed, so that it will be available tomorrow, an amendment imposing a tax on newspapers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed and will lie on the table.

Does the Senator from South Carolina desire further recognition?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to call for a quorum.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator withhold the call for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I withhold it.

NOTICE OF VOTE ON MOTION TO RECONSIDER RECOMMITTAL OF LABOR-FEDERAL SECURITY BILL

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator from South Carolina obtains the floor, it will mean that there will be two or three more speeches this evening, and we cannot conclude the bill now pending before the Senate today. I think that in a couple of hours tomorrow we can finish its consideration. Under those conditions I am about to ask for a recess.

Before I do that, however, I wish to make an announcement. I have conferred with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], the able minority leader, with respect to House bill 3333, which is known on the calendar as the Labor-Federal Security appropriation bill. That is the bill which was recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and which is now pending on a motion by the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] to reconsider the vote by which the bill was sent back to the committee. The RECORD of yesterday shows that after a discussion I had with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], it was agreed that we would vote on the reconsideration of the bill on Monday. Now, after having conferred with various Senators, we have agreed to vote on it Tuesday. I have notified the minority leader that I wanted to make this announcement so that the RECORD would show what the new arrangement was.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I wish to thank the majority leader for working out this arrangement, and for the benefit of the Members of the Senate I may say that, so far as I am concerned, this is the last arrangement the distinguished majority leader needs to work out in connection with this matter. I think plenty of notice has been given. We were very thankful that a decision was reached that the vote be taken on Monday, and now we appreciate very much the fact that it is to go over until Tuesday. I thank the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, for working out the problem on that basis.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand, the Senator from Nebraska desired that the vote be had on Tuesday, and we are glad to accommodate him and other Members who are anxious to have it deferred until Tuesday rather than to have the vote taken on Monday.

AMERICAN POLICY TOWARD SPAIN

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point, and to comment briefly thereon, the statement of the Secretary of State, Mr. Acheson, as reported in the New York Times of this morning, dealing with the Spanish situation, and the possible recognition of Spain; also a news article from the New York Herald Tribune, discussing the same situation, as well as a column article by Walter Lippmann dealing with the Spanish situation. I ask that these matters be incorporated in the RECORD at this point, and then I shall comment very briefly upon the subject.

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of May 12, 1949]

STATE DEPARTMENT TRANSCRIPT OF ACHESON'S REMARKS ON REGIME IN SPAIN

What I should like to do is to try to put this present matter, which involves a vote in the United Nations as to whether or not the 1946 resolution is to be modified, in its real setting. As you know, the resolution was passed in 1946 by the General Assembly of the United Nations, and it recommended to the member nations that they withdraw their ambassadors from Madrid.

At that time the United States did not have an ambassador in Madrid because Mr. Norman Armour, who had been the Ambassador, had resigned and no one had been reappointed to take his place. Therefore, in carrying out the spirit of the resolution no one has been since appointed to take Mr. Armour's place.

The argument revolves around the question of whether that resolution should be changed and whether the ambassadors should be restored. Now, in the first place, I assume it is everybody's belief that a recommendation by the General Assembly of the United Nations should be followed until it is changed; I do not think there would be any argument about that. Argument might arise about whether we should attempt to change it.

Another preliminary observation: I should like to say that in and of itself this question of whether or not ambassadors, as distinct from chargé d'affaires, are in Madrid is a matter of no real importance at all. This resolution was adopted by the United Nations in the belief that it would lead to certain reforms on the part of Franco which would make the relations with his Government by other free governments more happy. It has not had that effect.

STATES OUR POLICY

Now, why was the resolution passed and what are the issues which grow out of it, and what is American policy?

In the first place, let us state what the policy will be on that resolution. Our policy will be to abstain from voting upon that resolution which is to the effect that the question shall be left to the judgment of each individual member of the United Nations. We shall not vote on that. We shall abstain.

Now, this question, if it has any importance—and it obviously has, because it arouses a great deal of emotion both in this country and in other countries—is because it is a symbol of something else. The reason the 1946 resolution was passed is rooted in history.

The Franco government was one which was established with the active support, and only with the active support, of Hitler and Mussolini. The Republican Government in Spain received the support of the Soviet Union. There were charges at the time that the Republican Government was Communist. Those charges were denied. It is unimportant at this point to go into what, if any, substance they had. The fact of the matter was that a government was established in Spain which was patterned on the regimes in Italy and in Germany and was, and is, a Fascist government and a dictatorship.

The importance is not in throwing words around in talking about Fascists, because other people call us Fascists, too. We do not get anywhere merely by using that word. The important thing is what goes on in Spain.

CITES OBJECTIVES

It is also important what the western European governments think of what goes on in Spain because, as I have said, the important matter is not whether we send an Ambassador instead of a chargé d'affaires; the important thing is what can be done to bring Spain into the community of free nations in Europe in both the economic and the defense fields.

When you think about that you discover at once that the western European governments are opposed, and have publicly stated their opposition, to this collaboration with Spain in the economic and military fields.

Now, why is that so? I say we get nowhere by using such words as "fascism," but if we look at the situation in Spain, we will see some perfectly simple fundamental facts which cannot be obscured. I presume that the foundation of liberty—individual liberty—is not in great phrases at all but in certain simple procedures and simple beliefs, and I should put first on the list of essentials for individual liberty the writ of habeas corpus and an independent judiciary.

One of the things that all dictators do—from the time of the French Revolution and before the French Revolution down to the present time—is to take anyone that they do not like and throw him in the oubliette (dungeon) and there he stays until he dies or until they shoot him or until they take him out. The fundamental protection against that in free countries is the writ of habeas corpus.

EXPLAINS PROCEDURE

Now what does that mean? That means that anybody who is detained against his will may at any time get an order from the court that he shall be produced in person before the court and that those who hold him must justify the fact that they are holding him under the provisions of law. There is nothing more fundamental in the preservation of human liberty than that ancient British tradition which is now incorporated in most of the procedures in the free world. That right does not exist in Spain.

I suppose a second fundamental right, which is useful only if you have the first, is that if you are tried—and, of course, it follows from the writ of habeas corpus, that you cannot be sentenced to prison unless you are convicted of some crime—the second right is that in being convicted of a crime you are convicted not by employees of the state but by your fellow citizens.

That is the right of trial by jury. It means that no judge, even though he be independent, certainly no administrative official, can order you put in jail. The only people who can do that are 10 in some parts of the world, 12 in others, citizens just like yourselves, and if they listened to the testimony and say Joe Doakes goes to jail, then he goes to jail. If they say he does not go to jail, then he does not go to jail. That is fundamental. That right does not exist in Spain.

Then there is the question of religious liberty, which is fundamental to a free exercise of the human personality. That right does not exist in Spain.

RIGHT OF ASSOCIATION

Then there is the right of association—association in political activities, association in trade-union activities, assocation in benevolent activities—that right does not exist in Spain.

I could go on, but what I want to draw to your attention is that these certain fundamental basic rights of the individual which make the difference between what we call free Europe and the iron-curtain countries, these rights do not exist in Spain, and the Spanish people are prevented from enjoying them by action of the Spanish Government.

It seems perfectly clear to the western European countries that you cannot have an intimate working partnership with such a regime in the economic field and in the defense field. There must be some move to liberalize that. None of them say, nor do we say that Spain, which has never been a full-flowered democracy, must become so.

But they all say that there must be some move toward that situation because if there isn't, what is the use of having ambassadors? We have someone of a different title. It may raise the prestige of the individual a little bit, but what is the use of it all?

It is important only if it becomes a symbol, and if it becomes a symbol of the fact that after all we don't care much about these rights, then it is a bad symbol. If it ceases to be a symbol, it wouldn't make any difference to anyone whether you had an ambassador or whether you didn't.

But the fundamental thing is that American policy is to try to bring Spain back into the family of western Europe. That is a family matter. You have to convince the Spaniards that they must take some steps toward that end, and you have to convince the Europeans that they have to take some steps. So that it isn't fundamentally a matter which can be brought about by American action, and therefore the policy of the American Government is one which I am quite sure is calculated to please neither group of extremists in the United States—either those who say that we must immediately embrace Franco or those who say that we must cast him into the outermost darkness.

But it is a policy directed toward working with the Spaniards and with the western Europeans, bringing about a situation where these fundamental liberties do exist in Spain and where the western Europeans can bring Spain into the community.

I have spoken at some length on this subject because it is so easy to confuse form with substance.

ACHESON BARS INITIATIVE ON SPAIN BY UNITED STATES—SAYS NATION IS STILL SYMBOL OF FASCISM—TAFT JOINS VANDENBERG AND CONNALLY IN PLEA TO SEND AN AMBASSADOR

(By Homer Bigart)

WASHINGTON, May 11.—In the boldest official statement yet made on the explosive issue of Spain, Secretary of State Dean Acheson said in a news conference today that the United States would shun the initiative in restoring full diplomatic relations with Spain because the Franco regime remained a symbol of fascism.

It was a statement which, as Mr. Acheson himself admitted, would please neither friends nor foes of Spain. Nor was it likely to silence criticism in the Senate, where Senator ROBERT A. TAFT, of Ohio, chairman of the Republican policy committee, tonight joined Senator ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, Republican, of Michigan, and Senator TOM CONNALLY, Democrat, of Texas, in urging that the United States exchange ambassadors with Madrid.

Mr. Acheson said the chief bar to lifting the diplomatic blockade was an emotional one. Spain had been built up as a symbol—the last living symbol—of a system the United States has fought to destroy, he said. The Franco regime was established "only with the active support of Hitler and Mussolini," he said, and it was and is a Fascist dictatorship that suppressed basic individual liberties, religious freedom, and the right to organize opposition political parties and free trade-unions.

PRESSURE GROUPS OPPOSED

But tied in with the emotional issue was the pressure from religious bodies. Militant Roman Catholic groups were exerting strong pressure in favor of Spain; militant Protestant groups were just as vigorously opposing Spain. The decision to instruct the United States delegation at United Nations to abstain rather than vote on a resolution to restore ambassadors to Madrid was taken by President Truman and Secretary Acheson because neither of the two great pressure groups seemed dominant.

From the standpoint of practical politics, abstention seemed the only safe course the administration could follow.

Three members of the United States delegation at Lake Success, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, John Foster Dulles, and Benjamin V. Cohen, tipped the scales in favor of the decision to abstain. Before the General Assembly convened early last month the State Department had about made up its mind in favor of a "yes" on Spain.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

DELEGATES PROTESTED

But when the State Department's view was communicated to the American delegation, Mrs. Roosevelt, Mr. Dulles, and Mr. Cohen protested sharply. Other delegates felt the same way, but did less talking. They prevailed upon the administration to change its instructions, and a compromise was reached on abstention.

The State Department had always contended that the 1946 resolution calling on United Nations members to withdraw ambassadors and heads of missions from Madrid was a futile gesture that would not weaken Franco. Secretary Acheson left the back door to Madrid open today when he said that the matter of whether the United States was represented in Spain by an ambassador or—as at present—a chargé d'affaires was of no real importance at all.

Mrs. Roosevelt and Messrs. Dulles and Cohen argued that Generalissimo Francisco Franco would quite properly regard it as a major diplomatic victory if the Western Powers were to reverse themselves openly now in the matter of diplomatic representation in Spain.

Secretary Acheson told his press conference that the United States would never return an ambassador to Madrid so long as the 1946 resolution remained unchanged.

But if the United Nations General Assembly votes to change the 1946 resolution—a vote is likely tomorrow—President Truman will be advised by the State Department to name an ambassador to Madrid. Absention by the United States, however, makes adoption of the proposal very doubtful.

Secretary Acheson strongly denied that religious or economic motives swayed State Department policy on Spain. When asked to comment on yesterday's charge by Senator OWEN BREWSTER, Republican, of Maine, that "some very distinguished members of the American delegation (at the United Nations) are those who are most earnest in their opposition to recognition of Spain because, forsooth, Spain is a Catholic country," Secretary Acheson would say only that any imputation of religious bias was "poppycock" as far as the State Department was concerned.

The economic argument for full recognition of Spain is one that appeals primarily to cotton interests. Spain wants a loan so she can buy 300,000 bales of cotton. The South has a surplus of cotton. That is one explanation for the sudden demands of Senators of both parties for recognition of the Franco government.

Francisco Marino, chairman of the Banco Hispano Americano, is in Washington trying to swing the loan. He entertained a number of Senators yesterday at a private luncheon.

Secretary Acheson also denied that the United States was trying to line up the Latin-American and Arab states in order to assure a favorable vote on Spain even though the American delegation abstained.

Having decided on absention, the State Department had to find reasons for its stand. The best argument seemed to be that Spain, after all, was first and foremost a problem for Europe. The western European nations—Great Britain and France, in particular—could never get together with Spain in the economic and defense fields because of the abhorrent nature of the Franco regime.

BEVIN TOSSES "BABY" BACK

This was tossing the baby over to London and Paris. And today Foreign Minister Ernest Bevin of Great Britain tossed the baby right back. Mr. Bevin said he had never favored withdrawing the British Ambassador from Madrid.

"Taking the ambassador away was a decision which I thought did not serve the interests of our country when it was taken," Mr. Bevin told the House of Commons.

Secretary Acheson was told that a number of Senators had trouble understanding why we kept an Ambassador in places like Moscow, Bucharest, Budapest, Sofia, Warsaw, and Prague, but refused to have one in Madrid. Secretary Acheson replied that such an argument was "dialectic." Besides, he said, we know a lot more about the eastern countries now than we did in 1946.

The trouble was, Mr. Acheson said, that the Spanish problem had become an emotional issue. It was true that Spain was Fascist, but it was no good tossing that word around. The thing to do was for the United States to encourage the revival of fundamental liberties in Spain so that Spain could be brought back into the family of western Europe.

That is precisely what the American Embassy in Madrid has been trying for the last year—and with absolutely no success. A year ago last February, Paul Culbertson, chargé d'affaires, presented to the Franco government a list of proposed reforms that would make the regime more acceptable to the West. All these proposals were ignored.

Secretary Acheson admitted that Spain had made no visible progress along the desired lines. The writ of habeas corpus and the existence of an independent judiciary were essential to individual liberty, and Spain had neither, he declared. "Then there is the question of religious liberty, which is fundamental to a free exercise of the human personality," he said. "That right does not exist in Spain."

WANTS MOVE TOWARD DEMOCRACY

Also nonexistent in Franco Spain, he added, was the right of association—association in political activities, in trade-union activities, and in benevolent activities.

We were not asking, he said, that Spain must suddenly blossom as a full-flowered democracy. But the western European countries were saying that Spain must at least make a move toward democracy.

The issue, he concluded, is "important only if it becomes a symbol, and if it becomes a symbol of the fact that after all we don't care much about these rights, then it is a bad symbol. If it ceases to be a symbol it wouldn't make any difference whether you had an Ambassador or whether you didn't."

On Capitol Hill, Senator VANDENBERG said he had always opposed the 1946 resolution. "In the first place this action was totally inconclusive," he said. "Secondly, our designation of an Ambassador is in no sense approval of the government to which he is accredited."

Senator CONNALLY said he didn't approve of Franco, but wanted an Ambassador in Madrid "for our benefit, not for Spain's." The possibility of Spain entering the North Atlantic security alliance is "wholly improbable," he added.

He expressed these views as Norman Thomas, Socialist Party leader, told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that he opposed Spain's admission to the alliance. Mr. Thomas said it was a mistake to withdraw Ambassadors from nations whose governments we didn't like. But Spain was a special issue, he added, and it would be a mistake to restore an Ambassador now.

[From the New York Herald Tribune of May 12, 1949]

ON FRANCO AND DEFEATISM

(By Walter Lippmann)

The trouble with sending an Ambassador to General Franco now is that the action will be misunderstood. The Ambassador was withdrawn as a gesture of disapproval and an Ambassador cannot be sent back now without its being taken in Spain and throughout the world as a gesture of approval.

The gesture of withdrawal was, as Senator CONNALLY says quite rightly, a mistake. It is a mistake we have often made. It is the mistake of treating diplomatic recognition as a testimonial to be accorded governments that we like and denied to governments that we do not like. But in fact we do not maintain embassies abroad or receive them here to express our feelings and opinions about foreign governments, but in order to transact our business with them. The question, therefore, ought never to be whether they are good governments or bad governments but simply and solely whether they are governments with which we are not at war.

The withdrawal of an Ambassador is a meaningless gesture unless it is intended as a warning that even severer measures will follow unless the issue is settled. If the severer measures—the rupture of diplomatic relations, embargo and blockade, and in the last resort war—are not contemplated, then the gesture is a mere pinprick, indeed, a bluff which will quickly be called. There is no graceful or satisfactory way of acting when a bluff has been called. And that—as respects the Ambassadors—is our predicament with Franco. In order to correct the original mistake, which did not impress him or hurt him, we would now have to make the still bigger mistake of appearing to have made up our minds to help him.

The best thing to do under the circumstances is to do nothing at all. We have an Embassy in Madrid and Spain has an Embassy in Washington, and whether the head of the Embassy has the rank of Ambassador or is only a Chargé d'Affaires is not a question of any real importance. The machinery is quite adequate to the business which has to be transacted, and relations are sufficiently correct, and quite cordial enough. If we still had Ambassadors in the two capitals, little would be different than it is except the seating arrangements at dinner parties.

The real argument, of course, is not about ambassadors but about whether Franco Spain should be treated as an ally, made eligible for Marshall aid, given military equipment, and brought into the military system of the Atlantic Pact.

The ardent advocates of sending an ambassador at once are ardent because they think of Franco Spain as a "base." They see that it is protected by the Pyrenees Mountains. They think it is manned by a large fighting army. They know it is governed by a general who is firmly anti-Communist, and puts up with no nonsense from Communists, Socialists, labor unions, liberals, and all the others who have to be considered in governing countries like France, Italy, Belgium, and the like.

But this picture of Franco Spain as a strong, indispensable, dependable ally worth cultivating no matter what our other allies think, is a product of wishful thinking and of blatant propaganda. Franco Spain is not strong, but so weak, so poor, and so primitive that to make it the kind of base we hear about would take years and a program of capital investment on a grand scale.

As for Franco being a dependable ally, his regime rests upon the sullen submission of the disarmed masses of the people to a dreary and bigoted military dictatorship. There is no reason to think that the regime would stand up under the strain of war, or that the Spanish people would continue to submit if arms were put in their hands. The order and stability which so impress the casual visitor are a thin crust and under it there is a smoldering discontent. This discontent is not confined to the Communists, of whom there are not many, and to the anarchists, of whom there are many more, but exists—waiting for the opportunity to express itself—among businessmen, monarchists, among the clergy, in the army.

This is no time to embrace Franco and lose forever the confidence and good will of all the Spaniards in all walks of life who will eventually remove him. Nor is this the time to entangle ourselves in the internal affairs of Spain as we have become entangled in the internal affairs of China and of Greece.

And as for the strategic importance of Spain, the whole conception is the worst kind of defeatism. The one way to make it certain that no one in Europe would fight if the Russians started to march is to notify the Europeans that the United States expects to retreat rapidly from the Elbe to the Rhine, from the Rhine to the Seine and the Loire, and from there to the Pyrenees. It would be like preparing to defend the United States against a Japanese invasion by fortifying Long Island.

Our true object is to prevent war by making the risks prohibitive and successful aggression impossible, and then by negotiation and compromise with the Soviet Union to end the military partition of Europe. Our concern is not with a part of Europe, but with the whole of Europe, with the defense of Europe as a whole, not with Europe at the Pyrenees, not with Europe at the Rhine, not with Europe at the Elbe, not with Europe at the Vistula, but with Europe as a continent and a civilization, destined to be independent, united, and free.

That may take a long time to achieve. It may not take so long a time as many fear. But we cannot, we should not, settle for less.

The costs will be no heavier, the risks will be no greater, if we stand forth clearly as the partisans of what all Europeans yearn for, of what in the end can alone give hope and faith, the will to endure and to persevere, until a true peace has been made.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, the interesting thing about the Secretary of State, with his extremely intelligent mind, in attempting to defend what seems to some of us to be a very poor case, is that he apparently proceeds in his statement—and this is the transcript issued by the State Department, and I assume it to be correct—upon the theory that we should in this instance depart from what I had understood was the well-understood practice that we would not try to control the governments of other countries, that that was not a matter of primary or major concern—we have heard that repeatedly said in connection with the European Recovery Administration—and that we could not dictate to other countries their form of government or their economic procedures. Here, however, he apparently proceeds very definitely upon that course. Although he also faces the fact that our previous attempts in that direction have been an utter failure, he still desires to persist in a policy which he himself pronounces has already failed. This is the very interesting aspect of his attempt to defend what I think seems to very many people in this country, and apparently almost the entire membership of the Senate, to be an utterly indefensible position.

Apropos of the question of civil rights to which he refers, it is very interesting to note that, while he contends there is some question regarding the rights enjoyed in Spain at this time by the people, there has been furnished a copy of the charter of the Spanish people adopted by referendum on July 6, 1947, by 14,000,000 votes, and I quote from the eighteenth clause:

No Spaniard may be arrested except in the cases and in the form prescribed by law. Within a period of 72 hours all arrested persons will be set free or turned over to the juridical authorities.

I read the nineteenth clause:

Nobody may be condemned except under a law prior to the act, under sentence by a competent tribunal, and prior hearing and defense of the interested party.

I shall not undertake to discuss the extent to which these clauses have been implemented, nor shall I undertake to defend the Franco regime, because it has never seemed to me to be the policy of this Government to undertake to determine what were the civil rights of people throughout the world. We are having enough difficulty in determining the civil rights of Americans, and we have not been able to enact legislation which seemed to many in this Chamber and in this country adequate to provide for the civil rights of Americans at the present time. Certainly it is with a very poor face that we undertake to determine whether or not the civil rights of some of the 2,000,000,000 people in the world are being adequately cared for under existing regimes, or to tell them what they should do in that regard.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Did I understand the distinguished Senator from Maine to state that he was placing in the RECORD the statement of the Secretary of State relative to his position on recognition of Spain?

Mr. BREWSTER. I am. I am placing in the RECORD the full State Department's transcript, but it is, as I note, edited by the State Department. I read:

Following is the text, as edited by the State Department, of Secretary Acheson's extemporaneous answer today to questions on United States policy torward Spain.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not want to interrupt the Senator's statement now, but I should like to have him, before he concludes his remarks, answer this question: Does the statement contain any observation made by the Secretary of State relative to the queries made to him while in attendance on the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, dealing with the appropriations he is asking for, the queries having been propounded by the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and by the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], not only as to his attitude, but why it was that the representatives of the United States Government in the United Nations refused to vote in the United Nations meeting the other day when there was pending a resolution which looked into the question of recognition, and supported a motion by a vote of 25 to 16 in favor of recognition of Spain and our representation in Spain by full ambassadorship?

Mr. BREWSTER. In the first place, the Secretary apparently undertakes to defend the policy of not having an ambassador there. In the second place, he undertakes to justify the policy of abstention on the ground that this is what he calls a matter for the western European countries; that they are going to determine what the policy should be. He reasons that they do not desire that we should have an ambassador in Spain, and therefore we are not going to have an ambassador there.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Relative to the first observation made by the Senator, is it not a fact that in all the 170 years during which the United States has recognized foreign countries, and has maintained ambassadors in foreign countries, the basic traditional factor relative to recognition and our having an ambassador in a country is whether or not that country has a stable government? Has our position ever had anything to do with civil rights in other countries as a condition for recognition?

Mr. BREWSTER. I certainly think that the Senator from Nebraska is justified in the statement he has made that for 150 years or more, not only in this country but in all others, the primary question has been, Does the country have a stable, responsible government? That has been the question. If we go into the other question of civil rights, I am quite sure I do not know where we will end.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it not a fact that in 1939 the United States and 52 other nations recognized Spain, and that we had an ambassador there, and that that situation continued until 1946.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes. And it is also true that at that time the Export-Import Bank made a loan to Spain to purchase cotton, and the loan was paid off on the dot, which is rather unprecedented in our record of international advances in recent years.

Mr. WHERRY. Was the question of civil rights a factor when Spain was recognized in 1939?

Mr. BREWSTER. Not at that time, nor when President Roosevelt wrote a very friendly letter to Franco regarding the invasion of Africa.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Does not the Senator from Maine feel that the delegates of the United States representing the United States in the United Nations Organization should vote either yea or nay when it comes to recognizing Spain?

Mr. BREWSTER. That raises a very interesting point, and I shall quote from Mr. Acheson's statement:

But the fundamental thing is that American policy is to try to bring Spain back into the family of western Europe. That is a family matter. You have to convince the Spaniards that they must take some steps toward that end, and you have to convince the Europeans that they have to take some steps. So that it isn't fundamentally a matter which can be brought about by American action—

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Apparently it is—and therefore the policy of the American Government is one which I am quite sure is calculated to please neither group of extremists in the United States—either those who say that we must immediately embrace Franco—

I had not heard anyone suggest that we embrace him—or those who say that we must cast him into the outermost darkness.

I think that not only does it not please either group of extremists; but so far as we have heard in this Chamber, it does not please a single Member of the Senate of the United States—and I am quite sure some of them would not fall under the category of extremists, which Mr. Acheson so glibly disposes of.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator from Maine for yielding to me, and I should like to make one observation. I think the representatives of the United States Government in the United Nations should vote one way or the other on the question of whether or not we are to recognize Spain. When a Senator comes to this body, as the Senator from Maine has, he knows that the people of his State want him to take a position for or against a question. I do not believe we should adopt the policy of having our representatives abstain from voting at the direction of the State Department. That simply means thwarting the desires of those who wish the United States to take action. I believe the representatives of the United States in the United Nations should take a position for or against on this matter. I think that the mere categorical statement that they should abstain from voting because the question affects the family of nations is not a sufficient answer. What about our own Nation? Why should we lay down conditions for Spain that we do not lay down with respect to any other country we recognize? We should not only demand that the Secretary of State give us the kind of representation we need but that our representatives should vote their convictions.

Furthermore, if we are to have a policy of imposing conditions upon Spain, that ought to be the policy which we follow with respect to recognition of any other country. The same conditions should be imposed. Why not be consistent, in our attitude toward Spain, with our attitude toward the other countries which we recognize, and in whose capitals we maintain full ambassadorships representing the United States?

Mr. BREWSTER. Does the Senator from Nebraska think that perhaps the Spanish Government might inquire as to how civil rights are cared for in the United States?

Mr. WHERRY. I think that would be a pertinent inquiry.

Mr. BREWSTER. If they could hear some of the eloquent speeches delivered on both sides of this aisle, I think they might conclude that there was something to be said on that score.

Mr. WHERRY. If Spain imposed any such condition upon us, it would be a long time before Spain would recognize the United States.

Mr. BREWSTER. Apparently, that is the conclusion one would form.

I hold in my hand an excerpt from the New York Times of November 23, 1948, taken from an article written by C. L. Sulzberger, whose authority, I think, is widely recognized. He is recognized as an honest, intelligent reporter. The title of the article is "Salazar Controls Portugal by Limited Dictatorship."

I take no exception to the Government of Portugal. I was there last year, and everything was apparently calm and quiet. They had an election, which was of a distinctly one-party type, as a result of the retirement of some of those in the government and the desire of the opposition to supplant them. I am not concerned about the character of the government of Portugal, but it is very interesting to see what Mr. C. L. Sulzberger has to say about it. I ask that the entire article be incorporated in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SALAZAR CONTROLS PORTUGAL BY LIMITED DICTATORSHIP

(By C. L. Sulzberger)

But the fact remains that Portugal is a dictatorship with a corporative economic system and what is in effect a single party, the National Union. In the final analysis the state police (Pide) is all-powerful. The country's press is censored, political assemblage is carefully supervised and strikes are forbidden by law—although they occasionally occur.

* * * * *

Technically there are opposition groups now operating openly in Portugal but actually there is only one party and the system is fairly monolithic. The American official viewpoint appears to be that it is a dictatorship and therefore fundamentally and philosophically abhorrent but that nevertheless it is suprisingly benevolent.

Furthermore, some observers emphasize that when Portugal experimented with the western form of republican democracy, all that it got was anarchy and that perhaps a country where half the people don't know how to read and write isn't yet ready for such a development.

One of the strongest criticisms heard of the Salazar system is that there are no signs of any gradual penetration of the people for eventual democracy.

Mr. BREWSTER. I shall read one part of the article:

But the fact remains that Portugal is a dictatorship with a corporative economic system and what is in effect a single party, the National Union. In the final analysis the state police (Pide) is all-powerful. The country's press is censored, political assemblage is carefully supervised and strikes are forbidden by law—although they occasionally occur.

He goes on to describe the difficulties involved in the exercise of rights. I think we could go further in the Mediterranean. We could go on to Ethiopia, or to Saudi Arabia, where a man was taken ill before the Shrine of Mohammed and his head was immediately chopped off, because he happened to be a little bilious. That was done without trial by jury, without any trial, but simply upon the decree of the dictator. We find it perfectly possible to have full diplomatic relations with that government. The same is true of many of the other governments which we recognize. There are all degrees of dictatorships and all shadings of democracy throughout the world.

The defense which Mr. Acheson presents rests upon more and more untenable ground. He undertakes to say why we recognize all the iron-curtain countries. He states that it is because we did not discover what they were up to in 1946. We did not know what was going on; although I do not suppose that anyone was in any doubt about what was happening in Russia at that time, when Stalin was in power. The liquidation of the 4,000,000,000 Kulaks was one of the most ruthless and cruel acts in the history of the world. There are other episodes of which we have repeatedly heard.

Mr. Acheson said that we tried the experiment of forcing the Spaniards to get rid of Franco. I think we tried the same thing in Argentina, and it apparently worked out exactly in reverse. Mr. Acheson says, however, that our policy with regard to Franco has failed. Therefore he says that we do not extend the policy of withdrawing ambassadors from the iron-curtain countries because we found that it did not work in Spain; therefore we will not try it in the iron-curtain countries. Why he continues a policy which he admits is a failure, and which is rather detrimental in many aspects to our economic, and possibly security interests, is something which I think remains for him to answer, particularly when apparently the same policy which resulted so disastrously in China, where communism has completely taken over, is being so subtly followed.

If he gets rid of Franco and his government, what does he expect to be substituted in its place? The Spanish Government in exile in Paris says that if it can get rid of Franco it can move in and take over. If that should happen, we would have a direct relationship established with Moscow, which, upon the record, heartily supported the Spanish Republicans in exile, and undoubtedly would be the dominant influence in Spain if only they could get rid of Franco. Is that what our State Department is so earnestly seeking?

As to whether Franco is a threat to world peace, on that score I quote from Mr. Walter Lippmann, who I am sure will be recognized as an authority upon that subject. He says:

But this picture of Franco Spain as a strong, indispensable, dependable ally, worth cultivating no matter what our other allies think, is a product of wishful thinking and of blatant propaganda. Franco Spain is not strong but so weak, so poor and so primitive that to make it the kind of "base" we hear about would take years and a program of capital investment on a grand scale.

I thought the reason was that we were afraid of Franco, that we thought Franco was a menace to world peace. Certainly when we are so much preoccupied with the menace to world peace from Moscow, it is rather ridiculous for us to waste any time or thought upon a regime which, in his own words, is so utterly insignificant so far as the balance of world power is concerned.

Mr. Acheson in his discussion makes the further point that the State Department is not affected by some of the appeals which have been made. This is why I wish to call attention to the article from the New York Herald Tribune of this morning, which I have already placed in the RECORD. The article is written by Mr. Homer Bigart, and is dated May 11. Referring to Mr. Acheson's statement, which is incorporated in full in the RECORD, Mr. Bigart said:

Mr. Acheson said the chief bar to lifting the diplomatic blockade was an emotional one.

Admitting that the policy has failed, the reason we cannot change it is an emotional one, because it has become a symbol. I think that before our entire foreign policy is determined by so trivial a consideration as that, it had better be very carefully examined.

Mr. Bigart continues:

But tied in with the emotional issue was the pressure from religious bodies. Militant Roman Catholic groups were exerting strong pressure in favor of Spain; militant Protestant groups were just as vigorously opposing Spain. The decision to instruct the United States delegation at United Nations to abstain rather than vote on a resolution to restore ambassadors to Madrid was taken by President Truman and Secretary Acheson because neither of the two great pressure groups seemed dominant.

In other words, according to Mr. Bigart, they apparently had conducted a solemn referendum, since neither side in the religious emotional appeal seemed to be dominant—neither the Catholics nor the Protestants. Therefore we decided to do nothing. It is a most extraordinary presentation of a position, if it is accurately interpreted.

Mr. Bigart continues:

From the standpoint of practical politics, abstention seemed the only safe course the administration could follow.

In other words, according to this interpretation, it was a 100-percent political decision. The article continues:

Three members of the United States delegation at Lake Success, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, John Foster Dulles, and Benjamin V. Cohen, tipped the scales in favor of the decision to abstain.

Our policy was made, according to this reporter—and he is pretty well informed—by those three persons.

Before the General Assembly convened early last month the State Department had about made up its mind in favor of a "yes" on Spain.

That is what we have been told consistently for the past 6 months. When I was in Madrid in September of last year I was told then unofficially and informally that our policy had absolutely failed, that everyone in the Embassy agreed that it should be changed, that the chargé d'affaires was going home—as he did early in January—and that they were getting ready for the American Government to support the proposal of the South American countries that we restore our Ambassador at Madrid. We were told that consistently throughout the fall and winter, and up until last week, when suddenly, apparently as a result of the intervention of three of the members of the delegation who have been named, a contrary course was decided upon.

The article continues:

But when the State Department's view was communicated to the American delegation, Mrs. Roosevelt, Mr. Dulles, and Mr. Cohen protested sharply. Other delegates felt the same way, but they did less talking. They prevailed upon the administration to change its instructions, and a compromise was reached on abstention.

I continue to read from the article:

The State Department had always contended that the 1946 resolution calling on United Nations members to withdraw ambassadors and heads of missions from Madrid was a futile gesture that would not weaken Franco.

Mr. President, I hope that is correct. It certainly was a correct prophecy. I gather it was correct as to their opinion.

I read further:

Secretary Acheson left the back door to Madrid open today when he said that the matter of whether the United States was represented in Spain by an ambassador or—as at present—a chargé d'affaires was of no real importance at all.

Mr. President, if it is of no real importance at all, why not have an ambassador there to represent the United States? Or if an ambassador is of no real importance, why not save a few million dollars by not having ambassadors represent us anywhere, but having chargés d'affaires represent us in foreign countries? Are we to believe that all the ambassadors who have served the United States abroad in the many years of our history have been merely a waste of time and money, and of no use at all? I am sure that all the living former ambassadors who have served our country abroad would be quite surprised at such a statement; and I am sure that, to the entire world, this doctrine emanating from the State Department will be a great surprise—namely, that ambassadors are of no real significance or importance at all.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. On that very question, let me say that at the meeting of the subcommittee to which reference has been made, the question the Senator from Maine has just suggested was propounded to the Secretary of State, namely, "If it makes no difference, why should we not have an ambassador in Madrid?"

The next observation which was made in response to that question was that Spain was not a good credit risk, and therefore that was another reason for the position which has been taken by the State Department.

As the distinguished Senator from Maine brought out day before yesterday, the testimony also was that during the last 2 or 3 years we have failed to cash in on the cotton which we could have shipped and sold to Spain. I think 300,000 barrels was the amount, according to the testimony.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator means 300,000 bales of cotton, not barrels, I am sure.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; the testimony was that 300,000 bales of cotton could have been shipped to Spain during that period of time.

Mr. BREWSTER. Of course, the corn which is produced in such large quantities in Nebraska is measured in barrels.

Mr. WHERRY. I am talking about cotton and about bales of cotton, even though cotton is not produced in my State. I am satisfied that the correct figure is 300,000 bales of cotton, which we failed to sell to Spain because of the very fact the Senator from Maine has mentioned, namely, that we did not recognize the existing government in Spain.

Mr. BREWSTER. And also 30,000,000 bushels of wheat.

Mr. WHERRY. So the United States failed to sell 300,000 bales of cotton which could have been sold to Spain if we had recognized the Spanish Government. However, because Spain is said to be a very poor financial risk, the Secretary of State has suggested that the Export-Import Bank make the loan, and that course is being adopted; yet still we are failing to recognize the Government of Spain.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I read further from the article, and I think this point is very interesting:

Secretary Acheson strongly denied that religious or economic motives swayed State Department policy on Spain.

Certainly the motive could not have been economic because, from an economic point of view, it has been a dead loss.

I read further:

When asked to comment on yesterday's charge by Senator OWEN BREWSTER, Republican, of Maine, that "some very distinguished members of the American delegation (at the United Nations) are those who are most earnest in their opposition to recognition of Spain because, forsooth, Spain is a Catholic country," Secretary Acheson would say only that any imputation of religious bias was poppycock as far as the State Department was concerned.

Mr. President, whether the Secretary of State intended by that remark to imply that it was not "poppycock" so far as some of the other distinguished advisers of the State Department were concerned—men who are not members of its immediate entourage—I do not know. That seemed to be the rather delicate and clear imputation, if not implication. At any rate, that is the story which has been circulated around the country, and which seems most unfortunate so far as the issue with which we are here confronted is concerned.

I read further from the article:

Having decided on abstention, the State Department had to find reasons for its stand. The best argument seemed to be that Spain, after all, was first and foremost a problem for Europe. The western European nations—Great Britain and France, in particular—could never get together with Spain in the economic and defense fields because of the abhorrent nature of the Franco regime.

Mr. President, if we need any indication of the extreme absurdity of the suggestion that France and Britain were not able to get together with Spain in the economic field, we need only to realize that, according to the clear and admitted evidence, France and Britain did $500,000,000 worth of business with Spain last year, to the exclusion of the United States. So it seems a little strange for anyone to suggest that they could not get along with Spain in the economic field.

I read further from the article:

BEVIN TOSSES BABY BACK

This was tossing the baby over to London and Paris, and today Foreign Minister Ernest Bevin tossed the baby right back. Mr. Bevin said he had never favored withdrawing the British Ambassador from Madrid.

"Taking the ambassador away was a decision which I thought did not serve the interests of our country when it was taken," Mr. Bevin told the House of Commons.

If that is the view of the Foreign Minister of Great Britain—we have not heard yet from France, but certainly we have heard from many Members of this body without a dissenting voice—what is the curious influence which keeps our State Department on this course when so few voices outside America are raised in its behalf and when we know that the chief motive power behind the refusal to send a United States ambassador to Madrid comes directly from Moscow. That statement is never challenged. It is clear that the motivation behind that course originated behind the iron curtain. It was fathered and sired there. So what is the curious influence directing our State Department on a course that is calculated to bring about in Spain a result similar to that which has already come upon us in China?

What are the officials in the State Department thinking of? If Franco were a menace to world peace, we might well hesitate to give him encouragement. But when Mr. Lippmann says he is weak and poor, certainly he is not a menace to world peace.

Then what was the reason for the attitude on the part of our State Department which prevailed? Mr. Acheson's answer is that the only reason we do not pull our ambassadors out of the iron curtain countries and out of Moscow is that we tried that at Madrid, and it did not work. That statement is to me a rather futile attempt at a defense of the indefensible. Certainly if that policy has failed, it is high time that we were making a change if we expect to preserve our own self-respect among the nations of the world. When we are recognizing the most bloody dictatorships in the world at the present time by sending ambassadors to those countries; when we are raising no question about civil rights in the case of various countries all over the earth where civil rights have been practically destroyed; when we see what has been transpiring in countries everywhere, and yet we maintain this futile policy; and when our representatives stand up in the meetings of the United Nations, where we are supposed to be the leader in world affairs, and say we cannot make up our own mind to say either "Yes" or "No," it is one of the most pitiful spectacles in American diplomacy that we have been privileged to witness in recent years. It is far more than a failure to act; it is an acknowledgment of our utter incapacity to function.

It is said that this matter is one pertaining to the western European family of nations. Certainly they are doing business with all the iron curtain countries; they are recognizing them, by sending ambassadors to Moscow and to every one of the iron curtain countries. Then why is it that our State Department must continue this somewhat sinister attitude toward the recognition of a government which, whatever else we may say about it, is neither a menace to world peace nor in danger, under the present regime, of being the subject of a Communist conspiracy?

Mr. President, regarding religious regulations in Spain, I wish to read the sixth clause of the Charter of the Spanish people, adopted last year:

Sixth clause: The profession and practice of the Catholic religion, which is that of the Spanish state, will enjoy official protection.

Nobody will be molested because of his religious beliefs or the private exercise of his cult. No external ceremonies or manifestations will be permitted except those of the Catholic religion.

That was the basis of my statement yesterday that Spain does allow freedom in the exercise of religious worship, but not the same freedom which we recognize in this country, where there is full freedom of manifestation and of proselyting. Those are the restrictions under which they operate. But Spain does allow freedom of assemblage, in accordance with the clause which I have cited.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES OF CONGRESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 59, which was read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Thursday, the 19th day of May 1949, at 12:30 o'clock postmeridian, for the purpose of hearing an address by His Excellency Eurico Gaspar Dutra, President of the United States of Brazil.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the President of Brazil will be here on that occasion. It is felt that as a matter of comity and good relations and courtesy between the two countries, we should hear the address of the President of Brazil at a joint meeting of the Congress. The concurrent resolution has already been adopted by the House of Representatives.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am proud to join the distinguished Senator from Texas in the statement he has made There is no objection whatever to the resolution. I think it should be agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator very much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 59) was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Executive Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the Executive Calendar.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPARKMAN in the chair) laid before the Senate mesages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests that the nomination of William O. Jones to be postmaster at Delmont, S. Dak., was recommitted.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask that the other post office nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Franklin R. Gossett, to be commander.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask that the President be immediately notified of all nominations confirmed today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

GULF STATES MARINE FISHERIES COMMISSION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on Senate Joint Resolution 42, creating the Gulf States Marine Fisheries Commission, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The report was read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 42) granting the consent and approval of Congress to an interstate compact relating to the better utilization of the fisheries (marine, shell, and anadromous) of the Gulf Coast and creating the Gulf States Marine Fisheries Commission, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same.

The amendment is as follows:

Page 6, line 16, after the word "limit", insert "or add to".

LYNDON B. JOHNSON,
HERBERT R. O'CONOR,
OWEN BREWSTER,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND,
CLARK W. THOMPSON,
ALVIN F. WEICHEL,
VICTOR WICKERSHAM,
THOR C. TOLLEFSON,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

SENATOR LUCAS' JEFFERSON-JACKSON DAY SPEECH

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, we have in this country two great political parties. What they say and do and fail to do is of importance to the Nation. For about 30 minutes the junior Senator from Washington wishes to reflect on some official pronouncements recently made by an official spokesman of the Democratic Party. I do not pose as a spokesman for the Republican Party, though I think my views will be shared by most of the Members of the Senate on my side of the aisle.

On April 10 the chairman of the Democratic National Committee passed the official word along to his party members that the first phase of the 1950 campaign would be to fix the blame for the legislative stalemate on the Republican Party. Those words, "fix the blame," were quoted directly by a New York Herald Tribune reporter.

Hitting below the belt is, of course, not a new technique in Democratic campaigning. It certainly worked successfully in the last Presidential campaign. But, Mr. President, you do not have to take my word for the fact that some Democrats in the last campaign hit below the belt. Secretary of Agriculture Brannan admitted they did in a radio forum discussion of April 18, particularly with reference to the Republican Eightieth Congress farm bill. He sheepishly laughed off the charge of the senior Senator from Minnesota that Democrats hit below the belt last fall with the remark, "Well, of course, but that was a campaign."

The opening gun in the Democrats' anything-goes campaign for the 1950 elections apparently was fired by the distinguished majority leader on April 7 at the Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner in Chicago. On that occasion the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] introduced the new Democratic parlor game of pinning the donkey's tail on the Republican elephant. Condemning the Congress and pinning the blame on Republicans for anything that happened became such a popular pastime after the Eightieth Congress that now the Democrats cannot stop the game, even though the mistakes are now those of the Democrats and no longer those of the Republicans.

I first became aware of the Chicago speech which was delivered by the senior Senator from Illinois through an interesting note from a friend in Illinois who sent me an unexpurgated copy of the speech. In his note he said:

> I would advise that you read this speech by SCOTT LUCAS carefully. It is my opinion that it will be the official document for use among the colored people in the 1950 campaign, especially if none of the civil-rights program is passed at this session. The Democrats feel that they have the Republicans in a hole. They therefore feel that they can pass the rest of their program without offending their southern allies. I was told by a Democrat who attended this $50-plate dinner that LUCAS did a magnificent job of delivery and that the civil-rights part was a masterpiece of eloquence if not of fact. I was told by this Democrat further that it was the most effective political speech that he had heard in his entire life. His feeling was that it was timed perfectly, well written, and just long enough. Over half of it is on the civil-rights issue.

After reading the speech myself, I agreed pretty completely with the observations made by my friend. The speech was a good one. That it was delivered with grace and effectiveness I take for granted, for the senior Senator from Illinois is an able and gracious man. It is good to welcome him back again after an absence of some weeks, and I join happily with those who sincerely hope that he will soon find himself fully recovered in health, happiness, and spirits. I share a fondness for the senior Senator from Illinois which is only laid aside in order that I may speak with him professionally about two importantly contrasting points of view in which the American public has a deep concern.

In reference now to his Chicago speech, if the Senator from Illinois does not understand the facts of life about the anatomy and functioning of the Eighty-first Congress, over which he exercises such signal control, perhaps it would be only kind to enlighten him. Certainly from the speech he delivered before his Jefferson-Jackson Day friends in Illinois, it is painfully clear that the Senator does not yet comprehend what happened under his leadership during the first 4 months of the Eighty-first Congress.

Let me quote from the Senator's address where he described the recent filibuster as a nasty Republican plot to kill the phony civil-rights program of the Democratic platform:

> While I disagreed with my southern colleagues completely, I could not have anything except respect for their sincerity and their conviction of the righteousness of their cause. Southern Senators who joined in the filibuster—

He explained grandiosely—> in the main directed their speeches toward the issues before the Senate.

> But my Republican colleagues behaved very strangely in the filibuster fight. As an example, Senator CAIN, of Washington, wasted more than 7 hours of the Senate's time by making a violent attack on Governor Mon C. Wallgren, one of the President's appointees.
> Then Senator WATKINS, of Utah, and Senator DONNELL, of Missouri, spent many hours in criticizing the Atlantic Pact.
> Senator BRIDGES spent considerable time with frivolous speech on Government publications. And so we experienced hours and hours of debate upon immaterial and extraneous matters by Republicans whose party has always claimed to be the traditional champion of civil rights.

Since the Democratic floor leader is so completely off base in comprehending what actually happened, the task of setting him straight will have to be undertaken.

It seems rather amusing that the harassed floor leader could find nothing in his heart "except respect," as he said, for the "sincerity" of his southern Democrat colleagues and for "their conviction of the righteousness of their cause." Yet, for the efforts of Republicans to get some urgent and pressing issues settled by the Congress, despite the log jam created by his party, this same unbiased floor leader could find nothing in his heart except scorn.

He specifically complained that the junior Senator from Washington wasted 7 hours in attacking the President's nominee for the post of Chairman of the National Security Resources Board. As a matter of actual and important fact, with which a majority of the thoughtful citizens of this land fully agree, the Senator from Washington was confronted with no choice but to interrupt the delaying tactics of the filibuster if he, in representing tens of thousands of American citizens, were to succeed, on time, in placing before the Senate the facts concerning the monumental mistake which would have been made if the nomination had been approved.

I want to say to the senior Senator from Illinois, what he is fully conscious of, that those seven precious hours to which he referred were not wasted hours. They were spent in defining the imperative American need for selecting men of competence, character, and capacity to fill important executive assignments. I have a right to believe that most of those who constituted the Senator's Chicago audience will agree with this necessity. In the end, the nomination in question was tabled and that was two long months ago. I sadly reflect on who is responsible for the time which has been so senselessly and needlessly wasted since the nomination was tabled on March 15. Confusion and lack of purpose are the order of the day within the National Security Resources Board because an individual for whom the majority leader of the Senate works continues to place political favoritism and preference above the crying needs of our people's common good and security. Never in my time, Mr. President, have I seen so very little accomplished in so much time as during the past 2 months.

Apparently the majority leader was upset by the tabling of a nomination which at least in part resulted from his mentioned seven wasted hours.

But that is no excuse worthy of the name for trying to shift the blame for his own party's filibuster over to the Republican side.

The Senator from Illinois complained because the Republican Senators from Utah and Missouri interrupted the 3-week filibuster for what he called "many hours in criticizing the Atlantic Pact." The best reply to this is to remind the

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Senator from Illinois of his own advice, given to the Senate on the 28th day of February, when first he loosed the floodgates of filibuster on the Senate.

Said the Senator from Illinois in bringing up the cloture amendment:

> I agree strongly with Alexander Hamilton, who declared that the public business must in some way or other go forward.

That is good Republican philosophy, too. For three important weeks, while world events sped by, Democrats controlling the legislative machinery kept it stalled. Republican Senators had every right to interrupt the filibuster in order to register official protest against continuation of the secret-agreements type of foreign policy manipulation conducted by the Democratic administration—the same type of tactic that lost the postwar peace at Yalta, Potsdam, and Tehran.

Every Senator on this floor knows that the Constitution of the United States provides that the President shall only "have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur." Yet, when almost any newsman who wanted it seemed to have access to the top secret text of the Atlantic treaty, through leaks from the State Department, when every day, newspaper after newspaper was printing stories describing the contents of this mysterious document, only the Senate was being kept in the dark on the text. My colleagues on the Republican side of the aisle had not only a right but a duty to demand an accounting from the administration on this important issue.

I am happy to remind the Senator from Illinois that, like my own filibuster interruption, the few hours of time consumed by the Republican Senators from Utah and Missouri during the cloture filibuster resulted in constructive action. On the 18th of March, the text of the Atlantic pact was finally released by Administration officials—the same officials who a fortnight later again reminded this body of the disposition of the President to bypass the constitutional role of the Senate as advisers in the treaty-making power.

I refer to the occasion of the signing on April 4 of the history-making Atlantic Pact, when the thirteen hundred invitations that were issued by the State Department for the witnessing of this event failed to include more than half of the members of this body, who, supposedly, at least, are sharing the treaty-making power with the President. On that occasion, the Senator from Illinois may recall, with pain, that he was himself sufficiently embarrassed to announce that—

> I think the State Department was very lax. It certainly was somewhat of a blunder that it failed to work things out so that every Senator would be present and in a prominent spot.
> After all, the State Department has got to depend on the Senate to ratify the treaty.
> It would have been better to have looked after us than somebody else—

He grumbled.

The distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee likewise admitted that the State Department had shown what he called poor taste in this regard.

In his Pin-the-Donkey's-Tail-on-the-Republican-Elephant speech of April 7 at Chicago, the Senator from Illinois further singled out the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] for a portion of the filibuster blame. Said the Senator from Illinois:

> Senator Bridges spent considerable time with frivolous speech on Government publications. And so we experienced hours and hours of debate upon immaterial and extraneous matters by Republicans whose party has always claimed to be the traditional champion of civil rights.

To label as "frivolous" the legitimate effort of a Republican Senator to put a halt, through exposure, to the Administration's misconduct with the taxpayers' funds, strips the pretense from all of the argument of the majority leader. Anybody can recognize the political overtones in that statement. Ridicule is an everyday technique drafted in a pinch by administration spokesmen whenever the revelations of waste in public funds begin to strike home.

The point is not even worth refuting. But it is worth calling attention to the amount of total time consumed by the four Republican Senators in the speeches which the majority leader seeks to imply were responsible for dragging out the filibuster. Less than one-tenth of the time consumed during the 3-week filibuster was utilized by four Republicans named in the Senator's speech. If he wants a strict accounting of the space used by these Republicans during the talks to which he objected, he will find that the Senator from Washington filled 36 pages of the RECORD in his arguments against the President's nominee. The Senators from Utah and Missouri used 21 pages for their demand for the release of the text of the Atlantic Pact. The Senator from New Hampshire exercised his prerogative to report to the Senate in another 10 pages. Sixty-seven pages out of a total of over 740 pages during the 3-week filibuster hardly makes a convincing argument that the Republicans took over the Democrat filibuster.

The Senator from Illinois objects to Republican efforts to do the very thing he claimed he stood for himself—namely, in the words of LUCAS borrowed from Hamilton, to see that "the public business" did, indeed, "in some way or other go forward."

But these were not the only misrepresentations in the Jefferson-Jackson Day address of the Senator from Illinois. I quote further from his Chicago remarks:

> Senator ARTHUR VANDENBERG, of Michigan, made an impassioned speech against limiting debate, defending a ruling he had made last year under a set of facts somewhat similar.

The Senator from Illinois was putting words into the mouth of the very distinguished Senator from Michigan. The senior Senator from Michigan made no speech, impassioned or otherwise, against the filibuster measure. It is common knowledge that the senior Senator from Michigan is wholeheartedly in favor of limiting debate by Senate rule. But to state that Senator VANDENBERG made an impassioned speech against limiting debate is a misconception which it ill becomes the Senator from Illinois to perpetuate, even for a political rally little interested in an unbiased analysis of a Congressional action.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CAIN. The Senator would be pleased to yield for a question.

Mr. FERGUSON. I am anxious to know whether the Senator is familiar with what the majority party, the Democratic Party, has done since the "so-called filibuster," or the "filibuster," as the Senator may wish to call it, in getting civil-rights legislation to the floor. The junior Senator from Michigan happens to be a sponsor of an antilynching bill and also of an anti-poll-tax bill. I wondered whether the Senator was familiar with the speed with which the Democratic Party has worked to get those bills, or any such bills, to the floor.

Mr. CAIN. I can only respond to the distinguished junior Senator from Michigan by saying that when one reads the record of achievement which has thus far been accomplished in the Eighty-first Congress, it becomes rather apparent to anyone who thinks that there has not yet been, nor is there likely to be, any serious intention on the part of Senators on the other side of the aisle to advance any positive civil-rights issues or bills to the floor of the Senate.

The distinguished senior Senator from Michigan did make a speech, whether impassioned or otherwise, in favor of due process of law in the Senate, as well as in the American way of life everywhere. But this is a far cry from the action charged to him by the Senator from Illinois. For the sake of the record I repeat that the Senator from Michigan was known by all to support the anti-filibuster measure from start to finish.

The Senator from Illinois further distorted the true picture in his blanket charge that—

> The responsibility for failure to stop filibusters in the Senate once and for all clearly rests upon the leaders of the Republican Party.

He particularly singled out Senators TAFT, WHERRY, and VANDENBERG for a bit of political vilification. "I again repeat," he said, "that the Republican leadership of this Nation, in the Senate of the United States, must assume the responsibility for striking the dagger into the heart of civil rights."

In reply, I regret that I must detain the Senate for a few additional minutes in order to keep the record straight as to who did and who did not strike the dagger.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIAMS in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. If the civil-rights bills were now on the calendar, this might be a good time, I may say as I look over the floor of the Senate, to have the legislation proposed by the Democrats passed, and which they will not bring to the floor, because at the moment there are not any Democrats on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. CAIN. I think it would be a remarkable record for speed if the bills were passed.

It is a tedious procedure, but obviously necessary; someone must undertake the burden of tracing for the majority leader and his political writers the whole truth involving the filibuster and civil rights. When all the facts have been detailed, it will be immediately clear why the Senator from Illinois was so anxious to scoot out from under. His own hands, and the hands of his party, are not at all clean.

I would pass on to the Senator from Illinois the words of Emerson:

What you do speaks so loud, I cannot hear what you say.

Let us review the actual record on the filibuster issue.

First of all, which party controls the Congress? Painful as the truth may be—certainly it is to some of us—we must all admit that the Truman party holds a greater margin of control over the Senate in the Eighty-first Congress than the Republicans ever did in the Eightieth. Republicans are quite powerless to determine the course of administration legislation.

If the Truman Democrats who control the leadership had truly been interested in pushing through a civil-rights program, they never in the world would have delayed tackling the cloture issue until the 28th of February. The legislative wheels began to move in the Senate during the second week of January. When the leadership really wanted to push through legislation—as in the case of the pay-raise bill for the President—no time was lost in so doing.

The first 2 months of operation on the floor of the Senate during the reorganization of a new Congress are always the slowest 2 months. But even though the cloture resolution had been introduced into the Congress on the 5th of January, the majority leader mapped no strategy to bring it to the floor at a time when a filibuster delay would least have jammed other pending Senate business.

No; instead he arranged to wait until a series of expiring measures would force a compromise end to the filibuster in order to loose the log-jam of vital legislation before the dates of expiration on the old laws.

So, first, it was a phony action in the first place to bring up the measure so late.

In the second place, where was the President's cooperation in all this battle of words for a new cloture rule to open the way for his much-vaunted civil-rights fight?

Did he make any effort to bring his party into line through the patronage squeeze? On the contrary, it was not until 2 months after the cloture rule change was brought to the floor that the President cracked down on his party members. Not February 28, but April 28, was the date on which the President, in the words of a Democratic Representative from Louisiana, "officially placed a patronage purchase tag on the votes on this measure today." The measure then pending was labor legislation, not the 5-weeks-dead cloture-rule filibuster fight.

But that was not all the President did to give a sly push in the direction away from aiding the pro-civil-rights maneuver.

On the third of March he gave what amounted to a kiss of death to the already weak efforts of his party leaders to salvage something from the filibuster. By making the public announcement in his March 3 press conference that what he really wanted was a rules change requiring only a simple majority vote to choke off debate, the President gave a shot in the arm to the opponents, not the friends, of a cloture rule change.

What he did was to strengthen the contention of cloture opponents that the real purpose of the President was to fix Senate rules, regardless of precedent, so that a rough-shod majority could trample over the rights of minorities. The President dealt an almost fatal blow to the cause of getting any rules change at all. Certainly he raised the question as to whether he really wanted a rules change, or whether he insisted on the impossible in order to erect a straw man to knock down in the next political campaign.

The harried majority leader was himself among the first to throw up his hands at this one. And while the Senator from Illinois was trying to stage a behind-the-scenes recovery from the President's knife thrust, what did the President do? Why, he raced off to Florida for an all-expenses-paid vacation trip, leaving his perspiring lieutenants holding the bag on the Truman civil rights promises.

Of course, no matter how charitable we would like to be with the distinguished majority leader, still we cannot let him travel about the country spreading the false impression that he really worked hard to win the filibuster war. The Senator from Illinois knows that is not the whole truth. True, he worked hard, but not to win the battle.

As a matter of simple record, I will quote from the daily proceedings. All Senators are aware that the only way the filibuster could be defeated before the rules change was by the leadership of the Senate enforcing round-the-clock sessions to wear down the filibusterers. This maneuver the majority leader never attempted. On the contrary, he made the gentle announcement on the very first day of the filibuster move that—

From now on, I may say, we are going to remain in session until 6 o'clock every afternoon and, as the debate proceeds from day to day, we may even sit later than that.

It was not until the second week of the filibuster had begun that, after repeated demands from the Republican side of the aisle, the majority leader finally yielded and kept the Senate to 9 and 10 o'clock sessions. On the fifth of March the Senator from Illinois made a peace bid, offering a guarantee that four-fifths of the Democrats would not seek to break down the two-thirds majority requirement to limit debate, if his Southern colleagues would cease filibustering against the milder curb under consideration. This failed; but the Senator cannot claim that Republicans had anything to do with this collapse.

Following the vote of March 11 on the Barkley ruling, the Republican Senator from Connecticut tried to get the majority leader to agree to continue the Senate in all-night sessions until the matter should be decided once and for all. The reply of the majority leader was that—

I do not know what my strategy is going to be. I do not believe that a good leader ever takes all the responsibility. I think a good leader is one who is led by his people. I intend to consult with a number of my friends on this side of the aisle.

When Republican Senators still pressed him to continue the session that night until conclusion could be reached, the majority leader replied quite seriously:

I want to get the Senate away from here. The newspapermen are becoming tired.

When the majority leader's motion to recess was then voted on, it was the Democrats who voted in a block to close up shop, while the Republicans voted solidly to keep the Senate in session and wear down the filibusterers. The Democrats outnumbering Republicans, they were able to carry the vote.

In the end, of course, the majority leader must shoulder the blame for losing his own fight. It was not the Republicans, but he himself who surrendered to the filibusterers on the 14th of March. On that date, the majority leader broke up agreement efforts by withdrawing during the compromise negotiations on the tentative proposals which the southerners had accepted.

So the abject surrender was really the work of the Senate leadership itself. Walter White, of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, saw it that way. In fact, it was admitted by the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, the junior Senator from Rhode Island, that he and White had actually come to physical blows in the Senate corridors on March 15 over the use of the term.

After the March 14 surrender of the Democrat floor leader to the filibuster forces, it became apparent that someone had to attempt a compromise conciliation. It was at this point that Republicans stepped into the breach in order to work out an end to the filibuster. Despite the loose charges of the Senator from Illinois that some sort of deal between Republicans and southern Democrats then developed, this was not true. There was never any deal, or any discussion of any deal, or any intent to have a deal. There was only the legitimate determination that, in the words of LUCAS from Hamilton:

The public business must in some way or other go forward.

In the end, the final compromise on the cloture-rules change was a definite victory. The truth emerges that for the first time in 20 years the United States Senate possesses the power to choke off debate on any issue of real national emergency. Credit for this victory goes to the Republican leadership, not the Democratic. Sour-grapes politicking has led the Democrats to spread a smoke-screen across the real truth—that if they really wanted a civil-rights battle, they would attack it directly and not by subterfuge.

As the distinguished minority leader pointed out, cloture has been applied on four occasions since 1917. These four votes prove the point that the 64-vote requirement under the new rules change would not have made a bit of difference in outcome because all four votes were carried by huge majorities.

Republicans have repeatedly issued the challenge that, if the Democratic leadership is sincere on this whole civil-rights issue, it will bring out some actual legislation to the floor and let a cloture vote develop.

But the Senator from Illinois, the distinguished majority leader, himself let the cat out of the bag as to the private intentions of the Democratic leadership. This occurred on the 11th of March, following the vote on the Barkley ruling. Let me quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

Mr. MYERS. And does the Senator from Illinois believe that the vote which was just had is the only vote we may have on civil-rights legislation?

Mr. LUCAS. I think there is a very good possibility that it is the only vote we may have.

There you have it.

The Senator from Illinois obviously hoped to pin a false civil-rights-vote label on the Barkley-ruling vote; and just as obviously intended that a real civil-rights vote, directly on the issue, never would be brought before the Eighty-first Congress.

But he did not reckon on Republicans upsetting his applecart.

On the 21st of April they forced a vote directly on the issue of civil rights in Federal housing. And what did the loud-talking Truman Democrats do? Why, they ran out on civil rights. Without a filibuster to hide behind, they stood exposed in all the naked splendor of their real civil-rights intentions, and they voted against the amendment.

A typical statement revealing the duplicity of the Democratic stand was made by the junior Senator from Illinois when he was asked by a Republican: "Will the Senator please answer my question? Would the Senator be in favor of the amendment if he were certain that the bill would pass?" His "Yes, but" reply was one that might have come from the composite mouths of all the Truman Democrats.

Personally—

He answered—

I do not believe in segregation; but I also know that the Southern States are firmly committed to that principle, and I do not want at this time to disrupt the United States of America during a period of grave national crisis when we are being threatened by the police state in order to force upon them what I believe to be correct.

Of course, I might remind the majority leader that a very distinguished Member from his own side of the aisle probably best pointed up the whole political motivation in this touchy civil-rights battle which so divides the Democratic Party within itself.

On the 1st of March the senior Senator from Texas stated on the floor of the Senate:

No, Mr. President; I shall not vote to wipe out, to strike down * * * the freedom and liberty of debate in the Senate in order to obtain a handful of paltry votes, some of them covered with slime and corruption.

The Senator from Texas has had many years of experience with Democratic vote getting. He knows that his party is not above negotiating a deal for "a handful of paltry votes, some of them covered with slime and corruption."

No; the Democratic Party cannot continue to go through life blaming all their failures on the Republicans. For 15 years the Democrats controlled the Congress. At one time during their control there were only 16 Republican Senators out of 96. If the Democrats had been sincere, they could long ago have had civil-rights legislation. They much prefer to talk; and to blame the poor Republicans for anything and everything that they think will be to their own political advantage.

I regret that it has been necessary to take the valuable time of the Senate for the purpose of correcting a few of the misapprehensions under which the majority leader was apparently speaking when he made his political address at Chicago on the 7th of April. There were other portions of his remarks that invite correction.

As my time is running short, I can mention but a few. Said the Senator from Illinois:

After the filibuster over civil rights came to its sad conclusion, the Senate took up a bill to extend rent control. Again the Republicans led the struggle to thwart the wishes of the people.

Quite the contrary. It was the wishes of the people to see fair play in rent control that guided the actions of Republican Senators. This we got; and the people can thank the Republicans for this victory. The Senator from Illinois did admit that the law we passed "gives fair treatment to tenants and landlords."

It is interesting to remind him that a year ago, when the Eightieth Congress passed a rent-control law more restrictive than the present law, simply because it was a product of the Republican Eightieth Congress the President begrudgingly labeled it "better than no rent control at all." I thought his message in signing that bill was as vitriolic and vindictive and unreasonable as any Presidential message I have ever read.

But he was very happy to receive the law of the Eighty-first Congress, which, in reality, was more lenient than the Republican legislation. Of course it all depends on whose ox is being gored.

One final point: the Senator from Illinois cast a few more stones in the direction of Republican economy efforts. I can only remind the Senator that the American people today are being forced by the Democrats in control to pay taxes to the Federal Government which are 20 times the amount before the Democrats took over.

We have the highest tax assessment in history—a penalty we have no prospect of avoiding for the rest of our lives to come.

The Republican Party would like to fight the battle for better living standards without having to lose the war of individual freedom. This, we admit, is a more exhausting approach than the Santa Claus theory of the Democrats, and far more difficult to promote among the wide masses of potential recipients of so-called Government hand-outs.

But the Republican Party is convinced that the American people can and must be shown that a Peter-Paul government is not the solution to the problems of a free people. Robbing Peter in order to pay Paul is a cheap and delusive theory of governmental operation which will never succeed in creating new wealth for all of the people in the successful example of past American progress.

The Senator from Illinois may perhaps desire to revise his impressions for his next political address. Should this occur, the junior Senator from Washington has been more than glad to furnish some of the facts for such an effort.

Mr. President, I was surprised that the speech to which I have been referring for some 30 minutes, made by the senior Senator from Illinois, has never appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I think it ought to be there. I think it was made by one who is acknowledged throughout the country to be a present-day administration leader. I had an opportunity to see the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois before I began. He found it necessary to be elsewhere for reasons of health, which I thoroughly understand and approve. I suggested to him the purpose of my rising at this late hour today. He only stated that he would read with interest anything the junior Senator from Washington might care to state for the RECORD. I think what I have stated would be more clear to the senior Senator from Illinois, the majority leader, and to many other interested Americans, if following what I have said, or preceding it—for it makes no difference which—the speech of the senior Senator from Illinois, which was so liberally, but not literally, quoted throughout the United States, were carried in an official document for all to read who care to do so.

I ask unanimous consent that the able address delivered by the senior Senator from Illinois be included in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I am sure the Senator from Washington would not wish to make the proposal in the absence of the Senator from Illinois. If he will be kind enough to withhold the request until the Senator from Illinois can be present in the Chamber, I am sure the Senator from Illinois will appreciate it. In his absence, I must object.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I regret that I did not ask the Senator from Illinois directly if, with his permission, I might submit his speech for the RECORD. I told him precisely what I was going to attempt to do, namely, to respond as accurately as I could to his references to Senators generally.

Let me make this parliamentary inquiry: The Senator from Florida has suggested a very courteous procedure to be followed, and certainly I subscribe to his wishes; but I should like to think that if the Senator from Illinois agrees with my hope that his speech will appear in the RECORD, it will appear just before or just after what I have finished relating to the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the Senator from Illinois will in due course wish his remarks to appear in the RECORD. That will be a matter for him to decide; and I am sure that he will note the sentiment expressed by the able Senator from Washington when he returns to the Senate tomorrow, and will give the matter his immediate consideration.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, if it is proper to do so, that what I have just said will not appear in the RECORD tomorrow, in the hope that I shall be given an opportunity to obtain an agreement from the Senator from Illinois, in order that my wish that the two speeches be together shall be accommodated.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I do not make any objection, because as I understand the rules of the Senate, the Senator from Washington has the right to withhold his own remarks from the RECORD according to his own pleasure. Since his request is only an expression of that right, no other Senator, as I understand, has the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington can withhold his speech if he so desires.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. As has been demonstrated by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Washington can not only withhold his speech until tomorrow, but he can withhold it indefinitely if he so chooses. So I should say that the request of the distinguished Senator from Washington is in keeping with the rule, as expounded by the Senator from Florida. If the Senator from Washington can see the majority leader and they can reach an agreement whereby the majority leader's speech and that of the distinguished Senator from Washington can be incorporated in the RECORD jointly, or one before the other, that will be the proper parliamentary way to handle the question.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I observe to my friend and associate from Nebraska that my intention was to withhold my comments tonight, in the hope that my invitation to the Senator from Illinois to allow his speech to go along with mine would be accepted. On reflection, my invitation to him will continue as an open one, and my remarks as given this afternoon will appear in tomorrow's RECORD.

RECESS

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, there being apparently no other business to be immediately transacted——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he makes the motion to recess?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I had hoped that I might make the motion to recess. I was asked by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH] to do so. I yield, of course, to the distinguished Senator from Florida. However, I wanted the RECORD to show that I deeply appreciate the confidence placed in me by the junior Senator from Rhode Island. It is with deep regret that I must forego that privilege this afternoon as the acting majority leader.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the able Senator from Nebraska appreciates that, highly as we esteem him personally, the symbolism of his appearing in the role of majority leader is one which we do not wish to encourage. [Laughter.] He performs all his functions with such distinction that I would enjoy seeing him perform this one. But as a result of his kindness and generosity, if I may on such a rare occasion perform the function which he has so many times and so well discharged, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, May 13, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful Father, help us to begin this day with the spirit of love toward Thee and our fellow men. In the stern obligations that call us to this Chamber, do Thou sanctify our thoughts and hallow our desires, that Thy truth may pour through our minds and hearts.

We pray Thee to help us to recognize the just place of the individual in a well-organized society: the worthy poor man has his rights; the worthy rich man has his rights; and the worthy stranger within our gates has his rights. Arm us with strength of determination, that we may never make any compromise between vice and virtue, and that we may ever use heart and head to deal justly with all men, and to Thee shall be the praise. Through Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On April 25, 1949:

H. R. 164. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain lands to the Churntown elementary school district, California; and

H. R. 779. An act to amend title 28 of the United States Code to provide additional time for bringing suit against the United States in the case of certain tort claims, and for other purposes.

On May 11, 1949:

H. R. 1741. An act to authorize the establishment of a joint long-range proving ground for guided missiles, and for other purposes.

On May 12, 1949:

H. R. 2935. An act for the relief of Mrs. Benjamin Betts.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDaniel, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 3083. A bill making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments and funds available for the Export-Import Bank and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. KILGORE, Mr. MCCLELLAN, Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, Mr. CORDON, Mr. REED, and Mr. BRIDGES to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and include an article appearing in the Mahanoy City Record-American.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

[Mr. FENTON addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

TAXES ON TANGIBLE PERSONAL PROPERTY OF MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a bill to make it again possible for States, counties, and municipalities to levy taxes on the tangible personal property of members of the armed forces residing within their borders.

By the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act men in service were deemed for tax purposes to retain their citizenship in their home States, and thereby were exempted from these local taxes if they were stationed or resident away from their homes. During the war, with the constant shifting of men, most of whom had been drafted, there was logical reason for granting such an exemption.

With the war over, at least in effect, and with our military forces shaking down pretty much into a peacetime routine, the reason for this exception is gone.

We are glad to have these members of our armed forces in our communities. However, since they use our schools, our streets, our utilities, our sanitation facilities, our courts, and have the protection of our law enforcement and fire departments, there is no valid reason why they should not now make their tax contribution for the support of these community services.

In many communities this tax item will be considerable, but, whether the amount of tax is large or small, it is one of the burdens and duties of citizenship that go hand in hand with the benefits received as residents of our communities.

In my own district this bill will affect two counties—Johnson, the site of the Olathe Naval Air Base, and Wyandotte, where Fairfax Airport is located.

Other Kansas communities will be affected, just as will many throughout the Nation where Army, Navy, and Air Force installations are situated.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McGREGOR asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article written by A. Wade Wells.

Mr. VELDE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two excerpts from the editorial column of the Peoria Journal and Transcript of May 6, 1949, entitled "Starting Over" and "Who's a Communist?"

EXCISE TAXES

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, I suppose 90 percent of the people of this country are in favor of the reduction or elimination of many of our wartime excise taxes, the tax on travel, the tax on cosmetics, the tax on handbags, the tax on telephone calls, and the tax on telegraph messages. I suppose, further, that most of the Members of the House likewise favor that.

I call to the attention of the Members the situation which has occurred in Canada, which eliminated its excise tax on travel on March 21. Now all our citizens living along the border are going across the border for a 10-cent ferry ride and buying their travel tickets in Canada. This is certainly a ridiculous situation.

I saw in this morning's Washington Post that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has come out in favor of the elimination of most of these excise taxes. They are an intolerable burden on most of our people. Since the chairman of the committee favors this move, what are we waiting for?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAND. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. If a Republican majority were in charge of this House at this time, we would have a bill before this Congress reducing excise taxes.

Mr. HAND. The gentleman states the position of the Republican Party correctly. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] and many other Republicans including myself, have bills pending for this purpose and the bills have the approval of the Republican policy committee.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAND. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. If a Republican administration were in power, we would have cut out a lot of these expenses.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

[Mr. VAN ZANDT addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. JAVITS asked and was given permission to address the House for 10 minutes today at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered.

SPAIN

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, American policy on Spain is now being pounded out by discussion in the American way. The Secretary of State is right that sending an ambassador to Spain in view of the United Nations General Assembly's resolution of December 1946 will be taken by western Europe, almost leveled by the Nazi and Fascist dictatorships which cradled the present Spanish regime, as our willingness to make the Franco dictatorship an ally. Whether or not the western European countries would be justified in reaching this conclusion or not—they would so conclude. American policy should avoid the extremes of the right as much as the extremes of the left and should not be satisfied to let western Europe conclude that we will sacrifice expediency to principle in seeking allies against communism.

Spain needs free elections for a democratic form of government under the supervision of the United Nations which, if invited, will, as it has in other countries, afford such supervision, with adequate time for Spanish political parties to campaign, also under such supervision, so that the choice of the people of Spain may be really known. This is a feasible program and solution.

I refer to an article by Walter Lippmann appearing in the New York Herald Tribune today in his column Today and Tomorrow entitled "On Franco and Defeatism" which has been inserted in the Appendix, as showing clearly why our best national interest and the interests of democracy in the world require us to pursue the policy I have outlined.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, following the gentleman from New York with whom I serve on the Foreign Affairs Committee, I hear him saying the same thing that has been said over and over again regarding the Franco government. It is the most subtle type of propaganda that we have ever witnessed in this country.

Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday of this week two of the most distinguished statesmen of this country had something to say regarding the reestablishment of diplomatic relations with Spain. It is gratifying to observe that these leaders, the Honorable TOM CONNALLY and the Honorable ARTHUR VANDENBERG, have spoken.

No one is defending Franco or approving his government. But we are coming to realize that we have 28,000,000 friends in the Spanish people and to say the very least, the same people dislike both Spain and the United States, out of which should come a much better understanding than we have at present.

By reason of the sentiment recently developed, Spain has been allowed to make a request for loans from the Export-Import Bank. However, the Secretary of State, for whom I have the greatest respect, has warned that she is a poor credit risk. Perhaps Spain is a poor credit risk but what country is not? I think I am correct in saying that Spain is the only nation in all of Europe which owes us nothing and yet we talk of her being a poor credit risk. Russia stole her gold and demoralized her people and yet she has been able to pay cash for much of her purchases.

Spain needs material which this country can sell—cotton from our surplus supplies and other farm commodities, spindles for their mills and other equipment, aside from being the key to the whole Iberian Peninsula from the military standpoint.

I know something of the arguments made against the reestablishment and against cooperation with Spain. I do not like the governmental system in Spain and neither do I like some other systems with whom we cooperate in every respect, but I am not willing to cut off the nose of this country to spite its face and to appease those nations whose propaganda has had the effect of isolating us from the 28,000,000 people of Spain.

It is my hope that sentiment in this country will assert itself toward a reconsideration of our attitude toward Spain until the United States, independently and through the United Nations, will take the initiative to readjust our mistaken position.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ASPINALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include certain articles written by Harry Chrisman in the Delta County Independent, a weekly newspaper published in his district.

Mr. CHESNEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from the Chicago Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. WAGNER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in the Cincinnati Post on Spain.

Mr. SMATHERS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

SUBCOMMITTEE NO. 4, COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, that Subcommittee No. 4 of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may sit this afternoon during general debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SADOWSKI asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include some excerpts.

CIVIL AIR PATROL

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, last night I, together with many of my colleagues, had the honor of attending a banquet given by the Civil Air Patrol. To me, it was a most inspiring occasion. There were young cadets present who are being inspired and taught to be better Americans by the officers of the CAP. Our Speaker made it possible for this meeting to be graced by the President who gave us a very inspiring, friendly talk. I would like my colleagues to know that we were represented by the majority whip, the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. PERCY PRIEST. I was proud as a Representative of the Congress to have him as our spokesman and I am sure that you would have been, too, had you been present. His timely reference to the lifting of the blockade by Russia, his reference to the gallant United States airmen who made the air lift such a success. His witty reference to himself as a private in the CAP and his hope that his speech might make him at least a corporal gave us all an inspiration and we were proud of him. If the generals will not raise him in grade from private to corporal, we his colleagues will be glad to make him even a general in the CAP. I gladly yield to my friend and my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCGREGOR].

Mr. McGREGOR. I gladly concur with my colleague the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. JOHN MCSWEENEY, in his sentiments relative to the speech of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST]. I was glad to meet with these upstanding young cadets who are being trained in better citizenship by these CAP officers.

Mr. McSWEENEY. I want to thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCGREGOR] for his generous contribution. All of us as citizens should be grateful for the fine, unselfish, and inspiring service which these officers of the CAP are donating to America. I am proud that my nephew, Lt. Col. Joseph Woody, of Orlando, Fla., is one of those enthusiastic and devoted officers of the Civil Air Patrol.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JONES of Alabama asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. FLOOD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Wilkes-Barre (Pa.) Record.

THE BERLIN BLOCKADE

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have before me the New York Times for Thursday, May 12, today, and I read the headline which says, "Berlin land blockade lifted," and "First train and autos reach city from the west after a 328-day siege."

Another headline: "The lights are turned on."

I have in mind also a summer day in 1914 as World War I began, when a British statesman, Lord Gray, said, looking out over London: "The lights are going out all over Europe tonight."

Let us hope the light of reason is lighted today all over the world.

So, Mr. Speaker, I express, today, this great tribute to American organization and a great tribute to the American armed forces during peacetime, an example of American fortitude, courage, and stick-to-itiveness exemplified by our Air Force and our armed forces in the famous airlift over Berlin. This is one of the greatest examples of Americanism this country and the world has ever seen. The airlift is a sign big enough "so that he who runs may read." The Nation is proud of the people who made the airlift work.

Let us hope and pray that the warning is heeded—the example followed and that the diplomacy of reason brings us peace.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD] has expired.

LIFTING OF THE BERLIN BLOCKADE

Mr. BATTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BATTLE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BATTLE. Mr. Speaker, the lifting of the Berlin blockade gives a big boost toward world peace and understanding. It is a great step forward. Today for the first time since June 26, 1948, Berlin traffic is on the move. Trains are running to and from the city. Highways are open, mail service is restored. It is a magnificent victory for democracy. And many of those dauntless heroes of "Operation Vittles" are coming home to receive a country's praise. They have done a great job, those airlift personnel. I saw them in action, flew with them to the Tempelhof Airfield in Berlin. It was amazing to see the precision and the planning and the courage that kept thousands of people alive with supplies brought in by air. Aided by the British and the French, all branches of American defense combined to make the airlift what is called the greatest peacetime achievement of American arms.

But we must not be complacent. Let us remember that this diplomatic victory is the direct result of the Marshall plan, the airlift, our strong counter blockade, and the Atlantic Pact; all costly and dangerous operations expressing our determination to resist world domination by Russia.

Stalin has been playing a game of chess, coolly and shrewdly, staking the peace of the world upon a gamble that we desired to avoid a war at any cost. While he may seem to be retreating in Europe, he may well be trying to use this as a cover-up for aggression in other areas. Russia is winning hands-down in China. Half of the population of the world is in that area. The final showdown of the cold war may very well be in China.

As a matter of fact, the peace is not yet won—either in Europe or the Orient. We must maintain our positive, firm, and fair foreign policy. We hope that Russia is ready to come into the family of nations as a friendly, peaceful participant, and we should encourage her to do so. However, until this is a reality and even after it becomes a reality, it is up to America to throw her whole weight and power behind the United Nations. We must spark the drive to make the UN a more powerful limited world organization capable of dealing effectively with aggressor nations. Only then can we look forward to real peaceful international relations.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LYNCH (at the request of Mr. FORAND) was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address.

APPOINTMENT OF AMBASSADOR TO SPAIN

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to endorse and commend the remarks of my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] and to take issue with my distinguished friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS] in the matter of sending an ambassador back to Madrid.

I notice in this morning's Post, Mr. Walter Lippmann, ordinarily a sound commentator, has criticized the action of some of our distinguished Senators in expressing dissatisfaction with our policy in Spain. He says it would be defeatism to now admit that we made a mistake in the first place. Since when is it defeatism for a great nation or a great individual to admit he was wrong and attempt to rectify that error?

One of the most stupid things in the world, to my mind, has been our withdrawal of an ambassador from Spain, which entailed their withdrawal of an ambassador from this country. True, we do not approve of totalitarianism or fascism, but we have refused to recognize and do business with perhaps the most stable government in Europe, and one which, my colleague points out, owes us not a penny.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT] has expired.

THE BERLIN AIRLIFT

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, the beleaguered city of Berlin is today released after a period of almost a year.

No feat in all history is greater than that accomplished by the Berlin airlifters. The courage and sacrificial service of those who carried on the airlift should be regarded as if in actual combat. Only those of us who were privileged to go in on the airlift can possibly appreciate the significance of the task. Everything necessary to sustain life for more than 2,000,000 people residing in the Allied sectors of Germany's great metropolitan capital city was carried through the air to Tempelhof Airdrome.

The cost for maintaining this gigantic undertaking exceeded $1,000,000 a day. More than half a hundred gallant fliers lost their lives while on duty, but the venture was successful. Let us hope that the apparent change in the attitude of the Soviet Government will be followed in other matters to the end that soon the peace so dearly bought and constantly prayed for may come to this troubled earth.

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH SPAIN

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the failure to establish diplomatic relations with Spain is, in my judgment, equivalent to sinning against the peace and security of the world.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Gladly.

Mr. McCORMACK. The primary question confronting every nation is its national interest and the taking of such steps as is in its national interest. Certainly, and particularly in the light of the existing world conditions, it is in the national interest of our country to renew full diplomatic relations with Spain. It is one of our next-door neighbors across the Atlantic; its government and its people are anticommunistic. Any questions to be solved between the two countries could be more easily solved with full diplomatic conditions existing than under the present undesirable situation.

I strongly feel that immediate renewal of diplomatic relations is in the national interest of our country and also will be a decided step in the direction of obtaining that which we seek, permanent peace.

NONSEGREGATION IN THE AIR FORCES

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday Defense Secretary Johnson announced that he had deactivated the all-Negro Three Hundred Thirty-second Fighter Wing under his new policy of nonsegregation in the Air Forces.

Just whom does Mr. Johnson think he is helping through the destruction of these Negro units? Does he think that he is helping these Negroes by forcing them into white companies? Is he helping raise the morale of the Negroes themselves? Certainly not. Negroes the world over have pointed with justifiable pride to the achievements of their own companies in World War II. Does he think that the morale of those Negroes who are being separated from their own groups and forced into white units will be boosted when they find that they have no one with whom to associate?

Does this modern self-annointed Moses who promises to lead the Negroes out of the wilderness of their own society into the promised land of amalgamation honestly believe he is strengthening the national defense? Or is he dealing in cheap sordid politics? Does he consider himself better informed, intellectually superior, or better qualified to dictate military policies than Generals Pershing, Eisenhower, and Bradley, all of whom refused to succumb to such communistic pressure? Mr. Speaker, Secretary Johnson, through this abject surrender to selfish interests, might well have destroyed the fighting spirit of our great military machine. He is shooting craps with our national security.

General Eisenhower, one of the great military minds of all time, recognized the need for separation of the races in the armed forces, when he very frankly told a committee of the other body:

> In general, the Negro is less well educated than his brother citizen who is white, and if you are going to make a complete amalgamation, what you are going to have is in every company the Negro is going to be relegated to minor jobs, and he is never going to get his promotion to such grades as technical sergeant, master sergeant, and so on, because the competition is too tough. If, on the other hand, he is in smaller units of his own, he can go up to that rate, and I believe that he is entitled to the chance to show his own wares.

At this time, when the need for military strength is greater than in our history, it ill behooves one in such a commanding position to deny to this people the benefit of knowledge gained through bloody years of experience.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

[Mr. CAVALCANTE addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks entitled "Report on Private Bill Procedure." I am informed by the Public Printer it exceeds the limit established by the Joint Committee on Printing and will cost $206.26. Notwithstanding this estimate I ask unanimous consent that the extension may be made.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the excess, without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. ANGELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances and in each include a short article from the New York Times.

Mr. POULSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include two articles, one by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt on discrimination against the Indians, and another an article on the Colorado River.

TAXATION

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. I am surprised that more people have not taken the floor today to compliment the distinguished chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means, as reported in the press this morning, for the forthright statement which he made to the President of the United States concerning the fiscal prospects of your country and mine. As was stated by the distinguished junior Senator from Illinois, Mr. DOUGLAS, on the floor of the Senate, there can be no question that we cannot under any circumstances permit a present increase in taxes. The only way to avoid it and to avoid the deficits that are in the offing as a result of the stupendous plan-spending programs of the Democratic administration is to cut our cloth so that our expenditures will be in line with our receipts.

I congratulate the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DOUGHTON], and I congratulate the junior Senator from Illinois for their courageous stand that has been the position of the Republicans in this House for years.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RICH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include editorial comment from the Pittsburgh Press of May 8, 1949.

ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT OPERATION

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I am very much interested in the statements that have been made here this morning about economy. It is a grand thing that we can get Members of Congress to get up here and talk about economy because that is what we need if we are going to save this country of ours from complete ruin and bankruptcy.

The people want less taxes and the only way to get less taxes is to stop spending. I hope, Mr. Speaker, in the brief time at my disposal that I may impress this indelibly upon the Members of Congress because they are responsible for the enormous amount of money that is being spent by the Government at the present time. The only way to stop this is to stop. Let us stop spending, stop taxing our people and look after America and do not assume the responsibilities of all the nations of the world.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLE of New York (at the request of Mr. ARENDS) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address delivered by Fulton Lewis.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, revise and extend my remarks, and include a short editorial from the Hartford (Conn.) Courant entitled "Unemployment Statistics."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

[Mr. SADLAK addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include two essays written by boys and girls in the high schools of her district on the importance of private enterprise in business.

CIVIL AIR PATROL

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it was my pleasure in company with other Members of the Congress to attend the Civil Air Patrol dinner last evening. I sat beside a very fine young Massachusetts cadet sergeant who was here in advance of those who are coming in from Massachusetts on Sunday.

General Nolan, who was sitting at our table, said that he had seen our boys in action in India, Africa, and in Egypt—in fact all over the world—and that our boys can do anything they set out to do.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with other Members in rejoicing that the Air Force and the pilots of the air lift have been successful in breaking the blockade in Germany. Now materials and supplies can travel freely in and out of Berlin by train. The members of our air lift did a magnificent job for us at great sacrifice under difficult conditions. Those who have been in Germany during the winter know just what they did.

They never faltered. They performed a wonderful feat for the world.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include in each extraneous matter.

Mr. WEICHEL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution.

Mr. REES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by Hon. Frank Carlson at the Interstate Oil Compact Commission, Jacksonville, Fla.

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PHILBIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Speaker of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] may extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article written by former Secretary of War Robert Patterson in reference to General Clay.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

SOUTH DAKOTA'S DUCKS AND PHEASANTS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, South Dakota, I guess, has more ring-necked pheasants than any State in the Union. If someone has figures to the contrary, I may not quarrel with him but I want to make the point we have lots of the birds and we like to have visitors come and hunt them in accord with the laws of the State.

And they do come. In 1946, South Dakota sold 86,147 nonresident hunting licenses. That 86,147 compares with 1,676 sold in Minnesota the same year—or 958 in Oklahoma; that is, nonresident hunting licenses.

We have had and do have more pheasants than anybody else. But we do not have more ducks. We do not have the ducks which Minnesota has. And when you turn all the nonresident pheasant hunters loose on our ducks—well, there just are not enough ducks to stand it. So the South Dakota Legislature has forbid selling licenses for nonresidents to hunt ducks for a while.

That has offended some of our Minnesota brethren and they have introduced a rash of bills to deny Pittman-Robertson allotments to South Dakota. Now, laying aside the question of the great amount of shotgun shell taxes that South Dakota sends to the Pittman-Robertson fund, I venture to suggest that South Dakota should be permitted to protect her limited duck population, as she sees fit. Once the right of any State to protect the game of its State is denied or modified, there could be no limit to which the rights of any State to its game could be curtailed. State ownership of the wild game within its borders is well established in law and precedent.

Moreover, since we do invite the world to hunt our abundant pheasants, do you not think we should be permitted to protect our ducks until we can get them built up, too?

CHINA

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, we had a congressional investigation into all the causes and circumstances of the disaster at Pearl Harbor. Shall we be indifferent to the causes and circumstances of the much greater disaster in China?

The State Department, which is waiting for the dust to settle in China, evidently considers that its present supply of dust is adequate to throw in the eyes of the Congress.

A few men never elected to office have decided to render futile the sacrifice of 200,000 American youths killed and wounded in the Pacific—a sacrifice made because we were, as we had been for a hundred years, determined that for our own security China should remain free and independent. In the face of the State Department's obstinate attachment to the cause of people who have proclaimed themselves committed to destroying us, shall Congress remain supine?

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments be permitted to sit this afternoon during general debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Lands be permitted to sit this afternoon during general debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

ISRAEL ADMITTED TO UNITED NATIONS

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer my sincere and grateful congratulations to the President of the United States, to the many officials of the Department of State who contributed their skill and energy, and especially to the Secretary, the Honorable Dean Acheson, and to our United States representative to the United Nations, former Senator Warren Austin, for their brilliant work in formulating the preliminary strategy which resulted in an overwhelming vote yesterday at Lake Success for the admittance of the Republic of Israel to the United Nations.

My only regret is that this just and meritorious recognition of the independence, sovereignty, and stability of the newest—and oldest—of the world's democracies has been so long delayed.

The world will rejoice that Israel has been accepted as the fifty-ninth of the United Nations; and the Republic of Israel will prove its gratitude for this first birthday gift from the world at large by proving its responsibility and maturity in internal administration and international cooperation and cordiality.

Mr. Speaker, the United States has lived up to its pledges. American honor is vindicated.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ADDONIZIO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two letters.

Mr. TAURIELLO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial by Thomas L. Stokes appearing in the Buffalo Evening News.

Mrs. DOUGLAS asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Walter Lippmann on Spain.

SPAIN

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California

There was no objection.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to support the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS] in the statement he made regarding Spain. I have just been granted permission to include in the RECORD an article by Mr. Walter Lippmann which was referred to here by the distinguished gentleman from Texas. However, he referred to only a part of what Mr. Lippmann said. I am sure the Members will be interested in reading all of Mr. Lippmann's article. I myself, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, found it to be very thoughtful, and very accurate, with valid conclusions. I believe our position in regard to Spain is sound and the only tenable one at this time.

CONGRESSIONAL BASEBALL GAME

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, while we are wrestling with the important problems of the world and of the Nation, I rise to announce that the traditional baseball game between the Democrats and Republicans will be played on June 3.

Mr. RANKIN. That will be very devastating for the Republicans. That is Jefferson Davis' birthday.

Mr. HARRIS. In the absence of the High Commissioner of the Democratic baseball team, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS], I am authorized to announce that the Democratic members of the baseball team will meet this afternoon at 4 o'clock at Central High School, which is at Thirteenth and Florida Avenue.

As we all know, this traditional game started many years ago. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] told me this morning that he played on the team in 1913 or 1914.

The game this year will be for the benefit of the underprivileged children of the District of Columbia. There are not going to be any holds barred, I understand. The only positions assured so far on our side, I am authorized to state, are those of the Chief Justice of the United States, Hon. Fred Vinson, and our very fine and lovable Speaker of the House, Hon. SAM RAYBURN.

The only controversy that has really developed at this point, and it is a real one, yet to be resolved, is, who is going to be the home team this year? I think since we are in the majority we will probably win out in the long run.

I thank the Members of the House on the Democratic side for the interest they have shown and the interest I know they will manifest in helping to give the Republicans another lashing, as we did last year.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BIEMILLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include certain newspaper articles and radio speeches.

Mr. IRVING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short newspaper article on the Hoover report.

THE BERLIN BLOCKADE

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanmous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, the lifting of the Berlin blockade is certainly something for us to be thankful for. It is a tribute to American and British perseverance. There is no question that the Communists in Berlin have received a set-back. Their number is reported to have diminished to 6 percent. We can properly regard the end of the blockade as a welcome expression of our logistics ability, of our industrial power and of the bravery and skill of our airmen. Several of them tragically and gallantly gave their lives in this great endeavor.

But let us not be overoptimistic. This is not a diplomatic victory. The United States Air Force has temporarily saved us from a deep dilemma of our own diplomatic making. We must have a plan. We must know where we are going. What happens now? As Constantine Brown says:

> Moscow now is smiling broadly at the United States. That this is not a sincere smile is apparent to most policy makers in Washington and other western capitals.

It is interesting to note that the Kremlin made advances with respect to Berlin at the time that the Nationalist forces in China were in full retreat. In the face of our disastrous defeat in China let us look at the Berlin situation with a steady and penetrating eye. Due to the Communist victories in China, Russia now can offer the Germans the great markets of the Far East. This can prove to be a powerful inducement toward cooperation with the Soviets. Nor is Russian dominance in the Far East the only implication of the end of the Berlin blockade. It is quite likely that the Russians will soon suggest that all troops be withdrawn from Germany, their's a short distance behind the German borders, ours a distance of some 4,000 miles. While it is unthinkable that we shall accept such a suggestion, it could create for us some very real embarrassments.

Therefore, while we should be grateful for the splendid courage and ability of the United States Air Force and for the steadfastness of our British friends, we should, I think, be most skeptical with respect to all the implications of this event.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

[Mr. FULTON addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

CONGRESSIONAL BASEBALL GAME

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute on the subject of baseball.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, I heard the newly appointed manager of the Democratic baseball team make some mighty fine remarks about his team. I want to tell my colleagues that, as a result of the game last year, the fresh-air fund for the kids of the District of Columbia received about $6,000. We hope to raise $10,000 this year. The tickets will be sold by the chief pages and handled by the doorkeepers. The Republicans will start their practice on Monday, May 16, after the House adjourns for the day, at Eastern High School athletic field. We invite Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives to participate.

SPAIN

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I noted yesterday that the Secretary of State has refused to recognize Spain. Among other things he gave as a reason for his refusal to consider it, the habeas corpus as another of the various reasons for his refusal. I think it is a serious mistake at this time not to make some effort to recognize the existence of the present Government of Spain.

Our national interest demands it. If we should follow the reasoning outlined by the Secretary of State, we could not consistently keep any of our diplomatic officers in Russia or anywhere behind the iron curtain. I think it is absolute stupidity not to recognize the existence of conditions, and at the very earliest opportunity to try to bring about official recognition of Spain as it exists today.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS] has expired.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the majority leader a question. I heard on the radio that we were going to get a labor bill before the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not responsible for what the gentleman or anybody else hears on the radio. I can assure the gentleman that there is no labor legislation programed for next week.

Mr. RICH. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

RECOGNITION OF SPAIN

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we have heard attacks on Spain this morning, and we have heard voices in defense of Spain. I remember when the Communists were overrunning Spain, many years ago, Franco had a brother in this country who gave out a statement about what the Communists were doing to the people of Spain. It was one of the most horrible pictures I had ever read up to that time.

Franco took the lead, fought the Communists and drove them out of Spain. It is true that Germany helped Franco. It is true that Italy did also. But do not forget that Great Britain did also; and after we got into the war Spain refused to join our enemies, and by remaining neutral she kept them from overrunning Spain and closing the Mediterranean.

Now, let us be honest. There is no reason on earth why we should recognize these Communist and near-Communist countries and refuse to recognize anti-Communist Spain.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLE of Kansas asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution.

Mr. BUCKLEY of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

GULF STATES MARINE FISHERIES COMPACT

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on Senate Joint Resolution 42, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMPSON]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 42) granting the consent and approval of Congress to an interstate compact relating to the better utilization of the fisheries (marine, shell, and anadromous) of the Gulf Coast and creating the Gulf States Marine Fisheries Commission, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same.

The amendment is as follows:

SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND,
CLARK W. THOMPSON,
ALVIN F. WEICHEL,
VICTOR WICKERSHAM,
THOR C. TOLLEFSON,
Managers on the Part of the House.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON,
HERBERT R. O'CONOR,
OWEN BREWSTER,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 42) granting the consent and approval of Congress to an interstate compact relating to the better utilization of the fisheries (marine, shell, and anadromous) of the Gulf Coast and creating the Gulf States Marine Fisheries Commission, submits the following statement which was agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same.

The House amendment is as follows:

On page 6, line 16, after the word "limit", insert "or add to".

SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND,
CLARK W. THOMPSON,
ALVIN F. WEICHEL,
VICTOR WICKERSHAM,
THOR C. TOLLEFSON,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time on this side, and I understand there is none on the other side. The Senate is in the position of having agreed to the bill that was passed by the House. I presume it is agreeable to everybody. However, I have no desire to shut off any questions, if there are any.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD at this point on the conference report just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

MRS. JULIA BALINT

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 679) to authorize the admission of Mrs. Julia Balint to the United States, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Mrs. Julia Balint, who would be entitled to nonquota immigration status but for the death or disappearance of her United States citizen husband, shall, if otherwise admissible to the United States under the immigration laws, be deemed to be a nonquota immigrant."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the difference between our bill and the Senate bill?

Mr. WALTER. There is no difference. The Senate changed the language, but this bill, and another one which will be called up immediately after this is disposed of, accomplish the same thing as the House bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Well, what was the change?

Mr. WALTER. The change was that whereas in the House bill we authorized the admission of a Czech woman who was the wife of an American citizen who disappeared in Czechoslovakia, the Senate amended the language so that it appears as though she were now an American citizen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THEODORE PAPACHRISTOPOULOS

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2360) for the relief of Theodore Papachristopoulos, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill and the Senate amendment as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Theodore Papachristopoulos shall be considered to be the natural-born son of his stepfather, Roland Stanger, a citizen of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DORIS BATEY COX

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I submit a privileged resolution (H. Res. 195) for the relief of Doris Batey Cox (Rept. No. 571), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Doris Batey Cox, widow of Lamar P. Cox, late an employee of the House of Representatives, an amount equal to 6 months' salary at the rate he was receiving at the time of his death and an additional amount not to exceed $250 toward defraying the funeral expenses of said Lamar P. Cox.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. MARY LEIMGRUBER

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 194) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Leimgruber (Rept. No. 572), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Mrs. Mary Leimgruber, mother of Marie Elizabeth Leimgruber, late an employee of the House of Representatives, an amount equal to 6 months' salary at the rate she was receiving at the time of her death and an additional amount not to exceed $250 toward defraying the funeral expenses of said Marie Elizabeth Leimgruber.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICE AND CIVIL SERVICE

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 115) providing for the expenses incurred by House Resolution 114 (Rept. No. 573), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the studies and investigations authorized by House Resolution 114, Eighty-first Congress, incurred by the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $25,000, including expenditures for printing and binding, employment of such experts, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by said committee and signed by the chairman of the committee, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

SEC. 2. The official committee reporters may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia, if not otherwise officially engaged.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "printing and binding."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MEMORIAL DAY, MAY 25, 1949

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 186) providing for holding memorial services on Wednesday, May 25, 1949 (Rept. No. 574), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Wednesday, the 25th day of May 1949, immediately after the approval of the Journal, the House shall stand at recess for the purpose of holding the memorial services as arranged by the Committee on House Administration under the provisions of clause (1) (j) (2) (2) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives. The order of exercises and proceedings of the service shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and all Members shall have leave for 60 legislative days to extend their remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on the life, character, and public service of deceased Members. At the conclusion of the proceedings, the Speaker shall call the House to order and then as a further mark of respect to the memories of the deceased he shall declare the House adjourned. The necessary expenses connected with such memorial services shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House upon vouchers signed by the chairman of the Committee on House Administration and approved by such committee.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "2" and insert "(c)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNFINISHED PORTION OF THE HISTORICAL FRIEZE IN THE ROTUNDA OF THE CAPITOL

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration I submit House Joint Resolution 21 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Joint Committee on the Library is authorized and directed to provide for the utilization of a part of the unfinished portion of the historical frieze in the rotunda of the Capitol to portray the story of aviation in the United States. For that purpose the joint committee shall select a design which appropriately depicts such story, including the portrayal of the all-important achievements of Wilbur Wright and Orville Wright, and shall employ such artists as may demonstrate to the satisfaction of the joint committee their ability to perform the work in a proper manner.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I submit House Resolution 156 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the further expenses of conducting the studies and investigations authorized by House Resolution 137, Eighty-first Congress, incurred by the Committee on the Judiciary, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $50,000 additional, including expenditures for the employment of such experts, clerical, stenographic, special counsel, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by said committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 1, strike out "further."

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$50,000 additional" and insert "$30,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPHIC SERVICE AND CLERK HIRE FOR MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 4583) relating to telephone and telegraph service and clerk hire for Members of the House of Representatives.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for each fiscal year beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, in the case of each Member of the House of Representatives, there shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, subject to the limitation provided in section 2, the following charges:

(a) Charges on long-distance telephone calls (1) originating in the Member's office in the District of Columbia, or (2) originating outside the District of Columbia but made by the Member to his office in the District of Columbia, and on which the charges have been reversed; and

(b) Charges on telegrams sent by or on behalf of the Member from the District of Columbia or on telegrams sent collect from outside the District of Columbia by the Member to his office in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. In the case of any Member of the House of Representatives other than the Speaker, the majority leader, the minority leader, the majority whip, and the minority whip, the aggregate amount of the charges which may be so paid from the contingent fund for any fiscal year shall not exceed $500.

SEC. 3. After June 30, 1949, no telegrams shall be charged to the official business of the House of Representatives by any Member.

SEC. 4. Effective July 1, 1949, the clerk hire of each Member of the House of Representatives shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum. No person shall receive basic compensation from such clerk hire at a rate in excess of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 5. The last sentence of section 501 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended, is hereby amended by inserting after the word "now" the words "or hereafter."

SEC. 6. As used in this act, the term "Member" or "Member of the House of Representatives" includes a Representative in Congress, a Delegate from a Territory, and the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "and on which the charges have been reversed" and insert in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "to any department, agency, or office of the Federal Government or of the government of the District of Columbia, or to any department, agency, or office of the government of any State or of any political subdivision of a State."

Page 2, line 6, before the period insert a comma and the following: "to any department, agency, or office of the Federal Government or of the government of the District of Columbia, or to any department, agency, or office of the government of any State or of any political subdivision of a State."

Page 2, line 18, strike out "$12,000" and insert "$12,500" in lieu thereof.

Page 2, line 25, before the word "the" insert "(a)" and on page 3, line 3, before the period insert a semicolon and the following: "and (b) the term "State" includes the several States, the Territories, and Puerto Rico."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES PARTICIPATION IN THE UNITED NATIONS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 178)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

The accompanying report on the participation of the United States in the United Nations for 1948 is transmitted to the Congress on the recommendation of the Secretary of State.

The report has my approval.

At this stage in the life of the United Nations it is appropriate to say a word about the Charter and the Organization. The Charter is at once a statement of objectives and a guide to action. It proclaims the objectives of preventing future wars, of settling international disputes by peaceful means and in conformity with principles of justice, of promoting world-wide progress and better standards of living, of achieving universal respect for and observance of fundamental human rights and fundamental freedoms, and of removing the economic and social causes of international conflict and unrest.

These objectives are well stated in the Charter itself. We subscribed to them at the time we signed the Charter. We are firm in our resolution to work for these objectives.

The Charter is a guide to action. While this is so for all members, it is particularly so for those enjoying the "right of veto." There is a greater obligation on these five powers than on the other members to conduct themselves in accord with the principles of the Charter. They must "settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered." Equally, they must "refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations." Fulfillment of these obligations means the exercise of national self-restraint in international relations. Along with other Charter obligations they place limits on our freedom of action. But these limits are self-imposed, because we signed the Charter without reservation. During 1948 we have continued to recognize these Charter obligations as restrictions upon our conduct. We will continue so to recognize them. And we have a right to expect other members of the United Nations to act similarly, for the Charter is a pledge of good faith exchanged by each member with all the others.

I recommend the accompanying report to the attention of the Congress. The nature of our participation and the many different ways in which it is manifested may come as a surprise to many members. But it will not be an unpleasant surprise. We have taken the leadership in many fields of international relations. We can be proud of what we have done. If the United Nations as a security organization has disappointed us, as the Secretary of State notes, and if we have had to take supplemental measures to meet actual or potential threats to our security, it is not because the United States has not put forth real efforts to develop the United Nations to its full stature. The world today is not the world we had hoped for when the San Francisco Conference adjourned less than 4 years ago.

The United States supports the United Nations in all respects. The following pages tell how that was done in 1948.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 12, 1949.

FILING OF MINORITY REPORT

Mr. JACKSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I might have until midnight tomorrow night to file a minority report on the bill H. R. 2785, the international emergency children's fund, to accompany House Report 569.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

REORGANIZATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 203 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution, notwithstanding any rule of the House to the contrary, it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3559) to strengthen and improve the organization and administration of the Department of State, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the consideration of the bill H. R. 3559, a similar bill having already been acted upon favorably by the other body.

It aims to strengthen and improve the administration of the Department of State, which improvement I feel it can stand. The rule provides for 2 hours general debate, after which the bill will be considered under the 5-minute rule.

The bill provides for an Under Secretary of State and 10 Assistant Secretaries of State added to the Department of State. These Secretaries shall be appointed by the President by and with the approval of the Senate. A counselor of the Department of State and a legal adviser are also to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, with rank comparable to the 10 Assistant Secretaries. In view of the expansion of the duties of the State Department, I feel this bill is absolutely necessary.

This morning on the floor of the House I heard some gentlemen from Texas, Mississippi, and one or two other gentlemen from the South, criticize the Secretary for his position relative to Spain and our so-called great friend, Franco! I cannot quite understand why these gentlemen continue to advocate the extension of our friendly hand, aid, and assistance to Spain, Argentina, and to other enemies who fought and bled us during the last World War. They are ready to punish those who fought with us, but they desire to reward our enemies. To that extent they have and are trying to aid Japan, a country that has been so "kindly" to the United States as witnessed by a sneak attack on Pearl Harbor in 1941 while at the same time their special emissaries were asuring us of their great friendship, all make for inconsistency. The same thing applies to the solicitude on the part of these gentlemen for the Nazis who also have been so "friendly" to us. I cannot quite understand the philosophy or the underlying reasons of some of these gentlemen. I have a feeling however which I hesitate to express as to their underlying motives.

Personally, I have disagreed with Mr. Acheson heretofore because I thought that due to his continuous conferences with former President Hoover, before he was made Secretary of State, he would follow the advice of Mr. Hoover's adviser, Mr. John Foster Dulles. This latter gentleman, in conjunction with the representatives of the banking institutions of New York, particularly Dillon, Read & Co., and others who have been continuously aiding Germany and rebuilding the Farben cartels, are robbing and imposing a tax on every American of from $1 to $10 a year on hundreds of different articles because of the combines and agreements that these Nazis have with American manufacturers who work in conjunction with them under secret agreements.

I read some weeks ago that some representatives of the oil and steel companies and other corporations went over to Germany to advise the Farben and Krupp interests on how to produce more and more. This was the Humphrey Committee. They did this in conjunction with the shrewd, conniving diplomats who unfortunately have wielded a great deal of influence in our State Department, and I hope such practices will be put to an end.

Mr. Speaker, I think that at this point, we should congratulate our President on his accomplishment in ridding the State Department of men who have been placed there by the banking and industrial interests. These men are former Secretary of Defense Forrestal, former president of Dillon, Read & Co.; William H. Draper, Jr., former vice president of Dillon, Read & Co., and former Under Secretary of the Army; Paul Nitze, former vice president of Dillon, Read & Co. and now deputy director of the International Trade Policy of the United States, who has yet to be replaced; mention must also be made of Phillip Hawkins, who is Draper's son-in-law and who has been playing a prominent role in the military government in Germany for the past 3½ years. These men were all carrying out a policy of rebuilding German cartels and German war potential, and at the same time seeing to it that no harm is done to these friendly interests who not only started the war, but gave us Hitler, killed 300,000 men, maimed and wounded nearly a million men, women, and children, to say nothing about the cost to our country of nearly $300,000,000,000. This will take years and years and generations of taxpayers to pay off this amount. This also necessitated borrowing from the American people in addition to an increase in taxes, by the sale and purchase of bonds—$252,000,000,000 still unpaid. Nevertheless, these men in our State Department have been working to return to Germany all of the production of her plants and factories that have been used against us heretofore, and I fear, will be utilized in the near future once again for a third world war. The reports of many outstanding representatives, including some of our sincere generals who actually led our forces against the Nazi plunder and murder bund, are in one accord that the Germans have not as yet learned their lesson—that they are preparing for a third world war against us. All this in order to show us how superior a race they are and what they will do to America, who brought about their defeat.

Taking everything into consideration, I feel that the strengthening and improving of the State Department as proposed in this bill is in order. I hope Secretary Acheson will not be controlled by the group which the bankers imposed on the State Department heretofore. Of course they will say, "Well, it is a Democratic administration." Yes, I concede that. But unfortunately for the State Department and for our country, these men were injected and forced into our State Department by the Republican Secretary Stimson and the Republican Secretary of the Navy Knox. These two Republican gentlemen have selected these men, and they have found their places of importance in the Army and the Navy finally penetrating the Department of State. You know that that is so. I hope in the future the President will continue to safeguard and protect our Nation against our enemies and that he will not tolerate any man in the State Department or any other department, who is not a loyal, 100-percent American. Charges have been made from time to time that the State Department harbors many Communists. If they are guilty of harboring any Communists, by the eternal heavens, I feel that those responsible for harboring them should be removed from that Department. But on the other hand, I feel, and I believe from the information that I have, that we have a great many men in the State Department—or we did have, at least—who are not Communists—and I know they do not like the name, except I cannot name them otherwise—but if anything, they do believe and carry out the policies of the Fascists. As gentlemen of greater ability have stated frequently, the capitalist group who are seeking more power and more wealth are inclined to be in favor of fascism, the same as they were under Hitler and in Japan and as regards Franco and Argentina and other countries, and this cannot be denied, as witnessed by the statement made recently by His Holiness, the Pope.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that these new men who will be appointed by our President will have only the best interests of the country at heart and will not be subservient or be controlled by the shrewd and conniving expert British diplomats, who, I cannot help but believe, fit into the definition that a "diplomat" is one who says no when he means yes, and says yes when he means no. Nor will they be subservient to the representatives of the Wall Street lawyers and banking houses who have been and are connected with the unscrupulous, avaricious, I. G. Farben and other international cartels and monopolies.

All this will be extremely necessary, for only this morning I read an article dispatched from Reuters which I am inserting herewith and which speaks for itself—res ipsa loquitur:

PLAN SUIT TO GET BACK PROPERTIES OF TWO IMPRISONED NAZIS

FRANKFURT, GERMANY, May 10.—A suit for the recovery of more than $1,000,000,000 worth of confiscated industrial property will be filed on behalf of the imprisoned German industrialists, Friedrich Flick and Alfred Krupp, in a Washington court.

The suit, to be filed by three American attorneys, will seek recovery of the industrial property of the former steel and arms kings confiscated by the military government and the Nuernberg war crimes tribunal.

Earl J. Carroll, San Francisco lawyer, said today the petition would be based partly on arguments that the confiscation orders were illegal and that the Krupp assets still legally belong to Alfred Krupp's mother. Flick was sentenced to 7 years imprisonment and Krupp to 12.

I feel that this is only the beginning of similar action on the part of other Nazi industrialists to follow in mulcting the American people out of millions, yes, billions of dollars.

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein an article, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PRIEST). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. I now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may use, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield briefly.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] a question. I have heard the gentleman speak a great many times on the floor about Fascists, and today the gentleman again repeated the statement that there were Fascists in the State Department. Your party has been in control for something like 17 years. Why do you not name some of those Fascists so the President can get them out?

Mr. SABATH. I have named them the last time to you. I will put their names in my remarks.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield further. I will be interested in reading that report in the RECORD.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Will you also be interested in the State Department getting them out?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I cannot speak for the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to my distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]. I have followed his address in the House as best I could. I must be very frank and say to the membership that I am not certain I understood just exactly that which he said, but if I got the purport of most of his talk, it was not directed toward the resolution that is before the House, but, instead, seemed to be a rather poorly veiled attack on several great Americans. There was certainly an insinuation, if nothing else—and I regret the gentleman made it in his remarks—that General Clay has not done a good job in Germany. Certainly there was in the gentleman's remarks a repetition of much of the propaganda that I have read in the Communist press, and that I have heard reported from Moscow, as to the establishment of cartels, and the failure of General Clay and others to do their duty as good Americans in occupied Germany.

I am sure that most thinking Americans know that all of those charges have been investigated and have been proven to be without foundation, and that every American official commission, congressional and otherwise, who has looked into the administration of General Clay in Germany, has reported back that those charges which have been so loudly and so blatantly made by Communist commentators and the Communist press against General Clay and other American officials are absolutely untrue and unfounded, and not based on fact.

Then there was seeming'y included in the gentleman's remarks an almost direct attack on another great American, John Foster Dulles. Of course, John Foster Dulles belongs to a political party different from that of the gentleman from Illinois. I can go this far with the gentleman from Illinois; that I have not always agreed with everything that John Foster Dulles has done in a political way, even within my own party. However, I do not believe that any reasonable person can question the patriotism of John Foster Dulles or can have anything but praise for the great service which he has rendered to America and to all humanity at the request of the President.

Mr. KEEFE. And is still rendering.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Yes; a service he is rendering in a nonpartisan, nonpolitical position as one of the American delegates to the United Nations.

Mr. KEEFE. Appointed by the President.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Yes; he is now a representative of the United States in the United Nations, appointed, of course, as the gentleman from Wisconsin has well said, by the President of the United States. I hope that in the consideration of important legislation such as this we shall not devote our time to carping little criticisms that will injure the great objective we have in view.

I respect and have great affection for the gentleman from Illinois, but I regret he saw fit to use this particular measure as the vehicle for an attack on a number of fine Americans, and I hope that when he revises his remarks he will be very careful that he does not give any comfort to the enemy by what he said here today.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 203 makes in order the consideration of H. R. 3559. It allows 2 hours of general debate and amendment under the 5-minute rule. This is a bill introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE], and has been reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Its purpose is to make possible the carrying out of recommendations of the Commission on the Reorganization of the Executive Branch of the Government, better known, as the Hoover Commission, for the reorganization of the Department of State. I understand—and I hope to be corrected if I am wrong—that the bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I am very happy to be able to advise to the House there was no partisanship displayed in any way in the consideration of this measure by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

As a member of the Commission on the Reorganization of the Executive Branch of the Government I am very much pleased by the prompt way in which the Committee on Foreign Affairs has taken action on this matter. Digressing for a moment, may I add that the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD], chairman of the Subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, reported to me this morning that his committee would be ready within a few days with a bill which will reorganize the procurement activities and the general services of the Government in line with the recommendations of our Commission. To know that the House at least is moving along rapidly in a legislative way for the reorganization of this Government so as to bring about greater economy and efficiency in the conduct of public business, is indeed encouraging.

What does this bill do? It does not, of course, reorganize the State Department, but it does set up certain legislative machinery and does confer certain authority which will permit and make possible the reorganization of the State Department as recommended by the Commission. One of the members of the Commission on Reorganization of the executive branch of the Government is now the Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Acheson. At the time he was appointed he was not in the Government. Mr. Acheson, who had formerly been the Under Secretary of State, brought to the Commission a great deal of detailed information as to the organizational needs of the State Department, then, too we had the assistance of a great task force which made a study of the Department of State, and gave us the benefit of their suggestions.

I feel, and certainly hope, that under the Secretaryship of Mr. Acheson there will be a real reorganization of the State Department. If that reorganization does not come it will not be the fault of the Congress of the United States or of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which has reported this pending legislation.

What does this bill do? First of all, it reenacts certain provisions of law and expands by four the number of under secretaries and assistant secretaries which the State Department may have. That is done in order to establish a clear line of command from the President down through the Secretary of State to the various divisions of the State Department so that the American people and the Congress of the United States can, first of all, hold the President responsible for the conduct of foreign affairs. He in turn can hold the Secretary of State responsible for carrying out his policies, and in turn the Secretary of State, through his division heads, can fix responsibility down to the lowest individual in his department.

Some things have been said on this floor by the gentleman from Illinois to the effect that there is a great need for reorganization of the State Department from several angles. I agree with the gentleman in this particular, and I love to agree with him when he is right. It is time we clean out of the State Department all individuals, regardless of their political philosophy, who are not loyal to the United States of America. So I want to thank the gentleman for that particular comment which he made in his speech.

Under the provisions of this bill, the Department would have one Under Secretary. It has one now, as far as that is concerned. It would have 10 Assistant Secretaries of State. Two of these assistants could be designated by the Secretary of State to serve as Assistant Under Secretaries. The bill goes further, however, and gives the Secretary of State clear and definite power and authority, by amending the Foreign Service Act, to reorganize not only the State Department, but also the Foreign Service, and to consolidate and coordinate the work and efforts of both. It gives the Secretary complete power to direct and control the activities of the Foreign Service of the United States. For a good many years there has been some discussion as to how closely the State Department itself and the Foreign Service worked together on many of our important international and foreign-policy problems. So I say to you that this is a step in the right direction. However, I wish to emphasize again that this proposed law simply confers authority and makes it possible for the State Department to properly reorganize along the lines recommended by the Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government.

We have been reorganizing the State Department on and off for a good many years. As I understand it, the Assistant Secretary of Administration now in charge of that reorganization, Mr. Peurifoy, has been working on this task for about 2 years. In my opinion, he has done a better job, and has at least made a better start, than any other individual who has attempted the task. Of course, this bill now before us will make it possible for him, under the direction and with the support of the Secretary of State, Mr. Acheson, to more easily put into effect a proper reorganization of the Department.

If the reorganization plans recommended by our Commission are put into effect, as we hope they will be, then there is no reason why 2 or 3 years from now anyone should be getting up on the floor of the House and charging we have people down in the State Department who do not belong there, because the Secretary of State will have power to get rid of all unsatisfactory employees.

I am hoping that this rule will be adopted and that this bill will be quickly passed.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS. I think that as this is possibly one of the first reorganization bills to come to the floor, it might be appropriate to pay a word of tribute to my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN]. I know this is embarrassing to him. He was not only coauthor of the legislation to create this reorganization commission last year, but I feel I am justified in telling tales out of school to this extent, that I have found out from some other members of the Commission how valuable his vast knowledge and experience, not only of Government, but of private business, has been in the deliberations and decisions of the Hoover Commission. At the risk of embarrassing him, I want to pay this tribute at this time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am embarrassed, and I am appreciative at the same time. But, at least your remarks show that we have harmony in the Ohio delegation.

I hope that this resolution will be adopted unanimously, and that this bill will also be enacted by a unanimous vote of the House. After all this is a bipartisan effort that we are making, and all we can do here in the House—I want to reiterate again—is to make it possible for proper actions to be taken. By so doing we have lived up to our responsibility. I hope, and I believe, that the heads of the State Department as now constituted will make every endeavor to carry out the recommendations of the Commission and the will of the Congress through an effective reorganization under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I would just like to say that one of the suggestions made in the Committee on Rules is being incorporated in the bill as a committee amendment.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Yes. I am very pleased to say that the committee will offer as a committee amendment a slight amendment to the bill, recommended and suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and also by myself, which will make certain that the Secretary does have the power to coordinate the efforts of the Foreign Service with the State Department.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, just 158 years ago, less than two short years after the adoption of our great charter of government, the people of Poland adopted for themselves a similar manifesto of freedom. May 3, 1791, became the Fourth of July for the Polish Nation.

The Polish Constitution of that year marked the regeneration of that nation from a serf state into a flowering democracy. Predicated upon the sovereignty of the people the philosophy of that constitution was one of humanitarianism and tolerance. It provided, like our own Constitution, for separation of powers among the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of government under the form of a limited constitutional monarchy. All of the basic freedoms, including that of religion, were guaranteed, and the age-old system of Polish parliamentarianism was preserved.

Unfortunately, expression of the ideals of the Polish people in a constitution did not forestall the third and most lamentable partition of Poland in 1795 when that gallant little country was ravaged by Russia, Germany, and Austria.

It was not until 1918 when under the guidance of the noble principles insisted upon by Woodrow Wilson, that the philosophy of the Polish Constitution of 1791 was possible of effectuation, and from that date until the lowering of the iron curtain Poland stood proudly in the forefront of the ranks of world democracies.

It is ironic, indeed, that the nation which first felt the brunt of Nazi brutality should now find itself under the bondage of Communist despotism. But the entire history of Poland has been one of sacrifice and travail.

As our ally during the last great world war, as a nation whose national aspirations have always been oriented to those of the great Republic of the west, as a land which furnished many heroes in our own struggle for independence, the hearts and hands of the people of the United States have always gone out in sympathy and understanding to the people of Poland. The bond of friendship between the two nations shall survive the present government of Poland.

It is the people of Poland, and not its government, which we salute in this month of the anniversary of the Polish Constitution. The norms, the principles, and the philosophy of that great document have been ingrained in the hearts of the Polish people and have become a part of their national character. The brave people who have witnessed the downfall of Germany, Austria, and czarist Russia will, I am confident, survive to witness the disintegration of the Soviet Government, the rolling back of the iron curtain, and the reestablishment of a full and independent Poland.

When that happy event occurs, and God grant that it will not be too far in the future, a restored Poland, free of the communisim which has paralyzed her liberty, will again arise as a bastion of democracy in eastern Europe. Then the unconquered spirit of these brave and faithful people will soar again in the free air of Poland, and with the blessings of their own constitution as a bulwark of independence, the indomitable courage of the Polish people will carry their native land forward to new and greater heights among the commonwealths of democracy.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, in connection with this legislation regarding the State Department, it seems to me if the

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

State Department keeps handling the affairs of the world as in the past, so far as our Nation is concerned, we are on the wrong road. We want to get rid of the leftists that are in the State Department and bring the State Department to the realization that they should look after the affairs of America and not assume all the responsibilities of the nations of the world, because we just cannot do it. I hope that there will be someone on the Committee on Foreign Affairs that will take the position that these men who want to assume the responsibilities of the nations of the world, must take a different attitude and look after the interests of the American people, or we are lost—lost in the world morass.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to congratulate the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] despite the fact he questioned my veracity as to a statement I made.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I never question the gentleman's veracity; I question his judgment.

Mr. SABATH. I am familiar with the splendid work the gentleman has done on the so-called Hoover Commission. It comes natural that he should cooperate with Mr. Hoover and the rest of the gentleman on the Commission, who, as he says, are Republicans, and in this instance, of course, recommending legislation that would strengthen and expand the activities of the State Department.

When the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] states that he did not quite understand what I was saying, I sincerely regret it. I further regret that he did not understand or wish to understand what I was saying. However, I do say that the statements I make I can verify.

Now as to General Draper, the gentleman said that the statements I made were not borne out by the facts or founded on facts. Let me read what General Draper stated before a committee here some time ago. He was formerly one of the vice presidents of Dillon, Read & Co., who in conjunction with John Foster Dulles and others was representing the cartels and the Farben industries. This is what Mr. Draper stated when he appeared before the Congress—page 811, hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, Eightieth Congress, and I quote:

> I personally have been one for 2½ years who has been attacked in the papers probably more than anyone else for trying to build up Germany and for trying to reduce the reparations program. I admit that I have had that point of view.

Certainly he had that point of view. Is not it a fact Draper not only forced himself upon General Clay but his son-in-law, Phillip Hawkins as well, who is now in an influential position in Germany's military government scheme. All this on the theory that General Clay, who actually desired to carry out the provisions of the Potsdam Agreement which provided for denazification, decartelization, and reparations, did not possess the diplomatic acumen that Mr. Draper and his son-in-law were blessed with.

And is it not a fact that a great many gentlemen of the State and War Departments resigned their positions in protest rather than be a party to the actions of General Draper and his associates in their policy of safeguarding the Nazi interests to the detriment of the United States.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. If the gentleman will yield, for the purpose of clarity, to what gentleman is the gentleman referring? I have no nephew in Germany, if the gentleman means me.

Mr. SABATH. Of course, I did not refer to the gentleman from Ohio. If he had a son-in-law in Germany, our interests would have been protected. I referred to the son-in-law of General Draper, Mr. Phil Hawkins.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I did not know anything about General Draper.

Mr. SABATH. That is indeed unfortunate, for I have the facts. I wish that the gentleman did know about his past and his policies as he himself expressed and admitted in his testimony before the Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the Eightieth Congress, when he stated, and I repeat:

> I * * * have been * * * attacked * * * for trying to reduce the reparations program and build up Germany. * * * I admit that I have had that point of view.

Draper, among others, had been aiding the Farben interests and other German cartels. Of course, I concede that some large American steel corporations and others have interests in these cartels and have bought into them heavily. This is the reason, perhaps, that influence is being used to aid these cartels and rebuild Germany and her war potentials. But it will not inure to the benefit of our country. That is what I am interested in. I am interested in the welfare and future of my country and not in the Nazis or in Japan or in Fascist Spain, Fascist Argentine, Mussolini's policies, or in any of the other countries that have been against us and will be against us when the opportunity presents itself again.

I tried briefly to explain what the bill provides. I stated that it is a step in the right direction. I congratulate the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, for reporting this bill. I hope in view of what has taken place heretofore and in view of what I have said on the floor of the House today and what I have said on previous occasions relative to this question, that these facts will have some effect on the President in appointing men who will not be controlled by these selfish vested interests, whose personal interests always come before the best interests of our country in their connections with these German and British cartels. I hope that these new appointments will not be used or influenced by the shrewd and conniving British diplomats or by Fascist-minded individuals who are always looking for the best and giving us the very worst that they can.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I think in fairness the gentleman should explain, or should agree, that the Commission on the Reorganization in the Executive Branch of the Government of course has nothing to do with the conduct of affairs in Germany and did not investigate that particular field, and that the whole question which has arisen here and the discussion that the gentleman has had relative to cartels has nothing to do with the Commission or with the pending legislation. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks the President should recall Mr. Dulles, and if the President made a grievous error in appointing Mr. Draper. I do not think it is fair to attack those men when we are considering legislation which is nonpartisan, or at least bipartisan, when those gentlemen are not here to speak for themselves.

Mr. SABATH. All I can say is that no man can serve two masters with diverse interests. No man can ride two horses that are going in different directions. The men that I have called attention to have been connected, and some of them still are connected with the banking institutions and law firms who have been representing and financing some of those cartels and some of these German Nazi institutions that gave that beast Hitler to the world and made it possible for Hitler to war against us and against the world. I know the gentleman from Ohio is too well posted on such matters and consequently I am amazed when he says that this Department has nothing to do with the Hoover Commission reports. I exceedingly regret that the Commission of which the gentleman is a member has failed to investigate and penetrate the activities and manipulations of these gentlemen to whom I have previously called attention. I dislike to make the insinuation, but it seems to me that John Foster Dulles was the adviser of ex-President Hoover, the Chairman of the Commission of which the gentleman from Ohio is a member, and adviser to the Republican candidate for President as well. Consequently, from my point of view, it is not nonpartisan or bipartisan, for in this respect, the Republicans under the leadership of these men whom I have heretofore mentioned, have been and are playing a most important part in the rebuilding of Germany. They are entitled to all the credit, and such credit, will, I fear, in years to come operate to their discredit. We have won the war only to lose the peace.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I did not make that statement. I said this particular bill had nothing to do with that issue and could not settle it and I said the Commission on Reorganization in the Executive Branch of the Government had nothing to do with the question or with this issue, and that they had not tried to settle it and cannot settle it and I do not think that you or I could settle it on the floor of the House.

Mr. SABATH. But when legislation is here for the Commission, we are legislating in the interests of our country. We have taken the advice and recommendations, or at least the committee has, of that Commission which has been appointed by the President and I hope that their recommendation is in the right direction. I know this bill is. Consequently whenever there is anything good in that report, I know this committee and any other committee of the House will continue to support it and try to enact it into legislation whenever it is found that it is actually in the best interests of our country.

Consequently, I feel, as I have said before, that the Hoover Commission has not penetrated the activities that have transpired since Potsdam, which in nowise can inure to the interests of America or eliminate the omnipresent dangers of war or bring about peace to the world.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3559) to strengthen and improve the organization and administration of the Department of State, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3559, with Mr. DEANE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, general debate is limited to 2 hours, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE] and the ranking minority member of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

The gentleman from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the legislation under consideration today is recommended by the President, advised by the Hoover Commission, requested by the State Department, and endorsed unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The bill before the House is brief, but the changes it will effect in existing statutes are important. That the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee be fully informed with reference to the purposes of the proposed legislation, it called before it the Secretary of State, Hon. Dean Acheson; Assistant Secretary, John E. Peurifoy; and Director General of the Foreign Service, C. M. Ravndal.

All of these gentlemen, each qualified by years of training and experience, went into the matter thoroughly, explained in detail the plan of organization, and fully and without hesitancy answered the many questions propounded to them by the committee members.

From the information thus obtained, as well as from a careful study and analysis of the bill made by the members of the committee, we had no hesitancy about stamping it with our approval. It is so reported to the House with the committee's unanimous recommendation that it do pass. I respectfully commend to the Members of the House a careful reading of the report for a detailed and understandable explanation of the measure and its objectives.

As a matter of fact, the pending bill was designed to carry out in all major respects the recommendations of the Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, commonly known as the Hoover Commission. There are only three provisions in the bill wherein it deviates from the Commission's recommendations. In detail, the differences between the Department's plan and the Commission's recommendations are as follows:

First. The Commission proposed the abolition of the position of counselor of the Department of State; the bill we have under consideration retains this official.

Second. The Commission would create by legislative action two under secretaryships in the Department; the bill simply authorizes the Secretary of State to designate two assistant secretaries as under secretaries.

Third. The Commission would abolish the post of Director General of the Foreign Service; the bill retains this post.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. I yield.

Mr. VORYS. Does the gentleman not feel that this is a distinction without a difference, in that we save a little money by not creating two higher officials, but that we give them the authority to be definitely Under Secretaries, just as the Hoover Commission recommended?

Mr. KEE. That is certainly the opinion and the determination of the committee—a distinction without a difference, as the gentleman well said.

From this simple and direct statement, it will be noted that the Department's plan so closely follows that of the commission that the only material difference between the two is the retention of two posts, viz: that of the counselor and the Director General of the Foreign Service. The difference in the matter of the two Under Secretaries is but slight; in one case the posts of two Under Secretaries would be established by statute, in the other, the statute would authorize the posts, but would provide for the designation by the Secretary of the officials to fill them.

It can be well understood that there was but slight, if any, necessity for any sweeping changes in the organization of the Foreign Service section of the State Department. A reorganization of the Foreign Service was effected in 1946 by a measure enacted by the Seventy-ninth Congress, in which measure I take pride as chairman of a three-man subcommittee of the committee on Foreign Affairs which helped to perfect the legislation. My fellow members on this committee were Hon. JAMES P. RICHARDS, of South Carolina, and Hon. JOHN W. VORYS, of Ohio. It is my information that the Foreign Service has been and is operating smoothly and efficiently since the passage of the act mentioned. Under the pending bill, however, complete authority over the Foreign Service and its personnel is to be vested in the Secretary of State, and he will be responsible, fully and exclusively for all actions in all fields. The bill, in effect, repeals those provisions of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 which provide a special administrative set-up for the Foreign Service and which assigns certain special duties in relation thereto to its Director and other officers subordinate to the Secretary of State. As has been stated, this has been done in order to vest in the Secretary full and complete authority over the Service, from its Director General down to the end of the roll.

In fact, this same principle is followed with respect to every department and division of the State Department. The Secretary is clothed with complete authority and, at the same time, charged with equally complete responsibility. And this also is in line with the recommendations of the Reorganization Commission.

The bill provides for 10 Assistant Secretaries, an increase of four over the present number. Two of these assistants are to be designated by the Secretary as Deputy Under Secretaries. This is, as has been pointed out, a slight deviation from the proposal of the Hoover Commission.

In its report, the Hoover Commission said:

> The State Department should be organized so that the Secretary of State, legally and practically, is in command of the Department and the Foreign Service, so that the line of command from the Secretary of State through the Under and Assistant Secretaries to the lowest level is clear and unencumbered, and so that the Secretary of State is provided with adequate staff services at the top level. * * * This recommendation is fundamental. Its objectives, in terms of the internal organization of the State Department, are to simplify the structure, clarify the Secretary's authority, make his lines of command clear and free from interference, separate staff responsibility from action or line responsibility, and relieve the Secretary and Under Secretary from the burdensome details which now come to them, and thereby afford them an opportunity for thoughtful study of major policy problems.

This is the character of organization the pending measure seeks to effect, and your committee is strongly of opinion that the proposed legislation will accomplish that purpose.

The bill provides that all of the Assistant Secretaries, including, of course, the four additional ones authorized thereby, together with the counselor and legal adviser of the Department of State, shall be on an equal basis of rank, and all are subject to Presidential appointment and senatorial confirmation.

As in all cases of departmental reorganization there will no doubt be raised the question of what will be the additional cost to the Government. I believe it was a surprise even to our committee to learn that this measure can be recommended to the House as one of economy. While the State Department has not pledged that it will result in a reduction of the Department's budget, we were assured that it was the intention to make the new organization work within the present expenditure limit. In fact, we were advised that a saving in operation costs might be reasonably expected.

As I have heretofore stated, the bill retains the office of counselor. This is one of the deviations from the recommendations of the Hoover Commission. It is believed by the State Department, in which our committee concurs, that the post be maintained so that the Secretary of State may have a confidential adviser to head the planning staff which has long been maintained under the present organization. The counselor will take on the functions of the Secretary's planning adviser. This is dealt with by the Hoover Commission as follows:

> The Secretary of State should continue the present high-level planning activity under a planning adviser, with special emphasis on freeing him and his staff of current problems, upon providing him with broad-gage staff, and upon utilization by him of competent advice from inside and outside the Government.

I believe it to be a fact, known and appreciated by all persons who keep abreast with the times, that within the last few years this Government's Department of State has grown remarkably in stature and importance. This is especially true in the field of foreign affairs. And as the Department expanded so multipled the duties and responsibilities of the head of the Department, the Secretary of State. It is unnecessary to spend time in an explanation of the reasons for this growth and expansion. They are well known. Our Government is today dealing with a different world from that of yesterday, and today, instead of being more or less indifferent to events beyond the seas or beyond the boundaries of our own country and its possessions, we find that we have a vital interest in every event and every incident which may occur in each and every country on the face of the globe. The Secretary of State is the one official who is charged with the duty of taking care of our national interests everywhere. The organization of which he is the head should be as perfect as it is possible for legislation to make it. To accomplish this is the aim and purpose of the measure before the House today, and I trust it may be stamped with your approval.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD].

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I favor the passage of H. R. 3559, a bill to strengthen and improve the organization and administration of the Department of State.

Ever since Subcommittee No. 4 of the Foreign Affairs Committee, on State Department organization and personnel, was created in the Eightieth Congress, there have been vigorous efforts on the part of this committee to improve and make more proficient the personnel of the State Department and the Foreign Service.

The gentleman from Michigan, Bartel J. Jonkman, former chairman of this subcommittee, vigorously probed into the loyalty of some of the State Department personnel, and it was due to a large extent to his efforts that a substantial number were dismissed or permitted to resign. It might be well to call to the attention of the House that during the last 2 years the personnel of the State Department has been reduced by approximately 2,000.

This bill adopts the suggestions made by the Hoover Commission with only two slight deviations. The Commission would abolish the position of the Counselor of the Department of State, whereas this bill retains it. There also is retained an administrative officer who has jurisdiction over the Foreign Service personnel and who the State Department recommends should be retained. In all other matters the Hoover Commission's recommendations have been followed. I am proud that my Foreign Affairs Committee is the first to bring to the floor legislation of this character.

The bill brings about regroupings of functions and responsibilities and establishes clearer lines of authority.

After this bill becomes law and is put into operation, I am hopeful there will not only be greater efficiency in the State Department but that its budget can be reduced on the basis of this law. Also that unnecessary duplication will be rigorously pruned out of the Department. With the necessary number of officials at the top level working through an improved chain of command, it should improve the Department's operations. If this should happen, it would be a progressive step.

As the bill was originally presented, the Board of Examiners for the Foreign Service was placed directly under the authority of the Secretary of State. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] as well as myself suggested that this should not be done. I am therefore glad that the committee amendment will strike out these words so that the Board of Examiners for the Foreign Service will retain its independent, nonpartisan, and nonpolitical nature.

We have given the State Department what they have asked for. Now it is up to them to make it work.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, the origin of this bill has been well explained not only by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs but we have had the unique experience of having a member of the Rules Committee who was a member of the Hoover Commission and the author of the law, my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] in a position also to explain the bill as it fits into the reorganization picture. He did this very ably in presenting the rule for this bill.

We must remember that this bill, which is a short one, does not reorganize the State Department. The bill merely furnishes the steps which the Hoover Commission felt were necessary and which the Department itself feels are necessary so that the Department may reorganize itself.

In the past 10 years since I have been here we have had five Secretaries of State and seven different assistant Secretaries of State for Administration. It has been most discouraging to me to attempt to keep track of the kaleidoscopic reorganizations that have taken place up there in the State Department. The last man in that job of Assistant Secretary for Administration gives me great confidence in this proposed reorganization. I am sure every Member of the House who knows him shares my confidence in the ability, the integrity, and the organizing ability of Jack Peurifoy, Assistant Secretary of State for Administration, who has had the job longer than anyone in fairly recent times and who I hope will hold on to the job and see this reorganization through. As far as I am concerned, this is largely a vote of confidence in him and those who are sponsoring him, who share his ideas and helped form them, former Under Secretary Lovett and the present Secretary of State. It is because of my confidence in those gentlemen that I have great hope that this time the State Department is going to finish its growing pains for a while and become a real organization.

The Foreign Service of our country had a thorough statutory reorganization and going over under the Kee bill of 1946, and it is somewhat gratifying to me, having had some part in the deliberations on that bill which was 106 pages long in typewritten form, to find that time and experience have demonstrated the soundness of its major provisions. It provided a system of selection and promotion on merit, a system of selection up or out, following the Navy, so as to get rid of deadwood; a provision for re-Americanization; a provision for on-the-job training through the Foreign Service Institute. These are some of the provisions of that law that have stood the test of time. The Hoover Commission report says, in substance, that since there is some friction and difference between the Foreign Service and the Department, the entire department should become part of a Foreign Affairs Service which would be similar to the Foreign Service over a period of years; the carrying out of that recommendation is possible under the bill which we bring to you.

However, under the law as we bring it to you, in my judgment, it would not be possible to scrap the civil-service protections afforded the approximately 5,000 people in the Department here at home without giving those persons the protections that are provided under the Foreign Service Act itself. An amendment to that act may become necessary because time marches on and changes may be needed. But it is of the utmost importance that, while we give the Secretary of State the authority and the power recommended by the Hoover Commission, we preserve the integrity and the morale of the Foreign Service.

As our report on the Foreign Service Act of 1946 said, we aimed at "a disciplined and mobile force of trained men, with competitive examinations and advancement by merit." We also said "political influence should be excluded." We find now that the Hoover Commission and Secretary Acheson are in full accord with those aims. Therefore the Secretary is perfectly willing that not only the Board of the Foreign Service should be retained in the Kee law but that the Board of Examiners for the Foreign Service should be retained, so that while the Secretary of State can name the Board, and it acts under his regulations, there must be an examination to get into the Foreign Service just as there must be an examination to get into the Army or the Navy training schools to become a regular officer in the armed forces. Politics and patronage must be kept out of the Foreign Service.

It seems to me that we forget that the Foreign Service is something like a peace army. While we expect of our armed services that they shall be able to go abroad any time and fight and die, and we do not expect that everyone in the Pentagon should have to wear a uniform, realizing that there may be and can be some civilians working there, some of us forget that the Foreign Service must be a somewhat similar mobile, disciplined force manning these 300 foreign posts, 122 of them hardship posts, men who must be competent and willing and able to go out where they are acting alone as the representatives of our Government, if necessary to suffer, and some of them have died within the past year at their posts.

We cannot expect everyone in the State Department to be in a position to do this. The Hoover Commission itself has recommended three exceptions: First, the top-level officials, second, the technical specialists of various kinds, and third, at the lower levels, the clerical and mechanical force at the bottom of the State Department.

It is my hope that this bill will pass. It creates a lot of assistant secretaries. We are going to have 10 Assistant Secretaries in this Department, more, I believe, than any other Department will have. One reason is that this Department deals with sixty-odd missions of foreign countries, and those who meet with the heads of these missions must have sufficient authority and prestige so that each of these mission chiefs will not insist upon seeing the Secretary of State.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to compliment the gentleman on his highly intelligent and illuminating statement, and also to express this thought: I hope very much that under the reorganization plan contemplated the officers of the United States Information Service will be considered for promotion. I believe that until we recognize the Public Affairs Branch of the State Department as a top-level organism we will not achieve maximum effectiveness with the Voice of America and its related activities. I believe that today diplomatic relations are largely public relations, and I know that in Europe great importance is attached to rank. I hope that in this reorganization plan some attention will be given to this matter. If we are to obtain and retain the best personnel, adequate inducements of some kind must be furnished.

Mr. VORYS. As the gentleman knows, there were disputes among the Hoover Commission task forces as to how the USIS should be carried on, but the Commission itself recommended that it be carried on as provided under the State Department organization chart, found in our report.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman has given long hours of study to all phases of this matter. Is the gentleman satisfied with the re-Americanization plan?

Mr. VORYS. I am perfectly satisfied with the re-Americanization plan provided by statute, but due to the shortage of funds it has sometimes been impossible to have these people come home as often as they should. The so-called re-Americanization provision of the Kee bill provides that no officer should serve abroad more than 2 years and that every officer should serve at home 3 years out of the first 15 years of his service. However, the funds have not been quite sufficient to provide that rotation and, of course, the war itself and the interruptions all over the world have made it impossible to carry that through.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is the gentleman satisfied with what the administration of the State Department has done insofar as informing the Foreign Service officers what the foreign policy of the United States is? In 1944 I found that our representatives, our ambassadors, and our chargés d'affaires, and so forth, did not know the foreign policy of the United States and, therefore, were very much handicapped in their activities and their statements.

Mr. VORYS. The gentlewoman has brought up a matter that it might not be helpful to pursue too far here today. We are trying to concentrate on future organization, not past mistakes. I think our chiefs of missions over the world have learned what the foreign policy of the United States was whenever we had one.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman feel that under Mr. Peurifoy we will get the best kind of reorganization that it is possible to get.

Mr. VORYS. I certainly do. All of us who have worked with him have great confidence in him and that goes far back for the full period that he has been there. Let me say that he is a fine example of a man who has come up from the ranks. He came to Washington and took a job in the State Department and has worked his way up until now he is Assistant Secretary of State for administration and has been confirmed by the Senate also as a Foreign Service officer. He will do a good job.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. I join with the gentleman in that sentiment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I think it should be said for the record that the fine statements and congratulations tendered by the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Ohio showing their high regard of Mr. Peurifoy are shared by the full committee regardless of party. I think it should also be brought out at this time that Mr. Peurifoy and all the other assistant secretaries are working for a salary considerably less than some of the people who are working under them are receiving. I hope we will be able to implement the streamlining of the Department of State as contemplated in this bill at a later date by rectifying that situation and seeing to it that the assistant secretaries are given salaries which go with the positions that they occupy.

Mr. VORYS. I am sure that the committee joins with the gentleman in his hope. It was felt that it would not be in line with the Hoover Commission recommendations or the policy of the President to recommend in this legislation specific salary raises for these people. But our committee is extremely interested in the general salary scale bill which we understand will be brought before the House for consideration at an early time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to join the gentleman in his commendation of Mr. Peurifoy.

I think this legislation is noteworthy also because it is the first specific legislative implementation of the Hoover Commission report. We in the House have passed legislation authorizing the President to submit to the Congress plans for the reorganization of the executive branch. But this legislation has not yet passed the other body. I simply call attention to the fact that under the Legislative Reorganization Act, the Congress will adjourn on July 31 and that under the reorganization bill for the executive branch, 60 days must elapse following the submission of any plan to the Congress in order for the plan in question to become operative. This is the congressional veto provision. In other words, it is vital that the Congress take action on the reorganization bill substantially before June 1 in order that the many other departments of our Government can be reorganized. The implementation of the Hoover Commission report is in grave danger due to the inaction of the Eighty-first Congress. At least under the legislation before us the State Department can get its plan under way.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, one last thought. As I have said, it is my hope that this bill will result in the reorganization which is outlined in our report which is contemplated by the State Department and recommended by the Hoover Commission. I do not wish to give the impression, however, that I think such a reorganization will be a permanently perfect solution of the conduct of our foreign affairs. I do not believe that our State Department has ceased its growing pains, because I do not believe our Government has ceased its growing pains, not necessarily in size, but in form and substance, made necessary by the changes which time and events are bringing upon us. It is my hope that someday in the future we will see not more and more but less and less of merely diplomatic contacts with other nations and that as the world comes closer and closer together economically, it will come closer together politically and that we will have relationships with other nations far closer than those which we have had up to the present time, and then once more we will have to review the system by which we carry on our foreign affairs.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RIBICOFF].

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. Chairman, one thing to be emphasized about the bill to strengthen the organization and administration of the Department of State is its nonpartisan origin and character.

The Department of State has acknowledged this. It has made no partisan point about this reorganization bill. Indeed, it has done the very opposite. There is no reason whatever for any party difference about the substance of this legislation.

All of this is underscored by the close parallel between the instant bill and the reorganization plan which it underwrites on the one hand and the proposal of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government on the other hand.

The Commission has applied to the study of the executive branch a standard of evaluation and a care as to substance and detail never before achieved in such an undertaking.

This is the first piece of legislation to come before either House of the Congress as a result of the Commission's endeavor. It represents the common thinking of the Department of State itself and of the Hoover Commission. I quote from the Hoover Commission report:

> The Commission and its task force have kept in close touch with the organizational plans for the State Department. * * * The Commission is happy to say that its thinking and that of the State Department are in complete accord on principles, and, except for certain particulars * * *, the conclusions of both on specific changes are in agreement.

The House should know precisely the details, however minor in character, in which the bill and the State Department reorganization plan, deviate from the Hoover Commission's recommendations.

The first difference is this: The Hoover Commission has recommended discontinuation of the Office of the Counselor of the Department of State. The bill does not provide for the discontinuation of this office. It does not repeal the existing law under which that office was established—the act of May 18, 1937. The Department's plan is to retain this office and make its occupant the head of the planning staff of the Department of State and also retain its occupant in the role of a confidential adviser to and agent of the Secretary who will not be encumbered by routine operational responsibilities. The retention of the planning staff—indeed the emphasis on its importance in providing foresight and continuity in our foreign policy—is in line with the Hoover Commission recommendations. In effect, the bill and the plan are fundamentally consistent with the spirit of the Commission's ideas in this respect.

The second difference is this: The Hoover Commission would provide for two Deputy Under Secretaries of State, one for substantive matters and one for administration. The present bill does the same in effect, but it does so by authorizing the Secretary to designate two of the Assistant Secretaries as Deputy Under Secretaries. Their power and precedence will stem from the Secretary's designation rather than from their incumbency of a post established by statute. That is the sole difference here. It is a matter of minor concern. Actually, it is even more consistent with the Commission's idea of making the Secretary the master of his own Department than is the Commission's specific recommendation in this respect.

The third difference is as follows: The Hoover Commission would abolish the posts of Director General and Deputy Director General of the Foreign Service. The bill abolishes the deputy's post but retains the Director General of the Foreign Service. The Hoover Commission's recommendation is consistent with its idea that the Foreign Service should soon lose its identity and be merged, along with the Department personnel, into a new Service for Foreign Affairs both at home and abroad. The bill recognizes—as the Department recognizes, and as former Secretary Forrestal's separate observation attached to the Hoover Commission report recognizes, and, finally, as the Committee on Foreign Affairs recognizes—that the merging of the Foreign Service and Department personnel in one service, while desirable as an end objective, cannot be realized at once by a mere stroke of a pen or the enactment of a law. It is a matter for years of development and careful adjustment. Until it can be achieved, there are many advantages and no disadvantages in keeping the director generalship of the Foreign Service.

Those are the sole differences.

Now let me say a word about the harmony between the two—this will, with its underlying plan, and the Hoover Commission's ideas. The basic principles in both are (a) a strong, clear, simple chain of authority and responsibility; (b) adequacy of staff, especially at the top level. In words from the relevant portion of the Commission report:

> The State Department should be organized so that the Secretary of State, legally and practically, is in command of the Department and the Foreign Service, so that the line of command from the Secretary of State through the Under and Assistant Secretaries to the lowest level is clear and unencumbered, and so that the Secretary of State is provided with adequate staff services at the top level. * * * This recommendation is fundamental. Its objectives, in terms of the internal organization of the State Department, are to simplify the structure, clarify the Secretary's authority, make his lines of command clear and free from interference, separate staff responsibility from action or line responsibility, and relieve the Secretary and Under Secretary from the burdensome details which now come to them, and thereby afford them an opportunity for thoughtful study of major policy problems.

Those words express the substance of this bill and the Department's plan. They are simply measures to center in the Secretary the lines of authority in the Department. The lines of authority are to run clear, simple, and firm throughout the organization. At the top level there are to be enough people with sufficient authority to insure the firm guidance that is necessary for decision and enforcement.

The committee's report on H. R. 3559 makes it amply clear that clarity of authority and adequacy of staff at the top level are simply facets of the same thing. It says:

> The two principles are mutually related. Adequacy of staff can be determined only in the light of the degree of authority and the scope of responsibility to be exercised. On the other hand, a chain of command can be no stronger than the integration and power developed at the top level of authority.

That our Government—or State Department—can operate adequately only with clear, central authority and with enough power at the top to get its basic work done, is a proposition so direct and sound that there is no basis upon which the parties can disagree.

The Hoover Commission and the Department are squarely behind this proposal. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has come to the same view after painstaking study. There is no reason why everyone in the House should not go along.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may desire to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. DOUGLAS].

Mrs. DOUGLAS. This bill is simple and brief. It represents an effort to enable the Department of State more efficiently and adequately to fulfill its responsibilities as the staff arm of the Government in the field of foreign affairs.

The present organization of the Department of State makes it impossible for a line of action to be determined without the concurrence of two or more units with more or less equal authority and jurisdiction.

This represents a cumbersome application of the idea of checks and balances in the field of executive action. Furthermore, it places an unbearable work load on the person of the Secretary and the Under Secretary as it is these two officers who must spend most of their time resolving conflicting ideas between subordinate units within the Department.

It is this arrangement which the report of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government characterizes as "the present intolerable system of coordinate authority whereby concurrences on different chains of command within the Department are required" and which the Commission says "should be eliminated."

The Commission's report further observes in this connection:

> The State Department, since the war, has at all levels been too much concerned with details and not enough with policy. The Secretary-Under Secretary top command is overburdened by being drawn down into participation in too many daily decisions with the consequence that the entire Department lives day-to-day, and policies tend to be determined in terms of short-range decisions.
> The State Department began in recent years to endeavor to reduce the United States objectives and foreign policies to writing. Continued emphasis on this admittedly difficult task, and on making such written statements available to all concerned, will provide the means by which the regional Assistant Secretaries and the international organization Assistant Secretary may assume responsibility for all but the most crucial decisions and afford the top command time for reflection and long-range thinking.

The regrouping of functions and responsibility necessary for effective administration can be accomplished within the authority of the Secretary to administer the Department and, in his own discretion, to delegate responsibility to subordinates.

To this end this bill revises various statutes vesting authority in departmental matters in officers within the Department and places all such responsibilities in the Secretary himself.

The basic principles in both the Commission's report and the Department's plan are (a) a strong, clear, simple chain of authority and responsibility; (b) adequacy of staff, especially at the top level.

To again quote from the Commission's report:

> The State Department should be organized so that the Secretary of State, legally and practically, is in command of the Department and the Foreign Service, so that the line of command from the Secretary of State through the Under and Assistant Secretaries to the lowest level is clear and unencumbered, and so that the Secretary of State is provided with adequate staff services at the top level. * * *
> This recommendation is fundamental. Its objectives, in terms of the internal organization of the State Department are to simplify the structure, clarify the Secretary's authority, make his lines of command clear and free from interference, separate staff responsibility from action or line responsibility, and relieve the Secretary and Under Secretary from the burdensome details which now come to them, and thereby afford them an opportuinty for thoughtful study of major policy problems.

The two principles are mutually related. Adequacy of staff can be determined only in the light of the degree of authority and the scope of responsibility to be exercised. On the other hand, a chain of command can be no stronger than the integration and power developed at the top level of authority.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BATTLE].

Mr. BATTLE. Mr. Chairman, Congress has given lip service to reorganization of the Government for years and years. Now is the time for action. Here is an opportunity to pass legislation to enable the reorganization of the State Department so that it can really operate efficiently.

The proposal before Congress today, H. R. 3559, is an economy measure in the broadest sense. It is primarily designed to increase efficiency and to guard against the necessity for additional personnel due to continuously increasing demand.

For the first time it gives the Secretary of State complete charge of the Department of State. He has always had the responsibility but up to now his authority has been divided by law.

This reorganization of the State Department has stemmed from the Hoover report made by a bipartisan Commission in the interest of consolidation and more efficient operation of Government. This reorganization plan is almost identical with the suggestions of the Hoover Commission. There are two main differences:

The Hoover report suggested that the positions of counselor of the Department of State and the director general of the Foreign Service should be abolished, while the proposal before Congress today retains them. However, as the reorganization charts will show, there are whole sections of the Department that have been abolished or consolidated. This will result in substantial savings.

This reorganization plan removes wasteful duplication. At the same time it clarifies lines of authority. It relieves the Secretary of State and the Under Secretary of burdensome detail and thereby affords them an opportunity for thoughtful study of major policy. This is accomplished by placing sufficient authority and responsibility for action in five line units under five assistant secretaries.

Four of these assistant secretaries would head up regional units with the responsibility for the four traditional geographic segments of the world—a responsibility that now falls directly on the already overburdened Secretary of State. These four geographic divisions relate to the American Republics, European affairs, far eastern affairs, and near eastern and African affairs.

The fifth assistant secretary would handle the problems and responsibilities of participation in international organizations. You may be surprised to learn that in the fiscal year 1949 the total allocation spread throughout the various Government departments for our participation in international organizations and conferences is $160,000,000 or $40,000,000 more than the combined appropriations for the State Department and Foreign Service. The responsibility for our participation in these international organizations and conferences should be centralized and coordinated by someone familiar with the nature of the task. This would be the function of the new fifth assistant secretary and would obviously result in needed coordination and economies.

This bill before Congress today, H. R. 3559, deserves and should be given the backing of every efficiency- and economy-minded Member of Congress.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEE. Yes; certainly.

Mr. JAVITS. I wanted to ask the chairman whether he agreed that this particular plan of reorganization is a conservative and realistic approach to the very greatly enlarged job of the State Department. A job now expressed in terms of world responsibility rather than just of relationship to other countries, and whether in creating new assistant secretaries, each to direct affairs regarding a separate region, which is the essential purpose of the bill, the necessary action to meet this new responsibility was being taken?

Mr. KEE. That is certainly my view.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time on this side.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be in the Department of State in addition to the Secretary of State an Under Secretary of State and 10 Assistant Secretaries of State.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I am happy that we have H. R. 3559 before us for action. I am sure it will be passed unanimously and that there is no opposition to it. It comes at a time when it is needed, at a time in the history of our country when we must give more and more attention to our foreign affairs and to our relations with foreign governments.

I wish to join other members of the committee in paying tribute to the Assistant Secretary of State for Administration, Mr. John E. Peurifoy. I feel, however, that the members of the committee who have said so many complimentary things about Mr. Peurifoy have not gone far enough. Much has been said that this legislation combines many of the recommendations made by the Hoover Commission. As ranking minority member of the committee which makes appropriations for the Department of State, I wish to call attention to the many hearings that were held by our committee, under the chairmanship of the gentleman from Michigan, Hon. LOUIS RABAUT, and later under the chairmanship of myself, and later and presently under the chairmanship of the gentleman from New York, Hon. JOHN ROONEY. You will find in those hearings, word for word, many of the recommendations that have been made by the Hoover Commission. Long before the Hoover Commission came into being, many of the recommendations that are now being acted upon by this House were suggested and originated in the mind of Mr. John E. Peurifoy.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mr. VORYS. I would like to add also that some of the provisions in the Kee bill and some of the provisions in the State Department reorganization bill are the result of recommendations of the gentleman's subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. STEFAN. I thank the gentleman very much.

The fact of the matter is that when we brought before this House for action the bill making appropriations for the Department of State for the fiscal year 1950 it implemented many of the recommendations we are making in this authorization legislation.

I wish to take this opportunity not only to commend Mr. Peurifoy, but also the Members of this House who joined us in writing reports and recommendations, the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PRESTON], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CLEVENGER], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD].

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. Certainly, I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. KEE. I wish to associate myself with everything the gentleman has said with reference to Mr. Peurifoy. The committee believes in John Peurifoy.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. STEFAN. I thank the chairman very much.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I wish to take this opportunity to make reference to Mr. Peurifoy's outstanding talents as a public servant and the sterling character with which he has won the confidence of the committee. May I express to the gentleman our hope that this coordination between the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations, and especially the subcommittee on which the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska serves, may continue. It is very promising for the benefit of the State Department and the country.

Mr. STEFAN. I thank the gentleman very much. I wish to say at this time that the relationships between the House Committee on Appropriations and the Department of State, and the Legislative Committee, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, have been made stronger; and a better understanding has come about as the result of suggestions and advice received from the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON]. I wish to take this opportunity to thank the gentlewoman from Ohio and members of the Foreign Affairs Committee for their cooperation. We all want to improve this understanding.

But I want the RECORD to show, Mr. Chairman, in the reorganization program for the State Department, of the importance of the work of the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. John Peurifoy.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I wish to pay my tribute to the gentleman from Nebraska who presently has the floor, for the tireless work he has done for many years in the interest of our Foreign Service, to the end that we might have a settled foreign policy and that the representatives of our country might be informed as to what the policy of their country was.

Mr. STEFAN. I thank the gentlewoman from Massachusetts very much. She was a long-time member of the Foreign Affairs Committee and her valuable work has not been forgotten by us.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mr. CANFIELD. I am glad to hear the gentleman speak as he does regarding Mr. John Peurifoy. It is my belief, may I say to the gentleman in the well of the House, that there are hundreds of Members of Congress who have never had the privilege and pleasure of meeting Mr. John Peurifoy or, for that matter, the new Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Acheson. Does not the gentleman believe it would be a wholesome thing for some sort of reception or get-acquainted meeting to be arranged so that Members of Congress may see face to face the gentlemen who are running the State Department? I know when we go home to our respective constituencies and we are asked for information and advice concerning the State Department, its leadership, and some of its operations, it is assumed by our constituents that we have unique knowledge, which we do not; the only information we get is from Members on the House Committee on Foreign Affairs and what we hear on the floor of the House. Again I say I believe it would be productive of much good if we could meet the new Secretary of State and his Under Secretary and assistants at some reception or get-acquainted meeting. Does not the gentleman agree with me?

Mr. STEFAN. I agree with the gentleman heartily. It is a valuable suggestion and I hope we can do something about it now.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mr. KEE. I am interested in the suggestion that the gentleman from New Jersey has just made; and, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I shall be very happy indeed to endeavor to arrange such a meeting between the Members of Congress and the men in the State Department.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. Will the gentleman's committee give us entertainment allowance for such a function?

Mr. STEFAN. We shall have to consult the gentleman from Kansas on that.

Mr. CANFIELD. May I say that I am not particularly interested in that item, I think the gentleman knows that. My suggestion, however, was made most seriously and in good faith and I believe such a get-together will benefit both the Department and the Congress.

Mr. STEFAN. I agree with the gentleman's suggestion and I am happy that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is going to carry it out.

Mr. Chairman, one of the most important recommendations in the Hoover Commission can be found on page 3 of the committee report which reads in part, as follows:

> The State Department should be organized so that the Secretary of State, legally and practically, is in command of the Department and the Foreign Service, so that the line of command from the Secretary of State through the Under and Assistant Secretaries to the lowest level is clear and unencumbered.

It is that objective which your Subcommittee on Appropriations has been trying to reach for a long, long time and it is this part of the recommendations which the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Peurifoy, discussed with our committee many times. We are very happy it is included in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 2. The Secretary of State and the officers referred to in section 1 of this act shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Counselor of the Department of State and the Legal Adviser, who are required to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall rank equally with the Assistant Secretaries of State. Any such officer holding office at the time the provisions of this act become effective shall not be required to be reappointed by reason of the enactment of this act. The Secretary may designate two of the Assistant Secretaries as Deputy Under Secretaries.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making a statement on this section of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, It is not so stated on the reorganization chart which is in the report and which will carry out this legislation, but the Deputy Under Secretary of State for Administration will be the many-times-mentioned Mr. Peurifoy. The Counselor of the Department will be head of the policy planning staff, and this position will be filled by Mr. George Kennon, who has rendered such able and valuable advice and assistance to the present Secretary of State and his predecessor. I have felt for years that the job of counselor, as it was set up in the State Department, as a general floater and kibitzer, was not appropriate, and therefore I agreed with the Hoover Commission recommendations that such a post be abolished. But, I want to point out that the bill and the reorganization under the bill will make this counselor the Planning Adviser, head of the policy planning staff, which is an important position, and very necessarily on a staff level under the Hoover recommendation, and under the planned State Department reorganization.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 3. The Secretary of State, or such person or persons designated by him, notwithstanding the provisions of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 999) or any other law, except where authority is inherent in or vested in the President of the United States, shall administer, coordinate, and direct the Foreign Service of the United States. Any provisions in the Foreign Service Act of 1946, or in any other law, vesting authority in the "Assistant Secretary of State for Administration," the "Assistant Secretary of State in Charge of the Administration of the Department," the "Director General," the "Board of Examiners for the Foreign Service," or any other reference with respect thereto, are hereby amended to vest such authority in the Secretary of State.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Committee amendment offered by Mr. KEE: Page 2, line 13, after the word "State" strike out the comma and insert "and the personnel of the State Department."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Committee amendment offered by Mr. KEE: Page 2, lines 17 and 18, strike out the words "the 'Board of Examiners for the Foreign Service'."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I had not expected to speak on this measure, because its purpose and provisions have been fully explained in the committee report and by the chairman of our committee and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS]. I cannot believe anyone will oppose the bill's passage because the more a person may be opposed to State Department performance, the more he should support this as a necessary step toward improvement. But inasmuch as there have been so many references to the development of various features of this reorganization plan I feel under obligation to report that it was first considered and a lot of work done on the problem by the Subcommittee on the Department of State of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, beginning in January 1947. The majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], and I are the only two members of that subcommittee who are still in Congress. The other members were the former chairman, the gentleman from Colorado, Mr. Chenoweth; our former colleague, the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. Manasco, who has served as one of the congressional members of the Hoover Commission and whose long experience with Government agencies while on the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments was of great value in equipping him to make an exceedingly valuable contribution to the work of the Commission; also our former colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Busbey, was a member of that subcommittee.

I must say further that opposition to this long-overdue reorganization of the State Department has not come from congressional circles. Most of the opposition has been from within the Department itself. As the House well knows, the personnel handling our country's foreign relations are divided into two groups: One, those who work in the Department, mostly here in Washington, and under civil service; the other, the Foreign Service, a separate corps of officers, mostly stationed abroad, although some in important posts here. There has always been considerable friction, jealousy, and antagonism between the two, and it led to constant battling within the Department. Some in the Foreign Service were inclined to the old-school-tie attitude, and objected to being considered as belonging to the same team as their colleagues working at the home base. The greatest compliment that can be paid to Mr. Peurifoy—and he deserves everything said about him today—is that after 2 years he has been able to break down much of the resistance within the State Department. The Congress would have been happy long ago, I think, to give authorization for reorganization, but only now has the State Department itself become sufficiently unified to ask for it.

When I first came into contact with Washington officialdom 10 years ago, everybody talked about the State Department as the mustiest and least efficient Department in Washington, and the one most driven with dissension. In those prewar and war years, one frequently heard quarrels even at social functions between members of different agencies. But if there were State Department people present, they would quarrel more with each other than with those from other agencies. There were right wings, left wings, and everywhere in between. It was commonly said that there were at least five major factions in the Department, no two of which spoke to each other, except on state occasions.

The really great achievement thus far is that under Mr. Peurifoy's persuasion and persistence, fully backed by General Marshall and, I assume, equally so by Secretary Acheson, the Department is working better as one team. We hear a great deal nowadays about the difficulties the National Military Establishment is having in getting the three main branches of the armed forces in the National Military Establishment to work unitedly under one head. It is no less important that all of the people working in the field of our foreign relations and diplomacy be equally unified.

Many have spoken today about the great victory in the blockade of Berlin. Well, that victory was due to American spirit coupled with American technical ability and organizational know-how in a struggle that was made necessary only because of the blunders and ineffectiveness, if not worse, of American diplomacy. Military forces are somewhat like ambulances; they are called upon to race down the street to rescue somebody or salvage as much as possible from a smash-up that happens only when or after diplomatic forces have failed to do their job in preventing the catastrophe. Only as we get better handling of our foreign relations can we hope to avoid these jams into which we have been getting too frequently. Only thus can it become possible to cut down our expenditures for armaments and defense and thereby have more money to reduce taxes and to carry on other important programs for our people here at home.

Let me add one further word: I hope that with the direct line of command from the top down and with the adequate staff at top levels which this bill provides, it will be possible for the Secretary of State to get the right and left hands of the State Department working in coordination. It is tragic that it should have awakened so belatedly to the real nature of communism in Europe. But it is even worse that after adopting the Harry Truman policy of resistance to communism in Europe, it still follows the Henry Wallace policy of appeasing communism in China. There will no longer be any excuse for not having a unified policy for the United States of America.

Passing this bill and giving the Department the legislative authority to reorganize does not do the job. The real task lies ahead. Mr. Peurifoy and his associates backed by their superiors have made a good start. They will need the full support of Congress too in what will be a tough struggle, if they are to succeed in carrying out the contemplated reorganization against the great opposition which will still resist from within the Department itself.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee has done a fine job in bringing in this bill. I am very happy to hear the compliments that have been showered upon the efficient people who work for the State Department. May I call your attention to the fact that we have done only half this job when this legislation is adopted. The salaries for these people were last adjusted about 25 years ago. The salaries of the Assistant Secretaries of State have not kept pace through the years with other salaries. They are entirely inadequate for the responsibility of the jobs we want them to do. The Committee on Post Office and Civil Service has been struggling with a bill to adjust these salaries on a more rational basis. The Commission on Organization of the Government recommended upward adjustments in these and similar jobs. The matter was started in the Eightieth Congress. Rather extensive hearings covering people in this and comparable categories were held then and have been held recently by the Post Office and Civil Service Committee of the Eighty-first Congress, and we hope to have that bill before you very shortly. When that bill does come to the floor of the House we hope the people who have worked so hard and assiduously on this bill will recognize the necessity for remunerating the people who must carry out these duties in some proper relation to the responsibilities of their respective positions.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. KEE. May I say to the gentleman that the committee did discuss this matter in their discussion of the bill before us today, and we agreed with the gentleman that discrepancies must be cured. We determined, however, that this bill is not the place to take cognizance of that. We will wait for the general bill to come to the floor of the House.

Mr. MILLER of California. I appreciate that, and thank the gentleman. I merely wanted to call it to your attention, to alert you to the bill when it comes before you.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] has left the floor. I regret also that just a short time ago this afternoon, while I was being called off the floor, the gentlewoman brought up and passed by unanimous consent the bill H. R. 4583, calling for the $3,000 increase in clerk hire and $500 increase for telegrams and telephone calls. It would have been far better had the House taken that matter up under a rule and discussed it. We had no previous notice that this measure would be called up today. Had I been present when this bill was called up unexpectedly I would have objected. If we are to economize we must make certain these proposed additional expenditures are absolutely necessary.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I intend to go into this very carefully when the legislative appropriation bill is considered. I am sorry the bill was brought up in this way, precluding full discussion.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested that the House Committee on Foreign Affairs could arrange a meeting with the Secretary of State, the Under Secretary and the other secretaries with Members of Congress. I remember during the war I suggested to the Speaker that he ask General Marshall to come to us and talk with us about military affairs. That was done and I think it was very successful. I suggest now, Mr. Chairman, that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, if he is willing to do so, invite the Secretary of State the Under Secretary and the other secretaries to meet with us in one of the various auditoriums at the Capitol or at the Coolidge Auditorium to talk with us about foreign affairs and other State Department matters. After the meeting a reception could be held which would involve no expense and no refreshments. We would be delighted to see and hear the Secretaries and I hope they too would derive some pleasure and benefit from talking with us.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. CANFIELD. I do not know whether the gentlewoman was present when I made a like suggestion a few moments ago, but the chairman of the committee has agreed to undertake that very thing and I am very happy about it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am delighted. I would also like to express my appreciation for the very fine work that the House Committee on Foreign Affairs has done under the chairmanship of that very great statesman and learned gentleman, Judge JOHN KEE, with whom I had the pleasure of serving for a number of years on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I want also to say I appreciate the work done by the Committee on Appropriations and the Congress.

Mr. CROOK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to make an observation. When the bill comes up before the Congress—the bill about which the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] made mention—please bear in mind the proposed salaries are in keeping with the philosophy of the Hoover Commission.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the period.

Mr. Chairman, during my first year in Congress, through the recommendation of the Speaker, I was appointed to the Committee on Appropriations. From the beginning I served on the subcommittee for State, Justice, and—at that time—Labor, and later on the subcommittee for State, Justice, Commerce, and the Federal judiciary. Because of my many years of service, I feel I am somewhat familiar with the activities of the State Department. At the request of several Secretaries at various times, I traveled to many countries throughout the world and checked intimately the activities of the Department in those places. Every Secretary, from Cordell Hull down—and I have the greatest respect and admiration for all of them—has come here with a reorganization plan. Every time we get a new Secretary we get a new reorganization bill for the State Department. I think the State Department ought to find itself some of these days and settle down with a workable plan to serve permanently the needs of this great Department. Disturbed conditions for the personnel as a result of these reorganizations, to my way of thinking, have been too rhythmical in recent years and do not make for efficiency. It is true the Department deals with the upset conditions in the world, and we have had plenty of them lately; let us hope the correction from now on will be for the better.

Reference is made to bringing men home. It was years ago that we decided that question when we met one of our representatives in Scotland.

He said to me, "Jolly well, by jove, we are awfully glad to hear that you are here."

I said, "Where did you come from? Oxford?"

He said, "No. I have been here a long time."

I said, "When were you home last?"

And he said, "Twenty years ago. My wife does not care to travel."

I said, "From now on you go home every 3 years and learn something about the United States of America."

We have too much of that. The time has come when we set the plan and follow no one. I made that very forcefully known to the leadership in the Department at that time.

There is another condition in the State Department. I do not know whether it has been corrected or not, but we have people doing the identical work in the different consulates and legations, some coming from the United States and others hired in the country in which they reside. The one who comes from the United States receives more money than the one doing similar work in the country where he resides; and the one in the country where he resides teaches the one who comes from the United States as to the requirements of his position. The harmony so made in the Department I fail to understand. It is no good. I hope it has been corrected. If it has not been corrected, I respectfully call it to the attention of the legislative committee that has charge of writing their laws.

I read with interest the statement of the Secretary relative to sending an ambassador to Spain. In my opinion, his statement falls upon deaf ears. When President Roosevelt was in office and we were making arrangements with every country in South America, we had a very distinguished ambassador in Brazil, and if there ever was a dictatorship it was under Vargas. Where we send our ambassadors is our own business. It is true, perhaps that others are afraid we may have a dual front somewhere across the Atlantic Ocean which, in these days of rapid transportation has become a large-sized pond. We might advantageously have a dual front. We might have Spain; we might have England, and we might even have Ireland as a place in which to land. We must start thinking about ourselves and be alerted to the plans and transactions of those making splendid international business deals while we are straining our relations with a sister nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The Secretary of State may promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the functions now or hereafter vested in the Secretary of State or the Department of State, and he may delegate authority to perform any of such functions to officers and employees under his direction and supervision.

SEC. 5. The following statutes or parts of statutes are hereby repealed:

Section 200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended and amplified by the acts authorizing the establishment of additional Assistant Secretaries of State, including section 22 of the act of May 24, 1924 (ch. 182, and the act of December 8, 1944, R. S. 200; 43 Stat. 146; 58 Stat. 798; 5 U. S. C. 152, as amended by Public Law 767, 80th Cong.).

Section 202 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 1000) and any other reference in such act to the "Deputy Director General."

Section 1041 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 1032).

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will now rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DEANE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3559) to strengthen and improve the organization and administration of the Department of State, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 203, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1704) to strengthen and improve the organization and administration of the Department of State, and for other purposes, strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the provisions of H. R. 3559, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be in the Department of State, in addition to the Secretary of State, an Under Secretary of State and 10 Assistant Secretaries of State. The Secretary of State may designate two Assistant Secretaries to serve as Deputy Under Secretaries.

SEC. 2. The officers referred to in section 1 of this act shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Counselor of the Department of State and the Legal Adviser, who are required to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall rank equally with the Assistant Secretaries of State. Officers enumerated in section 1 holding office at the time the provisions of this act become effective shall not be required to be reappointed by reason of the enactment of this act.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of State, or such person or persons designated by him, notwithstanding the provisions of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 999) or any other law, except where authority is vested in the President of the United States, shall, under the authority of the President, administer, coordinate, and direct the Foreign Service of the United States. Any provisions in the Foreign Service Act of 1946, or in any other law, vesting authority in the Assistant Secretary of State for Administration, the Assistant Secretary of State in Charge of the Administration of the Department, the Director General, the Board of Examiners for the Foreign Service, or any other reference with respect thereto, are hereby amended to vest such authority in the Secretary of State.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of State may promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the functions now or hereafter vested in the Secretary of State or the Department of State, and he may delegate authority to perform any of such functions to officers and employees under his direction and supervision.

SEC. 5. The following statutes or parts of statutes are hereby repealed:

Section 200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended and amplified by the acts authorizing the establishment of additional Assistant Secretaries of State, including section 22 of the act of May 24, 1924 (ch. 182, and the act of Dec. 8, 1944, R. S. 200; 43 Stat. 146; 58 Stat. 798; 5 U. S. C. 152, as amended by Public Law 767, 80th Cong.).

Section 202 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 1000) and any other reference in such act to the Deputy Director General.

Section 1041 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 1032).

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEE: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That there shall be in the Department of State in addition to the Secretary of State an Under Secretary of State and 10 Assistant Secretaries of State.

"SEC. 2. The Secretary of State and the officers referred to in section 1 of this act shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Counselor of the Department of State and the Legal Adviser, who are required to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall rank equally with the Assistant Secretaries of State. Any such officer holding office at the time the provisions of this act become effective shall not be required to be reappointed by reason of the enactment of this act. The Secretary may designate two of the Assistant Secretaries as Deputy Under Secretaries.

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of State, or such person or persons designated by him, notwithstanding the provisions of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 999) or any other law, except where authority is inherent in or vested in the President of the United States, shall administer, coordinate, and direct the Foreign Service of the United States and the personnel of the State Department. Any provisions in the Foreign Service Act of 1946, or in any other law, vesting authority in the 'Assistant Secretary of State for Administration,' the 'Assistant Secretary of State in Charge of the Administration of the Department,' the 'Director General,' or any other reference with respect thereto, are hereby amended to vest such authority in the Secretary of State.

"SEC. 4. The Secretary of State may promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the functions now or hereafter vested in the Secretary of State or the Department of State, and he may delegate authority to perform any of such functions to officers and employees under his direction and supervision.

"SEC. 5. The following statutes or parts of statutes are hereby repealed:

"Section 200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended and amplified by the acts authorizing the establishment of additional Assistant Secretaries of State, including section 22 of the act of May 24, 1924 (ch. 182, and the act of December 8, 1944, R. "Section 202 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 1000) and any other reference in such act to the 'Deputy Director General.'

"Section 1041 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 1032)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, the proceedings by which the bill (H. R. 3559) to strengthen and improve the organization and administration of the Department of State, and for other purposes, was passed were vacated, and that bill was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill H. R. 3559.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

INFORMATION VACUUM

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point of the RECORD and to include an article from the Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post for April 19, 1949, and titled "Information Vacuum." There is much food for thought in this editorial and I commend the reading of it to the Members of this body. It is my hope that the Senate committee now holding hearings on the information and cultural program of the State Department will see fit to increase the amount voted by the House to the end that this vital and necessary program, under the very capable leadership of Assistant Secretary George Allen, can be carried out in the most capable, far-reaching, and penetrating manner.

INFORMATION VACUUM

Those persons who belittle the effectiveness of the United States information program abroad would do well to read the report of the Advisory Commission on Information. This Commission consists of five private citizens acting under terms of the Smith-Mundt Act. Basing its conclusions largely on a first-hand survey by one member, the Commission finds that the quality of the State Department program is good, that the program is reaching the people on both sides of the iron curtain, but that the extent is pitifully inadequate to the need.

For example, the Voice of America is regarded not only as a source of truth behind the iron curtain, but also as tangible evidence that the United States is serious about the business of resisting Communist aggression. It thus serves as a means of spreading hope and encouragement. The Commission urges that both the power and length of broadcasts be increased. With respect to countries beyond the Russian yoke, it is perhaps natural that American radio broadcasts do not compete so effectively with national programs. The Commission recommends increasing the attractiveness of programs and the purchase of time on local stations. It has similar recommendations on libraries, films, and other information media.

What the advisory group says carries unusual weight because of the clear relationship between the information program and the other aspects of foreign policy. It is time that both Congress and the administration recognized through more adequate appropriations that the battle for men's minds is no less important than their military defense and physical well-being. As the Commission notes pointedly: "A budget which contemplates $15,000,000,000 for military, five billion for economic, and only thirty-six million for information and educational services (cut by the House to thirty-four million) does not provide an effective tool for cleaning out the Augean stables of international confusion and misunderstanding."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. TABER (at the request of Mr. CANFIELD) was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. JUDD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE EIGHTY-FIRST CONGRESS—FIRST SESSION—FIRST REPORT—RECORD AND FORECAST

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, the first session is well past the half-way mark and it is a good time to survey where we stand. Only two major pieces of legislation have been completed with resulting Presidential approval making them law—the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, extended by Public Law No. 31; and the Economic Cooperation Act carrying the authorization for another year's continuance of the European Recovery Program, Public Law No. 47.

Other major legislation, on social security, health, the Labor Management Act, increase of the minimum wage, housing, antipoll tax, and FEPC remain in different stages of the legislative process. It is fair to say that a Congress with a majority elected on what most of our people considered to be a mandate for a program of social welfare turns out to be so far a Congress of frustration. I have diligently devoted my efforts to trying to break this log jam and to trying to get legislation enacted which the people want and should have.

RENT CONTROL

The Housing and Rent Act of 1949 extends rent control for 15 months to June 30, 1950. I took a most active part in the enactment of this legislation and offered various important amendments.

The beneficial changes in the law may be briefly summarized as follows:

First. Certification of services. This new feature of the rent-control law was sponsored by me and requires for the first time a sworn certification by the landlord that he is maintaining all services to tenants as a condition to obtaining a rent increase. This feature of the new rent law will redound to the benefit of all tenants in our district and in the country. One of the most serious complaints which has come to my attention has been the fact that landlords have been filing for and receiving increases of rent while tenants complained the services they have been receiving have been reduced substantially. For the first time, tenants will be assured of adequate services if the landlord seeks an increase of rent. Nor does this prevent tenants from seeking proper redress as they could before, in the event of a decrease of services even though the landlord does not apply for a rent increase.

Second. Fair net operating income: Instead of the former hardship provisions of the rent regulations, the Housing Expediter has set a formula with which the landlord must comply in order to seek relief. The landlord will have to submit records to show that his property is not showing, currently, a fair amount of receipts over expenditures, rather than compare his current income and expenses with previous years.

Third. Evictions: Tightened eviction controls were restored to the Housing Expediter for the first time in 2 years. In New York we have had a temporary city rent commission in this connection and now there are controls both by the city and the Federal Government so that the tenants get greater protection against improper evictions.

Fourth. Tenants' right to appeal: For the first time in the history of rent control the tenants have been granted the absolute right to appeal from any orders issued by a rent office.

Fifth. Treble damages: The Housing Expediter is once again authorized to bring action for treble damages on behalf of tenants. The tenants, of course, still have the right to bring their own actions, in which event, the court is to award court costs and counsel fees besides treble damages.

Sixth. Decontrolled apartments: Apartments which were formerly decontrolled because of the termination of voluntary leases between December 31, 1947, and April 1, 1948, are back under control at the lease rental. Apartments which were decontrolled because they had been vacant for a 24-month period between February 1, 1945, and March 30, 1948, or had been occupied or rented to a member of the landlord's immediate family are now recontrolled. As a result, many tenants who have been paying very high rentals because apartments had been decontrolled will now have their rents reinstated at rentals which prevailed prior to the decontrol ruling.

Permanent residents in nontransient hotels are now back under control with the ceiling rent fixed as of March 1, 1949.

Seventh. Converted dwellings: So-called conversions by landlords as a result of which additional housing accommodations are created are now subject to examination and approval by the Rent Office before decontrol takes effect. Under the previous laws if a landlord claimed he converted a housing accommodation into additional units, he declared himself decontrolled; now he must establish that it was a real conversion and that additional housing has resulted.

In order to protect the people of our district, I have expanded the facilities of the Congressional Rent Clinic, which has helped more than 4,000 residents of the district, so that branches will be operated throughout the district. I am gratified by the very favorable response received during the past 2 years as a result of the work of this Rent Clinic, and express, too, my profound appreciation for the public-spirited group of lawyers in our district rendering this public service without fee under the direction of Hyman W. Sobell, Esq., Chairman of the Congressional Rent Clinic.

HOUSING

Housing continues to be our No. 1 domestic unsolved problem. Together with nine other Members of the House of Representatives I have sponsored a comprehensive housing bill providing for the construction of 800,000 federally assisted low-rent housing units—public housing—a $1,500,00,000 slum-clearance program, $3,000,000,000 in direct, very low interest loans for the construction of housing units for families in the middle-income brackets and opportunities for rural nonfarm and farm housing. Under this bill the construction goal of 1,500,000 new home units per year would be made possible.

The Senate has already passed a public-housing and slum-clearance bill and I am now exerting every effort in cooperation with national civic and veterans' organizations to bring about housing action for all income groups in the House of Representatives. Public housing and slum clearance will pass, but there must be action, too, for the middle-income groups ineligible for public housing, now priced out of the market both for sale and rental. A national housing bill failed to pass on two previous occasions in the House since World War II after passing the Senate. The climate for the enactment of housing legislation in this session of Congress, especially for public housing and slum clearance is the best that it has been since 1937. The catastrophic emergency remains as great as ever, with over 2,500,000 families, largely those of veterans in the middle-income group, living doubled up with their relatives or friends and as many more living in substandard accommodations.

HEALTH AND EDUCATION

Two other critically important fields of social welfare await action by the Congress—legislation accepting the national responsibility for health, and providing Federal aid to education.

The President's health plan has been offered in the form of a compulsory payroll tax like the social security and unemployment insurance taxes for which medical and hospital services and eventually dental and nursing services are promised. Coverage is to be provided for over 80,000,000 Americans paying a pay-roll tax of 3 percent, one-half each from employer and employee, on wages and salaries up to $4,800 per year. Opposition on the part of the medical profession continues unabated. It is a fact that our country enjoys a very high quality of medical service today considering the standard of medical care in other countries. It is important, therefore, that the quality remain high when the quantity is increased, for it is also very important to remember that millions of our citizens are deprived of adequate medical care because of cost or because of geographical location in rural areas not now adequately served by medical facilities.

I have stated before and it continues to be my position that I shall support the acceptance by the Government of the national responsibility for the people's health without compromising freedom of choice. It must be made possible within this framework to provide for increased hospital and medical care for our people, and at the same time not to mislead them with glittering promises of immediate large-scale services which cannot be performed due to shortages of doctors, nurses, dentists, hospitals, and facilities.

I have always advocated and continue to advocate Federal aid to education. The bill already passed by the Senate appropriates $300,000,000 toward achieving a minimum level of education in all the States, supplementing State funds with Federal grants based on State per capita income. It is important to be sure that each State is doing the limit of what can be expected of it for itself, and that this legislation shall not centralize authority over our educational system in the Federal Government or regulate State educational systems otherwise meeting fair standards.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT LEGISLATION

The heated controversy over the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947—the Taft-Hartley law—has not been disposed of, a stalemate having developed in the House of Representatives.

I originally voted against the Taft-Hartley law and was pledged to its repeal. I consider the recent effort to pass the Wood bill an effort to maintain the essentially punitive basis of Taft-Hartley by another name—an act which has evoked such violent protest from the 16,000,000 hard-working, law-abiding Americans who are union members. Our fundamental objective must be to see that collective bargaining between employers and employees remains and is conducted fairly, and with the least Government interference; save the right of the Government to cope with national emergencies due to labor conflict in the interests of the Nation as a whole, but without coercion.

Other fundamental issues with respect to labor are the increase of the minimum wage and the enactment of a Fair Employment Practices Commission law.

We should expand the protection for employees made available by the Fair Labor Standards Act, as the act has been restrictive in its operations thus far. The cost of living and the general economic level of our country certainly dictate an advance to a minimum wage of 75 cents per hour as a fair one and I have supported such advance.

FEPC legislation, which has operated so successfully in New York, is long overdue. Our constitutional democracy suffers at home and abroad from the absence of this legislation. We give thereby a powerful propaganda weapon to Communist forces seeking to discredit our system.

I have offered an FEPC bill myself, H. R. 192, and have testified in support of it before the House Committee on Education and Labor. I have joined and will continue to join without reserve in the struggle for one of the great privileges of our democracy for all people, regardless of their color, their national origins, or their religious faiths—freedom of job opportunity to the limit of their abilities—and I am convinced that a realization of this goal can be enormously advanced by the enactment of a fair-employment practices law.

NATIONAL THEATER, OPERA, AND BALLET

We are seeking a healthy citizenry with sufficient time for recreation, and fair compensation for our working people so that they may enjoy the satisfactions of which our industrial system is capable. Accordingly, I have offered and worked hard for a bill to ultimately bring about the establishment of a national theater, opera, and ballet, and a bill to help our youth avoid the pitfalls of juvenile delinquency.

People everywhere have enthusiastically endorsed the aim to establish facilities for national theater and music, and to make them available to the tens of millions of Americans who do not now enjoy these arts.

The National Youth Assistance bill seeks $50,000,000 to assist States, municipalities, and social-welfare organizations in their activities for prevention of juvenile delinquency and to afford recreational, educational, and citizenship orientation opportunities for our youth.

I have just completed a country-wide survey of the youth activities sponsored by State and city governments like the activities of Youth Aid, Inc., an organization of public-spirited citizens in our district, of which I am a director. There is agreement by most of the State and municipal authorities that Federal legislation of the character I have proposed is necessary.

VETERANS

My concern with problems of employment, housing, health, youth, and recreation has not, however, overshadowed my great interest in our veterans. A large amount of service continues to be given by my congressional office in individual veterans' cases. I have joined in efforts to assure veterans the utmost in satisfactory hospital and other service benefits. I am gratified that thousands of veterans in our district join me in considering the rejection of the first Rankin pension bill as being a service to the interests of our country, which will result in passage of a reasonable bill.

The care and protection of our veterans remain to me, both as a citizen and fellow veteran, a subject of primary concern.

SOCIAL SECURITY

I have worked, and will continue to work hard for a broadening and improvement of old-age and survivors' insurance benefits. The reserves in the Federal system are great enough to warrant at least a 50-percent increase in these benefits.

In order to be helpful to our pensioners and retired citizens I have offered legislation exempting from Federal income taxes all Federal, State, and city employees' pensions up to $2,000 per annum and also disability pensions.

And while we are on the subject of taxes, it is fair to consider the plight of the ordinary consumer 4 years after the war still paying what are called luxury taxes on baby oil, inexpensive cosmetics, popular-priced handbags, and, yes, on fur coats costing not more than an inexpensive cloth coat. Such taxes ought to be eliminated from the cost of living of the moderate-income family.

PROTECTION OF MINORITIES

As the postwar legacy of Nazi Germany we continue to harvest in our country a group of hatemongers and spreaders of malicious propaganda seeking to turn minority against minority, whether of color or religion, and the majority against all minorities. Accordingly I joined with others of my colleagues in introducing a bill making it unlawful to disseminate malicious and false statements prejudicing the public mind against minorities whether Negroes, Catholics, Jews, Greeks, Italians, or of other races, religions, or national groups. Such legislation is designed to keep our free speech unimpaired and our free press unsullied.

TOTALITARIAN MOVEMENTS

In the past few months I have had occasion to protest vigorously against the resurgence of Nazi activity which has been permitted by the United States military government in Germany, in the management of German industry and German economic and social life.

I protested against the participation by former Nazis and their sympathizers in the German Export Fair in New York City and succeeded in getting the lists of those German businessmen who sought to come over to the fair culled and culled again to eliminate many whose records were questionable.

My efforts have also been directed toward fighting the Communist danger to our freedoms. I have not only fought it in the support of our foreign policy, but have also vigorously protested the outrages against justice such as the "trial" of Cardinal Mindszenty by the Government of Hungary. I introduced a resolution condemning this trial and as a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee joined in bringing about action on the resolution reported by that committee and passed by the House of Representatives condemning the Mindszenty trial as an outrage on the civilized world. I shall continue in this struggle against the forces of the extreme left and the extreme right, which meet in their efforts to extinguish our freedoms.

DISPLACED PERSONS

I denounced the Displaced Persons Act passed in 1948 as brazenly discriminatory. It excluded tens of thousands of displaced persons who had really suffered under the Nazi terror while it admitted others who actually or ideologically played with the Nazi fifth columns. Great efforts have been made to amend this legislation in this Congress. I have introduced a displaced-persons bill to admit 400,000 DP's on an entirely nondiscriminatory basis and without restrictions on their opportunities in the United States. I have also introduced again in this Congress the bill for the admission of war orphans for adoption by American families.

A new DP bill has just been reported out and should in substance soon pass the House of Representatives from where it will go to the Senate. This bill increases the aggregate number of DP's to be admitted from 205,000 in 2 years to 339,000 in 3 years, and provides for the admission of certain children adopted by American citizens. An especially pertinent amendment changes the cut-off date for DP status qualification which caused so much mischief in the present law, from December 22, 1945, to January 1, 1949. The bill also allocates a quota of 4,000 to refugees from Shanghai, China, a recognition, even if only partial, of the critical situation there.

FOREIGN POLICY

As a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives the great events since the Congress convened in January have been of fundamental concern to me.

One of the major struggles in our foreign policy has been successfully surmounted in both the House and the Senate in the enactment of the authorization for another year of the European recovery program.

ATLANTIC PACT

The Atlantic Pact will soon be under consideration in the Senate which alone will be called upon to approve or reject it. I am assured that there will be full and complete opportunity for hearings in the Senate before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee of all people and interests who seek to be heard, and that there will be a full debate in the Senate. Though the House of Representatives will not pass on the pact itself it will pass on implementing legislation.

It is significant that shortly after the announcement of this pact we saw the first break in the Soviet intransigence with regard to the blockade of Berlin. The opponents of the pact claimed that it would drive Russia into a hostile isolation, but not this attitude but a contrary attitude has been manifested by the Soviet Union. I think it is fair to say that the Soviet seems to respect facts like the peaceful airlift, more than words.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION

As we consider our foreign affairs and the effectiveness of these great policies to rehabilitate our sister democracies, we must look forward to the next step of their ability to stand on their own feet as effective producers with a decent standard of living through their own efforts. The United States has taken the lead in this respect in the setting up of the International Trade Organization designed to facilitate the most extensive and helpful world trade among the nations.

I represented the United States as a member of its delegation in Havana when the organization was formed, and I have introduced legislation in the Congress to bring about United States membership in the International Trade Organization.

It also must be recognized that the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, the extension of which for three more years I supported, is one of the keystones in the edifice of economic and political freedom which we are trying to construct in the world.

Finally, there is the "bold new program" referred to by the President in his inaugural address regarding the making available of American skill in the effort to economically and industrially develop under-developed areas. Exports of skill cost us little and are priceless to the recipients. In this way we help them best to help themselves.

INDEPENDENCE OF ISRAEL

No discussion of our foreign affairs is complete without attention to the triumph of justice in which we had an important hand—the establishment of the independence, and now of peace and security in the new state of Israel. Early in the congressional session I fought any interference by Great Britain, out of a misguided sense of her interests in the Middle East, with the beginnings of a peaceful solution of the conflict between Israel and the Arab states.

The valor of the people of Israel, the influence of the United Nations, and the material and moral support of the people of the United States have won them their freedom and their opportunity.

IRELAND

The struggle for the independence of Ireland bears many similarities to the struggle of Israel. Eire should be admitted into the United Nations and at the least a plebiscite should be taken all over Ireland under United Nations auspices for the purpose of bringing about its unification.

UNITED NATIONS

The enhancement of the prestige of the United Nations resulting from its successful efforts with respect to Palestine and the admission of Israel to its membership, have contributed materially to the more optimistic views respecting its future. Under the conditions of the atomic and air age, and with geographical boundaries materially reduced in importance, the development of the United Nations ultimately into a world federal government becomes the surest means of attaining its goal of international peace and security.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

I am convinced that in the interests of our Constitution and our freedom, civilian control of our national security and the limitation of military influence to the technical requirements of the services are essential. National security through our Military Establishment is only one element in our foreign policy. The solutions we seek in the world are solutions through peace. We must see that both in size and in effectiveness our Military Establishment is complete within these proper limitations, but that never shall the United States be rattling a sword in a scabbard.

All of us are aware that in a world of realism while we engage in great efforts of foreign policy, we must also look to our national security. The military budget constitutes about one-third of our total budget for the next fiscal year. The Hoover Commission on the Reorganization of Government has pointed out great wastes which exist in our Military Establishment. In common with others who have served in the armed forces, I am also aware of the need for constant modernization of our concepts of what is the best military posture for national security. These principles and efforts shall have my urgent attention.

CONCLUSION

This is a general review of what has been done in the Eighty-first Congress and what can be seen ahead for the future. Our people may rest secure in the fact that our democracy is working. There are many failures and insufficiencies, much injustice which needs to be righted, and many challenging problems to be met, but our democracy and our people show the vigor capable of meeting them. So long as we remain steadfast in this position, our great Nation is safe.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mrs. NORTON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on May 11, 1949, present to the President, for his approval bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 2440. An act to authorize the Public Housing Commissioner to sell the suburban resettlement projects known as Greenbelt, Md.; Greendale, Wis.; and Greenhills, Ohio, without regard to provisions of law requiring competitive bidding or public advertising; and

H. R. 3932. An act to exempt artificial limbs from duty if imported for personal use and not for sale.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, May 16, 1949, at 12 o'clock noon.

851. Also, petition of Robert E. Hardwicke, Jr., Fort Worth Bar Association, Fort Worth, Tex., recommending passage of the bill H. R. 3971, introduced by Mr. BYRNE of New York, which provides for an increase in compensation for referees in bankruptcy; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

852. Also, petition of Mrs. P. O. Marvel, president, Woman's Auxiliary, Nebraska State Medical Association, Giltner, Nebr., opposing any system of compulsory health insurance and to any system of medical care designed for national bureaucratic control; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE

FRIDAY, MAY 13, 1949

(Legislative day of Monday, April 11, 1949)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, we thank Thee for this shrine of the Nation's faith where, facing vast human issues committed to their hands, relying on a strength and a wisdom not their own, those here called to high public office come humbly to confess "In God we trust." We pray, and would work as we pray, for good government and just laws, for sound education and a clean press, for sincerity and honesty in our relations with one another and with all the peoples of the world; and, above all, for a spirit of service which will abolish pride of place and make possible equal opportunities to all in a human brotherhood without frontiers. We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. LUCAS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, May 12, 1949, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on May 12, 1949, the President had approved and signed the act (S. 270) to change the name of Culbertson Dam on the Republican River in the State of Nebraska to "Trenton Dam" and to name the body of water arising behind such dam "Swanson Lake."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1704) to strengthen and improve the organization and administration of the Department of State, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 4583. An act relating to telephone and telegraph service and clerk hire for Members of the House of Representatives; and

H. J. Res. 21. Joint resolution to provide for the utilization of a part of the unfinished portion of the historical frieze in the rotunda of the Capitol to portray the story of aviation.

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION FELLOWSHIPS—NOTICE OF HEARING

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I announce that the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy has scheduled a full hearing on May 23 on the so-called fellowship program of the Atomic Energy Commission. An announcement to this effect was made on May 6. The preliminary meeting has already been held, and we shall have an open and complete investigation on May 23.

REPORT ON PARTICIPATION BY UNITED STATES IN UNITED NATIONS (H. DOC. NO. 178)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States transmitting a report to the Congress on participation by the United States in the United Nations for the year 1948. Without objection, the message with the accompanying report, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the President's message will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The President's message is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

The accompanying report on the participation of the United States in the United Nations for 1948 is transmitted to the Congress on the recommendation of the Secretary of State.

The report has my approval.

At this stage in the life of the United Nations it is appropriate to say a word about the Charter and the organization. The Charter is at once a statement of objectives and a guide to action. It proclaims the objectives of preventing future wars, of settling international disputes by peaceful means and in conformity with principles of justice, of promoting world-wide progress and better standards of living, of achieving universal respect for and observance of fundamental human rights and fundamental freedoms, and of removing the economic and social causes of international conflict and unrest.

These objectives are well stated in the Charter itself. We subscribed to them at the time we signed the Charter. We are firm in our resolution to work for these objectives.

The Charter is a guide to action. While this is so for all members, it is particularly so for those enjoying the "right of veto". There is a greater obligation on these five powers than on the other members to conduct themselves in accord with the principles of the Charter. They must "settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered." Equally, they must "refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations." Fulfillment of these obligations means the exercise of national self-restraint in international relations. Along with other Charter obligations they place limits on our freedom of action. But these limits are self-imposed, because we signed the Charter without reservation. During 1948 we have continued to recognize these Charter obligations as restrictions upon our conduct. We will continue so to recognize them. And we have a right to expect other Members of the United Nations to act similarly, for the Charter is a pledge of good faith exchanged by each Member with all the others.

I recommend the accompanying report to the attention of the Congress. The nature of our participation and the many different ways in which it is manifested may come as a surprise to many members. But it will not be an unpleasant surprise. We have taken the leadership in many fields of international relations. We can be proud of what we have done. If the United Nations as a security organization has disappointed us, as the Secretary of State notes, and if we have had to take supplemental measures to meet actual or potential threats to our security, it is not because the United States has not put forth real efforts to develop the United Nations to its full stature. The world today is not the world we had hoped for when the San Francisco conference adjourned less than 4 years ago.

The United States supports the United Nations in all respects. The following pages tell how that was done in 1948.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communications and a letter, which were referred as indicated:

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION (S. DOC. NO. 75)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, amounting to $136,238,000, Veterans' Administration, fiscal year 1949 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO BUDGET, FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION, HOUSING AND HOME FINANCE AGENCY (S. DOC. NO. 74)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting an amendment to the Budget, involving an increase of $1,000,000 in the authorization for administrative expenses of the Federal Housing Administration, Housing and Home Finance Agency, fiscal year 1950 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PROGRESS REPORT OF WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION

A letter from the Administrator of the War Assets Administration, transmitting, pursuant to law, the quarterly progress report of that Administration for the period January-March 1949 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were presented, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. SALTONSTALL (for himself and Mr. LODGE):

Resolutions of the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; ordered to lie on the table:

"Resolutions memorializing Congress to repeal the Federal tax on oleomargarine

"Whereas oleomargarine is widely used by the inhabitants of the several States as a substitute for butter; and

"Whereas the Federal tax imposed on the sale of oleomargarine has created a hardship upon a large portion of the population by increasing the cost of living: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts respectfully urges the Congress of the United States to immediately enact legislation to repeal said Federal tax on oleomargarine; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent forthwith by the State Secretary to the President of the United States, to the presiding officer of each branch of Congress and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth."

By Mr. GREEN (for himself and Mr. MCGRATH):

A resolution of the general assembly of the State of Rhode Island; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments:

"Resolution requesting the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to use their best efforts to see that the recommendation of the Secretary of Labor be carried out and that those agencies which rightfully belong in the United States Department of Labor shall be returned to said Department (Conciliation and Mediation Service; U. S. Unemployment Compensation and Reemployment Agencies)

"Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States are hereby earnestly requested to use their best efforts to see that the recommendation of the Secretary of Labor be carried out and that those agencies which rightfully belong in the United States Department of Labor, such as Conciliation and Mediation Service; the United States Unemployment Compensation and Reemployment Agencies, be returned to the jurisdiction of the United States Department of Labor; and the secretary of state is hereby directed to transmit duly certified copies of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States and to the United States Secretary of Labor."

By Mr. BRICKER:

A resolution of the Senate of the State of Ohio; to the Committee on Armed Services:

"Senate Resolution 48

"Resolution protesting commuting the sentence of Ilse Koch, and requesting the proper authorities in Washington to have the matter reviewed in order that the ends of justice may be served

"Whereas voices of protest in strong indignation are being heard throughout the United States and Ohio against the impending release from imprisonment of Ilse Koch, of Buchenwald, and against the action of Gen. Lucius D. Clay in commuting her life sentence to a 4-year term of imprisonment; and

"Whereas Ilse Koch was the wife of the commandant of the Buchenwald concentration camp, and, as such, her trial disclosed that she was responsible for extreme cruelty being inflicted upon prisoners, some of which resulted in their death; and

"Whereas Ilse Koch was an active participant in the design of the Buchenwald concentration camp and that is the charge under which she was tried; and

"Whereas the revolting atrocities of which Ilse Koch is accused have shocked the civilized world; and

"Whereas it is alleged that Ilse Koch took a fancy to tattooed skin and had lamp shades and other articles in her home made of skin taken from prisoners; and

"Whereas an investigating committee composed of seven Members of the United States Senate has concluded that Ilse Koch should receive no mercy; that she has forfeited her right to associate with society and should spend the remainder of her life in prison: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Ohio Senate, That we protest the action of Gen. Lucius D. Clay in commuting the life sentence of Ilse Koch to a 4-year term of imprisonment, and request the proper authorities in Washington to have the matter reviewed in order that the ends of justice may be well served; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to President Harry S. Truman, to the Chief of Staff of the United States Army, to Gen. Omar Bradley, and the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, and to the Ohio Members in the Senate and House of Representatives of Congress, with the urgent request that action be taken in memory of those World War II citizens of the United States who made the supreme sacrifice on the battlefields and in prison camps in defense of their country."

CREDIT FOR MILITARY SERVICE—PETITION

[Mr. BREWSTER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "A Strange Way To Promote Economy," written by Arthur Krock, and published in the New York Times of May 13, 1949, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE PUBLIC'S FIGHT, TOO—EDITORIAL FROM THE NEWARK EVENING NEWS

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, on February 7, 1949, I introduced in the Senate of the United States for myself and seven colleagues a bill to establish a National Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.

Throughout the past week, this and other bills of similar design and purpose have been the subject of extensive public hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

In support of the testimony of many distinguished witnesses who have appeared at these hearings, this seems to be a most appropriate time to include in the body of the RECORD an editorial entitled "The Public's Fight, Too," which appeared in the May 12 issue of the Newark Evening News urging the passage of this projected study.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be inserted in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PUBLIC'S FIGHT, TOO

One of the brighter aspects of the continuing fight by the States against Federal tax encroachments is that the fight is continuing. In spite of discouragements and changing State administrations, there is no evidence of weakened resistance to a tax system which, in effect, makes all States dependents of Washington. Rather, resistance is spreading, and for this credit is due to our alert governors, among whom New Jersey's Governor is conspicuous.

Mr. Driscoll has kept hammering away at the injustices of the Federal tax and grants-in-aid policy at annual governors' conferences when some of the veteran governors have looked upon the battle as "old hat" and not worth the effort.

He has discussed the problem before civic groups, and he has worked on congressional committees. With the cooperation of fellow governors, even some from the have-not States, the issue has been kept alive.

The result has been to impress upon a widening public the realization that the Federal Government not only takes a State's cash, but with it much of the State's capacity for independent action. That was the burden of the testimony given by Governors Lane of Maryland, and Knous of Colorado, who appeared, along with Mr. Driscoll, before a Senate and House joint committee to urge favorable action on the Hendrickson bill. This measure, sponsored by New Jersey's Senator HENDRICKSON, proposes creation of a 14-member commission to study State-Federal fiscal relationships in conformity with recommendations of the Hoover Commission.

Mr. HENDRICKSON should get help for his projected study from newer Members of the Congress, particularly those men who have graduated, as he has, from important posts in State government. They know the cost, waste, and confusion spawned by Federal usurpation of tax territory rightfully belonging to the States. Example: The Federal Government collects $9 to $1 from the liquor industry, but the States bear the full brunt of licensing, administrating, and enforcing the liquor laws.

Wider public support for, as well as recognition of, the States' position is essential. Perhaps it will come when the public recognizes that through a reallocation of tax powers the existing evils of duplicate and overlapping functions can be eliminated and the cost of all government reduced thereby.

PROPOSED NATIONAL COMMISSION ON INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I believe that one of the most important hearings now under way is that being held by the Joint Committee on Intergovernmental Relations consisting of Members of the Senate and House Committees on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. This joint committee is reviewing the bill which I cosponsored, S. 810 and other bills to establish a Commission on Intergovernmental Relations. I believe that the problem of intergovernmental relations is one of the most critical issues facing the Nation, involving as it does the whole question of overcentralization of authority and of taxing power here in Washington, D. C.

In this connection I have written to Representative HERBERT BONNER, a member of the joint committee, a letter presenting my endorsement of legislation which the joint committee is reviewing. I ask unanimous consent that a partial text of my letter to Representative BONNER be printed at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and that following it, there be printed the text of an interesting editorial published in the February 28 edition of the Green Bay Press Gazette. This editorial, endorsing this bipartisan legislation, was published shortly after S. 810 was introduced. I believe, however, that its pointed comments will be even more interesting to my colleagues now than they would have been at the time of publication.

There being no objection, the letter and the editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
May 11, 1949.

Hon. HERBERT C. BONNER,
Joint Committee on Intergovernmental Relations,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I am writing to you to express my vigorous support of the legislation now being studied by the Joint Committee on Intergovernmental Relations. I know how deeply you personally are interested in this legislation for the establishment of a National Commission on Intergovernmental Relations as evidenced by the fact that you have introduced a bill for that very objective yourself.

May I submit my sincere congratulations to you, to Congressman BOGGS of Delaware, and to all your other associates on the House side who have introduced bills for setting up such a commission.

It has been thrilling to me to note the virtual unanimity with which our objective has been endorsed. In my own State of Wisconsin many State and municipal officials have conveyed to me their endorsement of this legislation. The city manager of Madison, Hon. Leonard Howell, indicated to me, for example, that 30 percent of all the property in our capital city is tax exempt. This tax-exemption problem is being aggravated by the Federal Government taking over more and more property for its use. Mr. Walter J. Mattison, city attorney for Milwaukee, confirmed this general problem in his testimony on Tuesday. Thus, this tax exemption is one of the truly critical phases confronting not only my State, but your State and all of the other States in the Union. It can only be met by a comprehensive survey of the type envisioned by S. 810 and similar bills now being studied by your joint committee.

I know that you will agree that the American people are deeply alarmed, too, by the prospect of higher and higher Federal taxes—now taking three-fourths of all revenue acquired by governmental units. Moreover, the Federal Government is being asked to contribute increased grants in aid, which, in turn, will require higher Federal taxes, which means again more elbowing of the States and localities out of tax areas which they mght otherwise tap so as to meet at the State and local levels their own problems, rather than having to turn to Washington, D. C.

As you know so well, there are over 155,000 governmental units in our Nation. The interrelationship between these units poses a problem of such staggering magnitude and complexity as to require a national commission. These interrelations are at present a jungle, a jumble, and a jangle, as I stated on February 7.

Moreover, the fear in the minds of the American people that higher taxes will be necessary has contributed to the general concern over economic conditions in our country and has thus served to aggravate the present business slump in which we find ourselves. It would be a tremendous shot in the arm to the American economy if this legislation you are now reviewing were favorably reported upon and then passed by the Congress during this first session.

If I may, I would like to add an additional word regarding some related matters. I, for one, believe that the Senate concurrent resolution now pending which would consolidate all 12 appropriation bills which the Congress passes each year into one general appropriation bill—that such an approach would be a worthy supplement to the legislation you are now considering. Of course, this concurrent resolution which has been endorsed by leading business organizations and individuals throughout the Nation, would not be handled by your own joint committee, but I think it represents the same over-all approach, the same comprehensive analysis that your own legislation embodies.

Years ago I suggested that there be formed a joint budget committee in the Congress in order to prepare a comprehensive review of the Nation's income in the form of tax revenue and outgo in the form of appropriations. While this matter is not directly involved in the proposed National Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, it is the type of related issue which I know you and your associates will want to bear in mind.

I know that you will agree that we in Congress are beset by so many isolated bills with a purely segmented approach, so many isolated problems that we tend to lose sight of the forest because of the maze of individual trees. If, however, we can pass this particular legislation you have before you now, I feel that we will begin to understand the nature of the forest, and we can begin working toward decentralization of the Federal Government, a consummation devoutly to be wished.

Thanking you for your kind attention, I am, with assurances of high esteem.

Sincerely yours,

ALEXANDER WILEY.

Senator WILEY would establish a national bipartisan commission to find ways and means to "establish a more orderly and less competitive fiscal relationship between the several levels of government," and "attain an allocation of governmental functions among the several levels of government as will contribute to economy in governmental administration on the one hand, and maximum service to the public on the other."

The issues of tax competition between local government and Washington and the invasion of the National Government into fields of service and control which in earlier days of the Republic were reserved for local sovereignty have become a vicious circle.

As Washington with each succeeding decade has monopolized the fields of taxation once occupied by the States and their localities, those latter have been successively unable to finance the newer demands for public services and have been obliged willy-nilly to surrender their prerogatives to the bureaucrats on the distant Potomac.

Why is the National Government now subsidizing highways, hospitals, airports, schools, and many other institutions and services of purely local or provincial character?

A part of the phenomenon of Federal financing of public programs which intrinsically and logically should be matters of local concern is surely due to the insouciance of local political leadership during the giddy New Deal generation. But a part of the unpleasant and uneconomical circumstance is as surely due to the fact that the tax dollar today is in large part a Federal Government tax dollar. The State and local share of the public's taxpaying ability has shriveled so greatly that city councils, county boards, and State legislatures today dare not levy for public purposes which are clearly in demand and clearly justified. Each year, thereupon, we are depending to a greater degree upon the inefficient generosity of the National Treasury to pay for governmental services we should be financing and managing at home.

A division of the public tax jurisdiction in this Nation is clearly needed if we are to preserve the integrity and the initiative of local government. There is no surer way to achieve complete centralization of American politics, and the ultimate sterilization of local government, than to continue the present trend in public finance. Senator WILEY has proposed that we take a long look at the problem in a bipartisan way, and we believe that the Congress should approve his bill.

RETIREMENT OF PUBLIC DEBT

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, yesterday morning President Truman stated, according to the ticker report, that he had retired about $26,000,000,000 in national debt since he took office, and added that that was more than any other President in history had retired.

In order that the facts may be clear, I should like to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point a table showing the state of the national debt at different periods.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Total gross public debt and guaranteed obligations

[1] Highest point in history.

Mr. TAFT. I wish to point out that the national debt reached its highest point on February 28, 1946, when it was $279,000,000,000. It reached that point, however, because in December 1945 the Truman administration put on a victory drive which many of the departments of the Government thought was entirely unnecessary, and sold $21,000,000,000 in bonds to the American public after the end of the war. It turned out that the sale was wholly unnecessary; and consequently this reduction in national debt, which amounts to $28,000,000,000 today, was brought about by paying back, in effect, the money which the Government had just borrowed from the people. Of the total reduction of $28,000,000,000, $21,000,000,000 was paid out of the proceeds of that unnecessary loan made at the end of 1945. The other $7,000,000,000 was paid out of the surplus of $3,400,000,000 which occurred in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948. It is perhaps a coincidence that that was the only year which was completely controlled by the appropriations and action of the Republican Congress.

PROPOSED UNIFORM CODE OF MILITARY JUSTICE

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, considerable publicity has recently been given to a letter which I addressed to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], chairman of the Armed Services Committee, in connection with the bill (S. 875), now pending before that committee, which provides for a Uniform Code of Military Justice. My letter was a 35-page analysis of the provisions of the bill, and I regret that the newspaper comments seemed to be confined to the last 2 pages of the letter.

The official statement of the Navy setting forth the numbers and qualifications of the personnel of the Judge Advocate General's office appears in paragraph 2 of the statement made by Rear Adm. George L. Russell, Judge Advocate General of the Navy, before the House Committee on Armed Services, on Monday, April 4, 1949. In the fourth from last paragraph of the same statement is set forth the policy of the Navy with regard to the rotation of legal specialists to line duty and return.

As to the necessity for the establishment of the office of general counsel, staffed by civilians, I refer those interested to the hearings conducted before a Subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Seventy-eighth Congress, pursuant to House Resolution 30, of which subcommittee the present junior Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] was then chairman.

In order that all persons interested may have the opportunity of evaluating the full text of the letter which I addressed to the senior Senator from Maryland, I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 30, 1949.

Hon. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: As you know, I have long been interested in the problems presented by the application of our courts-martial system to both the personnel of the armed services and the civilians who happen to be subject to the same jurisdiction. I have always done my utmost to protect the civil rights, so far as it is constitutionally possible, of persons of both classes who must undergo trial by military tribunal. Accordingly, I have made an intensive study of S. 857, which purports to unify and revise the Articles of War and the Articles for the Government of the Navy so as to establish a uniform code of military justice. I am, therefore, submitting for your consideration the following comments relating to the provisions of the proposed legislation.

I regret that they are necessarily lengthy, but the bill is of such great import that it warrants the most detailed consideration possible. In this connection I respectfully request that this letter be made a part of the record on this bill so that all persons interested may have an opportunity to evaluate its contents.

In considering this proposed uniform code of military justice preliminary consideration should be given to the following points:

1. The committee on a uniform code of military justice, which formulated this proposed code, was composed of Prof. Edmund M. Morgan, Jr., acting as chairman, and four members of the Military Establishment. The staff which assisted this committee consisted of 15 members of the Military Establishment. Thus the work was weighted by 19 from the Military Establishment to 1 professor from civilian life.

2. This proposed code will govern in peacetime as well as wartime, a large segment of the population of the United States consisting mostly of civilians and persons drafted from civilian life.

3. This segment of the population will be subject to administrative and military tribunals which Congress is asked to set up or continue completely outside the judicial system as provided in article III of the Constitution.

"In appraising the system of military justice, the emphasis must be on its actual operation rather than on the relevant statutory provisions standing alone. Experience has shown that legislation in this field may not always be taken at face value, since the pressures of military life tend to thwart congressional intention and to deprive statutory language of the meaning it would have in other contexts" (Wallstein, The Revision of the Army Court-Martial System, Col. L. R. 48: 219, March 1948).

COMMENT ON S. 857

Section 1 of S. 857, Eighty-first Congress, proposes a uniform code of military justice applicable to all of the armed forces, including the Coast Guard whether operating as part of the Navy or as an independent organization under the Treasury Department. The definitions are set out in article 1.

Article 2 lists the persons who are subject to the code. Included are persons "awaiting discharge after the expiration of their terms of enlistment." The commentary of the committee on a uniform code of military justice found on page 5 of "Uniform Code of Military Justice—Text, References, and Commentary * * *" merely states that paragraph 1 in which this provision appears, "is an adaptation of Articles of War 2 (a)." However, a perusal of that section fails to disclose any such authority to hold a man subject to the Articles of War after the expiration of an enlistment. If this is to remain in the code it should be qualified to make certain that the code applies only to personnel held after the expiration of their enlistments pursuant to the legal order of a court martial as provided in paragraph (7).

Paragraph (11) subjects to the code "all persons serving with, employed by, accompanying, or under the supervision of the armed forces without the continental limits of the United States * * *" and certain territories. Paragraph (12) goes a step further subjecting "all persons within an area leased by the United States which is under the control of the secretary of a department and which is without the continental limits of the United States * * *" and certain territories. The commentary of the committee on a uniform code of military justice states:

"Paragraphs (11) and (12) are adapted from 34 U. S. C., section 1201, but are applicable in time of peace as well as war. Paragraph (11) is somewhat broader in scope than AW 2 (d) in that the Code is made applicable to persons employed by or under the supervision of the armed forces as well as those serving with or accompanying the same and the territorial limitations during peacetime have been reduced to include territories where a civil-court system is not readily available."

Considering the number of persons who served in the armed forces during World War II and who will serve in the future, these provisions will place a very large portion of the population—both civilian and armed forces personnel—under an almost exclusive jurisdiction of military tribunals. As indicated in the commentary, military law has not heretofore been thus extended, especially in application to peacetime conditions.

Article 3 states that Reserve personnel who are charged with having committed an offense while in a status in which they were subject to this Code, may be retained on duty or may be placed on an active-duty status for disciplinary action without their consent. This provision appears to stem from section 301 of the act of June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1180; U. S. C. 34, 855), relating to the Naval Reserve. The enactment of this provision will foreclose appeals to the civil courts in circumstances such as those involved in Hironimus v. Durant ((1948) 168 F. 2d 238), where a WAC captain on terminal leave was returned to active duty to stand trial. The general rule, heretofore applicable with regard to the Army, has been stated in Mosher v. Hunter ((1944) 143 F. 2d 745, 746), thus:

"It is generally true, as contended, that courts-martial jurisdiction is coexistent and coterminous with military service and ceases upon discharge or other separation from such service (sec. 10, ch. 4, Manual of Courts Martial, U. S. Army, 1928), and it does not extend to offenses committed against military law by those who are subsequently discharged or otherwise separated from such military service, unless courts-martial jurisdiction first attached before separation from the service, in which event jurisdiction continues until fully exhausted. (Carter v. McClaughry (183 U. S. 365, 383, 22 S. Ct. 181, 46 L. Ed. 236; Ex parte Wilson, D. C., 33 F. 2d 214. Cf. Ex parte Clark, D. C., 271 F. 533.)) Furthermore, all persons under sentence adjudged by a court martial are subject to military law (2d art. of war, subsec. (e), 10 U. S. C. A., section 1473 (e)), and are therefore within the jurisdiction of courts martial for offenses committed against military law. This is true, although his military service ceased before jurisdiction attached and before trial and sentence. (Carter v. McClaughry, supra; Kahn v. Anderson (255 U. S. 1, 41 S. Ct. 224, 65 L. Ed. 469), and Mosher v. Hudspeth, supra.)"

With regard to subdivisions (b) and (c) of article 3, the commentary states that (b) provides that a person who obtains a fraudulent discharge is not subject to this Code during the period between the discharge and later apprehension for trial of the issue. Subdivision (c) is prompted by Ex Parte Drainer ((1946) 65 F. Supp. 410), which held that a discharge from the naval service barred prosecution of a person for desertion from the Marine Corps at a period prior to his enlistment in the Navy (p. 8). In that case the court said (p. 410):

"It is the general rule that a person is amenable to the military jurisdiction only during the period of his service. (United States v. McDonald (2 Circ., 265 F. 695; Naval Courts and Boards, sec. 334, at p. 92; Winthrop, Military Law and Precedence (sic), 2d Ed. (1920), at p. 89)). And once honorably discharged, such honorable discharge is a 'formal final judgment passed by the Government upon the entire military record' of the person. (United States v. Kelly, 15 Wall. 34 * * *)."

Thus, article 3 proposes to authorize the retention of complete jurisdiction over personnel of the armed forces for indefinite periods.

Article 4 relates to a dismissed officer's right to a trial by court martial and should be read in conjunction with section 10. If enacted, paragraph (a) should at least be amended by inserting after "President" the following words, "under the provisions of section 10 of this act," so that the first part of the sentence will read:

"(a) When an officer, dismissed by order of the President under the provisions of section 10 of this act, * * *" etc.

The following commentary on this article (p. 10) is illuminative:

"This article should be read in conjunction with the provision being reenacted in section 10 of this act. The right to trial will apply only in the case of a summary dismissal by order of the President in time of war. (Sec. 10 covers the provisions now found in AW 118 and AGN art. 36.)

"If the President fails to convene a court martial where there has been an application for trial, or if the court martial convened does not adjudge dismissal or death as a sentence, the procedure followed will be the same as that prescribed article 75 (d) where a previously executed sentence of dismissal is not sustained on a new trial. This changes the present statutory provisions set out in the references. The change is made because of the doubt, expressed by Winthrop and other commentators, as to the constitutionality of the present provision declaring that an order of dismissal, lawfully issued by the President, shall be void under certain circumstances. Under the proposed procedure it will be possible to achieve the same result—that of restoring the officer.

"No time limit has been set on when an application for trial must be submitted. The present statutory provision has been construed to require that the application be made within a reasonable time, which will vary according to circumstances. (See Winthrop, Military Law and Precedents, 1920 ed., p. 64; Digest of Opinions, Judge Advocate General of the Army, 1912–40, sec. 227.)"

Article 5 states that this proposed "code shall be applicable in all places." Thus universal application is proposed. The commentary (p. 11) states:

"This article reenacts the present Army provision. It is not in conflict with the provisions in article 2 (11) and 2 (12) of this code, which make certain persons subject to the code only when they are outside the United States and also outside certain areas. The code is applicable in all places as to other persons subject to it. Previous restrictive provisions on this subject in the AGN have given rise to jurisdictional problems which this language will correct. (See Keefe Report, p. 262 ff.)"

Article 6, paragraph (a) subjects the assignment of legal officers to the approval of the Judge Advocate General. In this connection we note that sections 246 and 247 of the act of June 24, 1948—Public Law 759—Eightieth Congress created the Judge Advocate General's Corps and provided for the permanent appointment of officers to serve in that corps. Thus the law specialists, insofar as the Army is concerned, would appear to be already under the control of that Judge Advocate General. This suggests that the status of the officers of other Judge Advocates be examined in the light of sections 246 and 247.

Paragraph (c) of article 6 states:

"(c) No person who has acted as a member, law officer, trial counsel, assistant trial counsel, defense counsel, assistant defense counsel, or investigating officer in any case shall subsequently act as a staff judge advocate or legal officer to any reviewing authority upon the same case."

The commentary states (p. 12) that this paragraph is based on AW 11 (see sec. 208 of Pub. Law 759—80th Cong.), and is designed to secure review by an impartial staff judge advocate or legal officer.

While this paragraph appears to correct some of the abuses under the present system (see Henry v. Hodges (1948) 76 F. S. 968), it could go further toward assuring a thorough and impartial investigation by providing that the investigating officer should not act in any other capacity during the trial of a person he has investigated.

Part II, Apprehension and Restraint, contains articles 7 to 14. This part appears to be a codification of present practices with some enlargement. Any person, authorized under regulations governing the armed forces to apprehend persons, may do so, under the provisions of this proposed Code, upon reasonable belief that an offense has been committed and that the person apprehended committed the offense.

Part III, Nonjudicial Punishment, greatly broadens the authority heretofore exercised in the Army by a commanding officer under AW 104. Without commenting on the Navy phase of this proposal, we give hereunder AW 104 and proposed article 15. The enlargement of the power of a commanding officer to mete out "nonjudicial punishment" is apparent.

"ART. 15. Commanding officer's nonjudicial punishment.

"(a) Under such regulations as the President may prescribe, any commanding officer may, in addition to or in lieu of admonition or reprimand, impose one of the following disciplinary punishments for minor offenses without the intervention of a court martial—

"(1) upon officers and warrant officers of his command:

"(A) withholding of privileges for a period not to exceed two consecutive weeks; or

"(B) restriction to certain specified limits, with or without suspension from duty, for a period not to exceed two consecutive weeks; or

"(C) if imposed by an officer exercising general court-martial jurisdiction, forfeiture of one-half of his pay per month for a period not exceeding 3 months;

"(2) upon other military personnel of his command:

"(A) withholding of privileges for a period not to exceed two consecutive weeks; or

"(B) restriction to certain specified limits, with or without suspension from duty, for a period not to exceed two consecutive weeks; or

"(C) extra duties for a period not to exceed two consecutive weeks, and not to exceed 2 hours per day, holidays included; or

"(D) reduction to next inferior grade if the grade from which demoted was established by the command or an equivalent or lower command; or

"(E) confinement for a period not to exceed seven consecutive days; or

"(F) confinement on bread and water or diminished rations for a period not to exceed five consecutive days; or [It appears that this provision should go the way of flogging or at least be confined in its application to offenses committed while at sea.]

"(G) if imposed by an officer exercising special court-martial jurisdiction, forfeiture of one-half of his pay for a period not exceeding 1 month.

"(b) The Secretary of a Department may, by regulation, place limitations on the powers granted by this article with respect to the kind and amount of punishment authorized, the categories of commanding officers authorized to exercise such powers, and the applicability of this article to an accused who demands trial by court martial.

"(c) An officer in charge may, for minor offenses, impose on enlisted persons assigned to the unit of which he is in charge such of the punishments authorized to be imposed by commanding officers as the Secretary of the Department may by regulation specifically prescribe.

"(d) A person punished under authority of this article who deems his punishment unjust or disproportionate to the offense may, through the proper channel, appeal to the next superior authority. The appeal shall be promptly forwarded and decided, but the person punished may in the meantime be required to undergo the punishment adjudged. The officer who imposes the punishment, his successor in command, and superior authority shall have power to suspend, set aside, or remit any part or amount of the punishment and to restore all rights, privileges, and property affected.

"(e) The imposition and enforcement of disciplinary punishment under authority of this article for any act or omission shall not be a bar to trial by court martial for a serious crime or offense growing out of the same act or omission, and not properly punishable under this article; but the fact that a disciplinary punishment has been enforced may be shown by the accused upon trial, and when so shown shall be considered in determining the measure of punishment to be adjudged in the event of a finding of guilty." [This would appear to give a vindictive commanding officer two bites at the apple, since a minor offense is nowhere defined.]

Part IV, Courts-martial jurisdiction: Proposed articles 16-21 establish three kinds of courts martial—general, special, and summary—and the jurisdiction of each.

DIGITIZED BY UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

At the outset it should be remembered that courts martial are the creatures of statutes, and, as a body or tribunal, they must be convened and constituted in conformity with provisions of the statute or they are without jurisdiction. (See Flackman v. Hunter (1948) (75 F. S. 871, 876); Anthony v Hunter (1947) (71 F. S. 823, 828); and Runkle v. U. S. (1887) (122 U. S. 543, 555).)

Particular attention is invited to proposed article 18 which reads:

"Subject to article 17, general courts martial shall have jurisdiction to try persons subject to this code for any offense made punishable by this code and may, under such limitations as the President may prescribe, adjudge any punishment not forbidden by this code. General courts martial shall also have jurisdiction to try any person who by the law of war is subject to trial by a military tribunal and may adjudge any punishment permitted by the law of war."

The commentary on proposed article 17 states that it is derived from Articles of War 12 which reads:

"General courts martial shall have power to try any person subject to military law for any crime or offense made punishable by these articles, and any other person who by the law of war is subject to trial by military tribunals: Provided, That general courts martial shall have power to adjudge any punishment authorized by law or the custom of the service including a bad-conduct discharge." [There seems to be no reason why the offenses (infra) punished under this code should not be defined in the same language as the Federal Criminal Code and the limitations of punishments be identical. Consideration should also be given to trial in civilian courts, upon information, for offenses committed in United States which offenses are cognizable under Federal civil statutes.]

Article 21 states that the provisions of the proposed code conferring jurisdiction upon courts martial shall not be construed as depriving military commissions or other military tribunals of concurrent jurisdiction. This provision stems from Articles of War 15. The Supreme Court has held that by this provision Congress has explicitly provided, so far as it may constitutionally do so, that military tribunals shall have jurisdiction to try offenders or offenses against the law of war in appropriate cases. (Ex parte Quirin (1942) 317 U. S. 1, 28.) Furthermore a military commission may be appointed for this purpose by any field commander, or by any commander competent to appoint a general court martial. (In re Yamashita (1946) 327 U. S. 1, 10.)

Articles 22, 23, and 24 list the persons who may convene courts martial.

Article 25 states who may serve on courts martial.

"(a) Any officer on active duty with the armed forces shall be competent to serve on all courts martial for the trial of any person who may lawfully be brought before such courts for trial." Under paragraph (b) warrant officers on active duty are competent to serve on general and special courts martial of any person other than an officer. Enlisted men, exigencies permitting and providing they are not of the same unit, shall constitute at least one-third of the membership of a general or special court martial if the accused makes a written request prior to the convening of the court for the inclusion of enlisted men. As enacted in section 203 of the Selective Service Act of 1948 (Public Law 759, 80th Cong.), from whence this provision stems, the wording is:

"Enlisted persons in the active military service of the United States or in the active military service of the Marine Corps when detached for service with the Army by order of the President, shall be competent to serve on general and special courts martial for the trial of enlisted persons when requested in writing by the accused at any time prior to the convening of the court. When so requested, no enlisted person shall, without his consent, be tried by a court the membership of which does not include enlisted persons to the number of at least one-third of the total membership of the court."

Section 212 of Public Law 759, Eightieth Congress, states that: "No enlisted person may sit as a member of a court martial for the trial of another enlisted person who is assigned to the same company or corresponding military unit." Thus, while the basic right to have enlisted men sit on a court martial trying an enlisted man is retained, a new contingency depriving an enlisted man of this right is proposed, viz, "unless competent enlisted persons cannot be obtained on account of physical conditions or military exigencies." In such a case the convening authority must state the reasons in writing. As indicated by Wallstein earlier, the test of these provisions must be their actual operation and this operation will be under tribunals having neither continuity nor tenure.

Paragraph (d) (2) of proposed article 25 states that: "No person shall be eligible to sit as a member of a general or special court martial when he is the accuser or a witness for the prosecution or has acted as investigating officer or as counsel in the same case." Apparently the addition of this limitation to wording in the last paragraph of Articles of War 4 is necessary even though the requirement of a "thorough and impartial investigation" received careful attention and was enacted into positive law in 1920. This matter will be discussed later in connection with proposed article 32. Returning to the limitation, its need is illustrated in Henry v. Hodges ((1948) 76 F. Supp. 968) where Judge Ryan stated (p. 974): "The functions of the investigating officer, as contemplated by Article of War 70 are those ordinarily performed both by the civil prosecuting officer and the grand jury. These functions are described in the Soldier and the Law by McCoomsey and Edwards (at p. 155) as being 'similar in many respects to a grand jury investigation in which the grand jury determines whether a man is to be tried.' Surely it would be a travesty of justice to have the complainant-accuser sit on a grand jury, testify before it as a witness in support of the complaint and then vote for and return a true bill. The duties performed by the investigating officer are highly important to the accused. He must be strictly impartial, since he represents both the accused and the prosecution. It is his obligation to gather and record facts which would be admissible evidence in the court-martial trial and to do this he must investigate. It is upon his recommendation that the commanding officer relies in determining whether there is to be a trial at all, and, if so, for what offense and by what type of court. Can it be fairly said that one who assumes the duties of an investigator is not disqualified by reason of the fact that he has previously expressed in a written report his opinion as to the guilt of the accused, when such report has been made the basis of the very charge he is investigating? Can it be argued that one who is to give testimony on behalf of the prosecution (and who subsequently does so, as to the alleged admissions of the accused) has an open mind on the matter, so that his efforts will be directed along investigational channels which might lead as well to the acquittal of the accused as to his condemnation? Can we reasonably hope that such investigator will pursue interrogation and examination of proposed witnesses with the same zealous and unbiased effort as one who has had no previous contact with the case? The answer to these questions is obvious. It is manifestly impossible for him to conduct the thorough and impartial investigation contemplated and directed by act of Congress." [This paragraph (d) (2) should have added, "Violation of this paragraph shall void the proceedings."]

Proposed article 26 stems from the second paragraph of AW 8 which provides for a law member of a general court martial. In his place is a law officer who is no longer a voting member of the court and, except for putting the findings in proper form as required in proposed article 39, he does not consult with members of the court except in the presence of the accused, trial counsel, and defense counsel. (This article cripples the conduct of the court's deliberations in that the accused loses the important safeguard of having an informed lawyer present during the deliberations and voting of the court in closed session as is the present case in the Army and Air Force.)

Under proposed article 27 the commentary states (p. 41): "The trial judge advocate is renamed the trial counsel, and the right of the accused to have a person requested by him act as defense counsel is subject to the availability of that person. (See article 38.)"

"Paragraph (1) of subdivision (b) incorporates the first proviso of AW 11, but the requirement that counsel be qualified as set forth therein is no longer subject to the exception allowed where such qualified persons are not available * * *." In view of the mandatory language of proposed article 27, we are unable to understand the qualifying language in the commentary. We assume that there is no intention to permit the recurrence of a situation such as is found in Beets v. Hunter ((1948), 75 F. Supp. 825), when a soldier was represented, contrary to his wishes, in court-martial proceedings by an officer who was wholly incompetent to represent him and who did so only on military orders. "The court has no difficulty in finding that the court which tried this man was saturated with tyranny; the compliance with the Articles of War and with military justice was an empty and farcical compliance only, and the court so finds from the facts and so holds as a matter of law" (p. 826).

Proposed article 28, derived from AW 115, shifts the power to appoint reporters and interpreters from the president of the court to the convening authority since the latter will have control of the available personnel (commentary p. 42). Article 29 establishes the procedure whereby general and special courts martial may continue with a case when the required membership has been reduced by reason of physical disability, challenge, or by order of the convening authority for good cause. Recorded testimony must be read to new members prior to continuing the trial.

Part VI. Pretrial procedure: The proposed articles forming part VI are taken largely from AW 46, as enacted in the Selective Service Act of 1948 (P. L. 759, 80th Cong., sec. 222), AW 24 (U. S. C. 10: 1495), and AGN 42 (c) (U. S. C. 34:1200, art. 42 (c)).

The commentaries on two proposed articles, 31 and 32, merit careful consideration. Article 31 states:

"ART. 31. Compulsory self-incrimination prohibited.

"(a) No person subject to this code shall compel any person to incriminate himself or to answer any question the answer to which may tend to incriminate him.

"(b) No person subject to this code shall interrogate, or request any statement from, an accused or a person suspected of an offense without first informing him of the nature of the accusation and advising him that he does not have to make any statement at all regarding the offense of which he is accused or suspected and that any statement made by him may be used as evidence against him in a trial by court martial. (That this can be overdone was brought to my attention in an Army case where the investigating officer, in testimony attempting to show that a confession was in fact voluntary, stated that he warned the accused no less than 20 times.)

"(c) No person subject to this code shall compel any person to make a statement or produce evidence before or for use before any military tribunal if the statement or evidence is not material to the issue and may tend to degrade.

"(d) No statement obtained from any person in violation of this article or by an unlawful inducement shall be received in evidence against him in a trial by court martial."

"Commentary: Subdivision (a) extends the privilege against self-incrimination to all persons under all circumstances. Under present Army and Navy provisions only persons who are witnesses are specifically granted the privilege. Subdivision (b) broadens the comparable provision in AW 24 to protect not only persons who are accused of an offense but also those who are suspected of one. Subdivision (c) is similar to AW 24 in that the privilege against self-degradation is granted to witnesses before a military tribunal and persons who make depositions for use before a military tribunal. It is made clear that this privilege cannot be invoked where the evidence is material to the issue—where it might be crucial in the determination of the guilt or innocence of an accused. Subdivision (d) makes statements or evidence obtained in violation of the first three subdivisions inadmissible only against the person from whom they were obtained. This conforms with the theory that the privilege against self-incrimination and self-degradation is a personal one.

"The intentional violation of any of the provisions of this article constitutes an offense punishable under article 98.

"It is unnecessary to provide in this article that the failure of an accused to testify does not create a presumption against him. (See title 18, U. S. C., sec. 3481.)"

A question may arise concerning the application of the provision of the fifth amendment stating that "* * * nor shall (any person) be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself * * *" to personnel of the armed forces. Ex parte Benton (1945) 63 F. Supp. 808 and In re Wrublewaski (1947) 71 F. Supp. 143, affirmed 166 F. 2d 243 indicate that the constitutional guaranties of the fifth and sixth amendments may not be invoked in cases arising in the land or naval forces of the United States. See also Ex parte Quirin (1942) 317 U. S. 1, 43; Ex parte Milligan (1866) 4 Wall. 2, 123; and U. S. ex rel. Innes v. Crystal (1943) 131 F. 2d 576.

Article 32 requires a thorough and impartial investigation; requires that the accused be advised of charges against him; that he be permitted to provide civilian counsel of his own or select military counsel if reasonably available. "At such investigation full opportunity shall be given to the accused to cross-examine witnesses against him if they are available and to present anything he may desire in his own behalf * * * and the investigating officer shall examine available witnesses requested by the accused." The charges shall be accompanied by a statement of the substance or the testimony. The article concludes:

"(d) The requirements of this article shall be binding on all persons administering this code, but failure to follow them in any case shall not constitute jurisdictional error.' [The paragraph (d) should be amended to read "* * * and failure to follow them in any case shall constitute jurisdictional error."]

Taking this last element first, cases to date have held that such failure was a jurisdictional matter. (See Waite v. Overlade (1948) 164 F. 2d 722; Reilly v. Pescon (1946) 156 F. 2d 632; cert. den. 329 U. S. 790; and Hicks v. Hiatt (1946) 64 F. Supp. 238.) Thus there is an obvious attempt to foreclose any possible review by Federal courts on this point. This is indicated by the commentary (p. 49):

"Subdivision (d) is added to prevent this article from being construed as jurisdictional in a habeas corpus proceeding. Failure to conduct an investigation required by this article would be grounds for reversal by a reviewing authority under the code and an intentional failure to do so would be an offense under article 93."

While failure to conduct the investigation would be an offense under article 98, it is difficult to see how this will benefit the accused who must depend upon a nebulous right of review by a whole maze of reviewing authorities and tribunals.

This requirement of "a thorough and impartial investigation" has been a delicate point of controversy for a long period. The requirement first appears in article 70 of the Articles of War which were enacted as Chapter II of the Army Reorganization Act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 759, 787, 802). This chapter revised an earlier revision of the Articles of War which had been enacted as section 3 of the Army Appropriation Act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. 619, 650, 661). As enacted in 1916, Article 70 did not contain the provision requiring "a thorough and impartial investigation."

Returning to the act of June 4, 1920, the law carries the bill number H. R. 12775—Sixty-sixth Congress. This bill, as introduced and passed by the House, was merely a reorganization proposal and did not deal with the Articles of War. On the Senate side another organization bill, S. 3792—Sixty-sixth Congress, was receiving legislative consideration. In the meantime S. 64—Sixty-sixth Congress, entitled "A bill to establish military justice" and proposing an extensive overhauling of the Articles of War, had been the subject of prolonged hearings (1,395 pages) and had been reported. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD 59, pt. 6, p. 5712.) While the bill, as introduced, did not have the requirement of "a thorough and impartial investigation," the reported version did contain the wording later enacted in article 70. The report on this bill appears not to have been printed.

During the consideration of S. 3792, this reported version of S. 64 was accepted on the floor as an amendment. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD 59, pt. 6, p. 5836.)

In the meantime H. R. 12775 had passed the House and had been reported in the Senate (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD 59, pt. 6, p. 5883). Switching to that bill, the Senate struck out all after the enacting clause (p. 5895) and inserted the amended language of S. 3792, which now contained the amended Articles of War, and as amended, the Senate then passed H. R. 12775 (p. 5898) and this provision was agreed to in conference. The hearings and debate on this legislation are illuminative.

Returning to the application of this requirement, Hicks v. Hiatt (1946) (64 F. Supp. 238) has held that failure to employ required investigative technique may be a denial of due process. There Circuit Judge Biggs states: "The circuit court of appeals for this circuit in United States v. Hiatt (3 Cir., 141 F. 2d 664, 666) held that the basic guarantee of fairness afforded by the due-process clause of the fifth amendment applies to a defendant in criminal proceedings in a Federal military court as well as in a Federal civil court and that an '* * * individual does not cease to be a person within the protection of the fifth amendment of the Constitution because he has joined the Nation's armed forces and has taken the oath to support that Constitution with his life, if need be.' The court went on to state: 'This is not to say that members of the military forces are entitled to the procedure guaranteed by the Constitution to defendants in the civil courts. As to them, due process of law means the application of the procedure of the military law. Many of the procedural safeguards which have always been observed for the benefit of defendants in the civil courts are not granted by the military law. In this respect the military law provides its own distinctive procedure to which the members of the armed forces must submit. But the due-process clause guarantees to them that this military procedure will be applied to them in a fundamentally fair way. We conclude that it is open for a civil court in a habeas corpus proceeding * * * and the manner in which it was conducted ran afoul of the basic standard of fairness which is involved in the constitutional concept of due process of law and, if it so finds, to declare that the relator has been deprived of his liberty in violation of the fifth amendment and to discharge him from custody' " (p. 248). (See also Henry v. Hodges (1948), 76 F. Supp. 958.)

This is, we believe, consonant with the idea that to those in the military or naval service of the United States, the military law is due process (Reaves v. Ainsworth (1911) (219 U. S. 296); U. S. v. Weeks (1914) (232 U. S. 383). To this might be added the logical conclusion that it is due process only when complied with.

Article 33 requires that the charges against a person held for a general court martial, together with the investigation and allied papers, be forwarded by the commanding officer to the officer exercising general court-martial jurisdiction within 8 days after arrest, if practicable.

Under article 34 the staff judge advocate or legal officer is required to review the charge and the evidence, prior to referring the charge to a general court martial, to see that such charge alleges an offense under the code and is warranted by the evidence indicated in the report of the investigation. The 1948 amendment to AW 47 (U. S. C. 10: 1518), from whence this proposed article stems, required also a finding "that a thorough and impartial investigation thereof has been made. * * *" This has been deleted. Perhaps it was felt that proposed article 32 covered the situation.

Article 35 requires the service of charges upon the accused and limits the time in which he can be brought to trial before a general or special court martial in time of peace.

Part VII, consisting of articles 36–54, inclusive, establishes the trial procedure. Article 36 authorizes the President to prescribe rules of procedure, including rules of evidence, which shall be reported to Congress. Article 37 seeks to curtail the influence of commanding officers and convening authorities over courts martial. The commentary states that this will not preclude "fair comment" by the reviewing authority (p. 54). [(Art. 37.) The mere prohibition of influence by command is not sufficient. This article should be moved over to "Offenses" and violation thereof punished as a court martial may direct.]

Article 38 states that the trial counsel, in a general or special court martial, shall prosecute in the name of the United States; that the accused shall have the right of counsel; that defense counsel may file briefs and objections for inclusion in the record.

Deliberation and voting by general or special courts martial, under article 39, shall be private but the law officer and the reporter may be used to put the findings in proper form after the vote. "The law officer is not a 'member' of the court and is not to be present during its deliberations and voting" (commentary, p. 57).

Article 40 permits continuances while article 41 permits challenging of members for cause. The accused and trial counsel are each given one peremptory challenge. Article 42 relates to oaths while article 43 establishes the limitations on actions. Subdivision (f) of article 43 lifts section 3287 out of the recently enacted title 18. The reason for including this section is somewhat obscure. The commentary (p. 62) merely states that subdivision (f) incorporates the provision in title 16, section 3287, which otherwise might not be applicable to court-martial cases. This is puzzling in view of the numerous provisions in title 18 relating to the armed forces which received no notice in the proposed code.

Article 44, captioned "Former jeopardy" reads:

"No person shall, without his consent, be tried a second time for the same offense; but no proceeding in which an accused has been found guilty by a court martial upon any charge or specification shall be held to be a trial in the sense of this article until the finding of guilty has become final after review of the case has been fully completed."

[The problem of double jeopardy was partially covered in the discussion of proposed article 31.]

The constitutional provision, the application of which is in doubt, reads: "Amendment (V) * * * nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; * * *" "Turner's Case (1676), 16 Charles II, first laid down this rule. (See 33 A. B. A. J. 745.) However, it has been held that the findings of a military court of inquiry acquitting a person of all blame is not a complete bar to a prosecution in the civil courts. U. S. v. Clark ((1887), 31 F. 710, 715); U. S. v. Cashiel ((1863), 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14, 744). Conversely U. S. v. Beyer ((1946), 156 F. 2d 964) (reversed on other grounds, 331 U. S. 532, rehearing denied 332 U. S. 785), and Ex parte Benton ((1945), 63 F. Supp. 808, indicates that the principle of double jeopardy applies between military tribunals and Federal courts. See also In re Wrublewski ((1947), 71 F. Supp. 143, affirmed 166 F. 2d 243). U. S. ex rel. Pasela v. Fenno ((1947), 76 F. Supp. 203, affirmed 167 F. 2d 593); Wade v. Hunter ((1947), 72 F. Supp. 755. However, it is not clear that this rests on constitutional principles rather than upon AW 40 as enacted in the act of June 4, 1920, or R. S. 1342, article 102, or similar provisions. The matter could be clarified by extending the protection of the provision of the fifth amendment rather than granting protection by means of different language in a statutory enactment.

Irregular pleading or silence shall be entered as a plea of not guilty. A plea of guilty will not be received in a capital case (art. 45).

Article 46 seeks to afford the accused an equal opportunity to obtain witnesses and other evidence.

Duly subpenaed persons who neglect or refuse to appear before a military tribunal, commission, or officer designated to take a deposition are deemed guilty of an offense against the United States triable in a United States district court and punishable by maximum penalties of $500 fine and/or imprisonment not to exceed 6 months. In view of other jurisdictional grants relating to activities of civilians, it appears strange that military tribunals should not seek to enforce their own process. (See art. 47.) They have power to punish for contempts. See article 48, derived from AW 32 and AGN 42 (a).

Article 49 relates to depositions; 50 to admissibility of records of courts of inquiry; 51 and 52 to voting and rulings. Subdivision (b) of article 51 reads:

"(b) The law officer of a general court martial and the president of a special court martial shall rule upon interlocutory questions, other than challenge, arising during the proceedings. Any such ruling made by the law officer of a general court martial upon any interlocutory question other than a motion for a finding of not guilty, or the question of accused's sanity, shall be final and shall constitute the ruling of the court; but the law officer may change any such ruling at any time during the trial. Unless such ruling be final, if any member objects thereto, the court shall be cleared and closed and the question decided by a vote as provided in article 52, viva voce, beginning with the junior in rank."

Before voting the law officer of a general court martial and the president of a special court martial shall, in the presence of the accused and counsel, instruct the court as to the elements of the crime and charge the court that the accused is presumed innocent until his guilt is established by legal and competent evidence beyond a reasonable doubt; doubt must be resolved in favor of the accused; doubts as to degree of guilt must be resolved in favor of the lower degree; the burden of proof is on the Government.

Article 53 requires the court martial to announce its findings and sentence to the party as soon as determined. However, Altmayer v. Sanford ((1945), 148 F. 2d 161, 162) indicates that a failure to do so does not violate any fundamental right of the accused.

Article 54 relates to the records of trials and the authentication thereof.

Part VIII. Sentences, contains articles 55–58 relating to cruel and unusual punishments (on the basis, apparently, that the eighth amendment is inapplicable); to maximum limits; to the effective date of sentences; and to execution of confinement. Attention is invited to the commentaries on these articles. [Art. 58 should not be enacted without careful consultation with the Attorney General and Director of Prisons. The most serious considerations should be given to the question of whether or not a discharge should be executed before transfer to a Federal institution so that the parole facilities of the Federal Parole Board may operate on a prisoner's behalf.]

Part IX. Review of courts martial, should be the focal point for considering the bill for it superimposes on the courts-martial system a review maze which probably will be as indecisive with regard to the rights of the accused as it attempts to be final with regard to possible review by the civil courts.

This labyrinth commences with proposed article 59 which states first that a finding or sentence of a court martial shall not be held incorrect on the ground of an error of law unless the error materially prejudices the rights of the accused. Hicks v. Hiatt ((1946) 64 F. supp. 238) not only states that it is the duty of the trial judge advocate to see that the accused is dealt with fairly, but that when there are prejudicial errors, the failure of the reviewing authority to order a new trial is an abuse of legal discretion (p. 248). It is difficult to see how an enlarged labyrinth with a sealed outlet could afford an accused person such as Hicks any assurance of justice. The article does permit (subdivision (b)) the reviewing authority to affirm a lesser included offense.

The first review after the court martial is the convening authority or his successor or any officer exercising general court-martial jurisdiction (art. 60). The commentary states that this particular reviewing power vests in the office, not in the convening authority (p. 85). This authority is required by article 61 to refer the record to his staff judge advocate or legal officer for a written opinion if a general court martial is involved. Even if there is an acquittal of all charges, an opinion limited to questions of jurisdiction is still required. The purpose of such an opinion is obscure.

Article 62 brings forth a new proposal. If a case before a court martial has been dismissed on motion and the ruling does not amount to a finding of not guilty, the convening authority may return the record to the court for reconsideration of the ruling and any further appropriate action. Thus the accused may find this passageway in the labyrinth taking him right back to where he started. Subdivision (b) permits nonprejudicial errors or omissions in the record to be corrected by the court when the record is returned by the convening authority for that purpose. The record may not be returned, however, for reconsideration of a finding of not guilty or to increase the severity of the sentence unless a mandatory sentence is prescribed for the offense. Note in this connection proposed article 37 relating to unlawfully influencing the action of a court martial. See also Hurse v. Caffey ((1945) 59 F. supp. 363) as illustrative of problems which arise in correcting a verdict.

The convening authority may order a rehearing or dismiss the charges if he disapproves the findings and sentence but he cannot order a rehearing where there is lack of evidence in the record to support the findings. A new court is required for a rehearing and while the accused cannot be retried on charges of which he was found not guilty, he may be found guilty of an offense not considered upon the merits in the original proceedings. This provision raises the question: How is the accused to know what he is being tried for if such a finding can be made by the new court?

Under article 64 the convening authority approves only such findings and sentence as he finds correct in law and fact and determines should be approved. Then, under article 65, the convening authority, after taking final action in a general court-martial case, forwards the entire record to the appropriate judge advocate general. Where the sentence includes a bad conduct discharge, the record shall be forwarded to the officer exercising general court-martial jurisdiction to be reviewed or directly to the appropriate judge advocate general to be reviewed by a board of review. All other special and summary court-martial records shall be reviewed by a judge advocate or law specialist.

This board of review is provided in article 66 which authorizes the Judge Advocate General to constitute one or more of such boards which shall review "the record in every case of trial by a court martial in which the sentence, as approved, affects a general or a flag officer or extends to death, dismissal of an officer, cadet, or midshipman, dishonorable or bad-conduct discharge, or confinement for more than 1 year." This review is automatic (commentary p. 94). The board acts only with respect to the findings and sentence as approved by the convening authority. In considering the record, it may weigh the evidence, judge the credibility of witnesses, and determine controverted questions of fact. Except where the board sets aside the findings for lack of sufficient evidence, it may order a rehearing, otherwise it shall order the charges dismissed. However, the Judge Advocate General may within 10 days refer the case for consideration to the same or another board of review. This reference may not amount to a coercive act on his part but an opportunity to exert pressure is certainly afforded. Unless there is to be some further action by the President, or by the Secretary of the Department, or by the Judicial Council, the Judge Advocate General shall instruct the convening authority to take action in accordance with the decision of the board. If the decision is that there shall be a rehearing, but the convening authority finds this impracticable, he may dismiss the charges. Common sense indicates that such a dismissal would not necessarily clear the record of the accused.

With reference to: Article 67. Review by the Judicial Council.

The two questions asked and preliminary answers are as follows:

1. Is this a court? Used in the general sense, this is a "court," however it is not a "court" in the strict constitutional sense in that it does not derive its power from article III of the Constitution. (Ex parte Quirin (1942) 317 U. S. 1, 39.) These military or naval "courts" derive their powers primarily from article I, section 8, clause 14, which states that, "The Congress shall have power * * * To make rules for the Government and regulation of the land and naval forces." The instrumentalities established are generally referred to as "tribunals" and they form no part of the judicial system of the United States. (Altmayer v. Sanford (1945), 148 F. 2d 161, 162.) At least one author has called these courts "instrumentalities of the executive power." Accordingly, while military and naval courts and commissions, whatever their nomenclatural designation, act like courts to a certain extent, they are not courts in the strict sense and meaning established by article III of the Constitution of the United States. Various terms have been used to describe these organizations—the most common being "tribunal," but whatever their designation, they can and have, under certain circumstances, sentenced persons to death and they can and have sentenced men to terms of years in prison at hard labor with the added infamy of a dishonorable discharge.

2. If this is a "court," can it be set up in the Military Establishment?

Subject to the above preliminary answer which indicates that this is a "court" only in the general sense of the word, rather than in the strict or special constitutional sense, the answer is in the affirmative. In other words the proposed judicial council does not belong to the judicial branch of the Government under present law; it belongs to the executive branch of the Government and can be created subject to certain qualifications to be indicated later.

THE CONSTITUTION

"The Constitution itself provides for military government as well as for civil government." (Ex parte Miligan, 4, Wall. 2, 137.) "* * * there is no law for the government of the citizens, the armies or the navy of the United States, within American jurisdiction, which is not contained in or derived from the Consitution. And wherever our Army or Navy may go beyond our territorial limits, neither can go beyond the authority of the President or the legislation of Congress" (p. 141).

The constitutional (art. I, sec. 8) sources of military law and jurisdiction may be said to be the following: "The Congress shall have power * * * to define and punish * * * offenses against the law of nations (clause 10); to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water (clause 11); to raise and support armies * * * (clause 12); to provide and maintain a Navy (clause 13); to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces (clause 14); to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions (clause 15); to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States * * * (clause 16); * * * To make all 'aws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or officer thereof (clause 18)."

Article II, section 1, clause 1, states: "The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America * * *" and section 2, clause 1, states: "The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States when called into actual service of the United States * * * and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint * * * officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone * * * (clause 2) he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and shall commission all the officers of the United States (sec. 3)." (See Ex parte Quirin, 317 U. S. 1, 25–26.)

We note also the fifth and sixth amendments relating to trials.

THE NATURE OF THE JUDICIAL COUNCIL

Article 67 of the proposed Uniform Code of Military Justice (S. 857 and H. R. 2498, 81st Cong.) establishes a Judicial Council of not less than three members who shall receive the pay and allowances of judges of the United States Court of Appeals ($17,500 salary per year. Public Law 646, 80th Cong., enacting title 2 of U. S. C., sec. 44). We do not wish to infer that salary is the factor which determines whether or not an officer is an inferior officer. It is not. The test is whether Congress has vested the power of appointment in the President alone, in a court of law, or in the head of a department. See Collin's case ((1878) 14 Ct. Cl. 568, 574) and United States v. Perkins (1886) 116 U. S. 483, 485).

Two qualifications are required. Appointees shall be from civilian life and shall be members of the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States. Under rules of procedure, which it shall prescribe, the Council shall review on the record:

(1) All cases in which the sentence, as affirmed by a board of review, affects a general or flag officer or extends to death;

(2) All cases reviewed by a board of review which the Judge Advocate General orders forwarded to the Judicial Council for review; and

(3) All cases reviewed by a board of review in which, upon petition of the accused and on good cause shown, the Judicial Council has granted a review.

The accused has 30 days to petition for a review and the Council must act upon the petition within 15 days. Review is limited to the findings and sentence as approved by the convening authority and as affirmed or set aside as incorrect in law by the Judge Advocate General's board of review. Where the Judge Advocate General orders the case forwarded to the Council "action need be taken only with respect to issues specified in the grant of review. The Judicial Council shall take action only with respect to matters of law."

If the Judicial Council sets aside the findings and sentence, it may order a rehearing, except where the reversal is based on lack of sufficient supporting evidence in the record. Otherwise it shall order that the charges be dismissed.

After acting on a case, the Judicial Council may direct the Judge Advocate General to return the record to the board of review for further review in accordance with its decision. Otherwise, unless there is to be further action by the President or the Secretary of the Department, the Judge Advocate General shall instruct the concerning authority to take action in accordance with that decision. If the Council has ordered a rehearing but the convening authority finds a rehearing impracticable, he may dismiss the charges.

You will note that while this Judicial Council has the appearance of an appellate tribunal, its findings are subject to executive or administrative action of the President or the Secretary of the Department. Thus the proposed tribunal is in the final analysis nothing more than an agency of the Executive Department. We believe the following excerpts from Winthrop, Military Laws and Precedents, second edition, 1896, volume I, pages 53–57 (certain citations omitted) characterize this proposed Judicial Council:

"Courts martial of the United States, although their legal sanction is no less than that of the Federal courts, being equally with those authorized by the Constitution, are, unlike those, not a portion of the Judiciary of the United States, and are thus not included among the 'inferior' courts which Congress 'may from time to time ordain and establish.' In the leading case on this subject, the Supreme Court, referring to the provisions of the Constitution authorizing Congress to provide for the government of the Army, excepting military offenses from the civil jurisdiction, and making the President Commander in Chief, observes as follows: 'These provisions show that Congress has the power to provide for the trial and punishment of military and naval offenses in the manner then and now practiced by civilized nations, and that the power to do so is given without any connection between it and the third article of the Constitution defining the judicial power of the United States; indeed that the two powers are entirely independent of each other' (Dynes v. Hoover (1858), 20 How. 79).

"Not belonging to the judicial branch of the Government, it follows that courts martial must pertain to the executive department; and they are in fact simply instrumentalities of the executive power, provided by Congress for the President as Commander in Chief, to aid him in properly commanding the Army and Navy and enforcing discipline therein, and utilized under his orders or those of his authorized military representatives.

"Thus indeed, strictly, a court martial is not a court in the full sense of the term, or as the same is understood in the civil phraseology. It has no common-law powers whatever, but only such powers as are vested in it by express statute, or may be derived from military usage. None of the statutes governing the jurisdiction or procedure of the 'courts of the United States' have an application to it; nor is it embraced in the provisions of the sixth amendment to the Constitution. It is indeed a creature of orders, and except insofar as an independent discretion may be given it by statute, it is as much subject to the orders of a competent superior as is any military body or person.

"A temporary summary tribunal—not a court of record. As a purely executive agency designed for military uses, called into existence by a military order and by a similar order dissolved when its purpose is accomplished (Mills v. Martin (19 Johns., 33); Brooks v. Adams (11 Pick., 442); Brooks v. Daniels (22 Pick., 501); In the Matter of Wright (34 How. Pr., 211; 3 Greenl. Ev., sec. 470)) the court martial, as compared with the civil tribunals, is transient in its duration and summary in its action. ('The discipline necessary to the efficiency of the Army and Navy required other and swifter modes of trial than are furnished by the common-law courts.' Ex parte Milligan (4 Wall. 123). In Coleman v. Tennessee (97 U. S., 513), the Court refer to the 'swift and summary justice of a military court'). It is not, in a legal sense, a court of record (Chambers v. Jennings (7 Mod., 125); Ex parte Watkins (3 Peters 209); Wilson v. John (2 Binn., 215)) and, unlike the superior courts of record, has no fixed place of session, no permanent office or clerk, no seal, no inherent authority to punish for contempt, no power to issue a writ or judicial mandate, and its judgment is simply a recommendation, not operative till approved by a revisory commander. It thus belongs to the class of minor courts of special and limited jurisdiction and scope, whose competency cannot be stretched by implication, in favor of whole acts no intendment can be made where their legality does not clearly appear, and which cannot transcend their authority without rendering their members trespassers and amenable to civil action (Runkle v. U. S. (122 U. S., 556; 19 Opins. At. Gen., 503)).

"Not subject to judicial revision. Further, the court martial being no part of the judiciary of the Nation, and no statute having placed it in legal relations therewith, its proceedings are not subject to be directly reviewed by a Federal court, either by certiorari, writ of error, or otherwise, nor are its judgments or sentences subject to be appealed from to such tribunal. It is not only the highest but the only court by which a case of a military offense can be heard and determined; and a civil or criminal court of the United States has no more appellate jurisdiction over offenses tried by a court martial—no more authority to entertain a rehearing of a case tried by it, or to affirm or set aside its finding or sentence as such—than has a court of a foreign nation. In Dynes v. Hoover, above cited, this principle is well illustrated by the Court in the declaration that a duly confirmed sentence of a court martial 'is altogether beyond the jurisdiction or inquiry of any civil tribunal whatever,' and further that with the legal sentences of competent courts martial 'civil courts have nothing to do, nor are they in any way alterable by them. If it were otherwise'—it is added—'the civil courts would virtually administer the rules and articles of war irrespective of those to whom that duty and obligation has been confided by the laws of the United States, from whose decisions no appeal or jurisdiction of any kind has been given to the civil magistrate or civil courts.' This ruling has been abundantly affirmed and illustrated in later cases. ('The Judiciary Act of 1789 gave the Federal judiciary no such control, and none has been given since.' Woolley's Case, Am. S. R., M. A., v. IV, p. 853. And see Porret's Case, Perry's Oriental Cases, 419; Ex Parte Vallandigham, 1 Wallace, 243; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Do., 123; In re Grimley, 137 U. S., 147; Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 13, 23; In re White, 17 Fed., 724–5; In re Davison, 21 Fed., 618; In re Zimmerman, 39 Fed., 176; In re Spencer, 40 Fed., 149; Swaim v. U. S. (28 Ct. Cl. 173); In re Esmond, 5 Mackey, 64; Moore v. Houston (3 S. & R., 197; State v. Davis (1 South., 311); Ex parte Dunbar, 14 Mass., 393; Tyler v. Pomeroy (8 Allen, 484); State v. Stevens (2 McCord, 38); Ex parte Bright, 1 Utah, 148, 153; Whiting, War Powers, 278; Cooley, Prins. Const. Law, 113; 12 Opins. At. Gen., 332; Maltby, 151; also Wales v. Whitney and Smith v. Whitney (116 U. S. 168).)

"In the recent case of Wales v. Whitney (116 U. S. 564) a proceeding instituted against the Secretary of the Navy for the discharge on habeas corpus of an officer of the Navy, the Supreme Court of the United States, in holding that no Federal tribunal 'has an appellate jurisdiction over the naval court martial nor over offenses which such a court has power to try,' adds that no such tribunal 'is authorized to interfere with' a court martial 'in the performance of its duty by way of a writ of prohibition or any order of that nature.'

"This ruling was presently affirmed in the case of Smith v. Whitney (116 U. S. 168) where a petition for a writ of prohibition to the Secretary of the Navy and to a naval general court martial, to prohibit such court from trying a naval officer, was specifically refused by the same court. More recently the same writ has been refused in an Army case by a United States circuit court (U. S. v. Maney (61 F. 140)). In a still more recent instance (Johnson v. Sayre (April 1895) (158 U. S. 109) the Supreme Court, in denying relief to a naval court martial, declares, generally—'the court martial having jurisdiction of the person and offense,' and 'having acted within the scope of its legal powers, its decision, and sentence cannot be reviewed or set aside by the civil courts by writ of habeas corpus or otherwise.'"

Returning now to the proposed judicial council, you will note that no term or tenure is provided nor is there the requirement that the nominations be submitted to the Senate. Thus these officers, for whom salaries of $17,500 and allowances are provided, could be considered only as "inferior officers" under article II, section 2, clause 2. They would serve ostensibly at the pleasure of the President. This appears to be a paradoxical proposal in view of the numerous Executive nominations received in the ordinary course of business of the Senate. See, for example, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 27, 1949, pages 604–610. However, Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone and by article 67 Congress is asked to do so.

That this proposed Judicial Council is merely another administrative agency, as indicated earlier, rather than a military supreme court is indicated by the commentary of the Committee on a Uniform Code of Military Justice. This commentary reads:

"This article is new although the concept of a final appellate tribunal is not. Proposed AGN, article 39 (g) provides for a board of appeals while AW 50 (a) provides for a judicial council. Both of these tribunals, however, are within the Department. The judicial council provided for in this article is established in the National Military Establishment and is to review cases from all the armed forces. The members are to be highly qualified civilians and the compensation has been set to attract such persons.

"Automatic review before the judicial council is provided for all cases which must be approved by the President. See AW 71. The Judge Advocate General may direct that a case be reviewed by the council, and an accused may request review and will receive it where the council finds good cause.

"The time limits specified in subdivision (c) are necessary to eliminate undue delay in the execution of sentences.

"The judicial council takes action only with respect to matters of law. In this it differs from the final appellate tribunals now set up in or proposed for the Departments. It may act only with respect to the findings and sentence as approved by the convening authority. If the Board of Review has set aside a finding as against the weight of the evidence this decision cannot be reconsidered by the council. If on the other hand, the Board has set a case aside because of the improper introduction of evidence or because of other prejudicial error, the judicial council may reverse if it finds there has been no such error.

"The council shall affirm the findings and the sentence if it determines that, with respect to the matters which it considers, there has been no error of law which materially prejudices the substantial rights of the accused. See article 59, Commentary. It may affirm so much of a finding of guilty as involves a finding of guilty of a lesser included offense. See article 59. The only action which the council may take with respect to the sentence is to determine whether or not it is within legal limits."

QUALIFICATIONS OF THE MEMBERS OF THE JUDICIAL COUNCIL

Inasmuch as this is not a constitutional court or a part of the Federal judicial system, as indicated earlier (see Altmayer v. Sanford (1945), 148 Fed. 161), and inasmuch as Congress has power to vest the appointment of "inferior officers" in the President, it would appear that Congress could constitutionally provide standards of quality for persons designated to fill the positions. In this case there are two. Appointees shall be civilians and they shall have been admitted to practice before the bar of the Supreme Court. Without expressing an opinion as to the legitimacy of these proposed qualifications, we raise, however, the question of whether or not the jurisdiction sought to be conferred ought to be granted to such "inferior officers."

To cure this defect will necessitate the amendment of the bill so that members will be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. By thus hoisting these proposed positions out of the "inferior officer" classification, the next question becomes: Of what force and effect are the two proposed qualifications? Only a partial answer is found in the numerous acts of Congress which have sought to prescribe qualifications. While these statutory stipulations may have some merit in that they serve as a guide to the President and also serve as advance notice of what Congress desires in the way of appointees and what the Senate will approve, it is doubtful if such stipulations have any binding legal significance. Notwithstanding a statute setting forth qualifications for a position, and there are many, if the President nominates, the Senate advises and consents thereto, and the nominee is duly commissioned by the President, it may well be doubted seriously if the status of the officer commissioned could be attacked collaterally in a manner which would effect his ouster from the office.

WHY NOT USE CONSTITUTIONAL COURTS?

As Winthrop indicates, Congress has never made proceedings of courts martial subject to direct review by Federal courts. He might have added that at no time in the history of the Federal judiciary have the lower courts been vested with all the jurisdiction that the Constitution gives them the capacity to receive. Harris, the Judicial Power of the United States, page 91. Professor Harris points out that during the debate on the bill which became the Judiciary Act of 1789 (1 Stat. 76) two general groups appeared. The federalists, or proconstitutionalists, took the view that Congress could not withhold from the courts the jurisdiction specified in article III. The other group, he states, consisted of extreme advocates of States' rights and opponents of the new Constitution who wished either to confine the jurisdiction of the Federal courts within narrow limits or to refuse to provide altogether for courts inferior to the Supreme Court and vest their original jurisdiction in the State courts with only appellate jurisdiction vested in the Supreme Court of the United States. Neither group prevailed in its views but the compromise reached was an express recognition by legislative construction of the theory of broad congressional power upon which the opponents of a strong Federal judiciary based their contentions (pp. 87–88). The act of 1789 is important for its omissions in certain instances. Congress failed altogether to confer original jurisdiction upon the Federal courts in cases arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States. "Except for the brief period between the enactment of the act of 1801 (2 Stat. 89) and its repeal in 1802 (2 Stat. 132), the lower Federal courts had no jurisdiction in that very important group of cases involving a Federal question, and it was not until 1875 that they were vested with judicial power over such cases * * *" (p. 90).

Harris goes further to state that ever since this practical legislative construction of article III by the First Congress, the national legislature has always proceeded upon the assumption that it had complete discretion to regulate and restrain the jurisdiction, powers, and procedure of the lower Federal courts. Congress has not been alone, he states, in this broad construction of its powers relating to the organization, jurisdiction, and procedure of the lower Federal judiciary. As early as 1799 the Supreme Court concurred in this view (p. 19, citing Turner v. Bank of North America (1799) 4 Dall. 8).

Thus, while Congress could confer upon lower Federal courts jurisdiction with regard to military and naval offenses, it has not done so.

OTHER PENUMERAL AREAS

The government of the armed forces is not the only instance in which the Congress can set up a judicial system outside the purview of article III of the Constitution. Under article IV, section 3, clause 2, Congress has "Power to * * * make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory * * * belonging to the United States." Under this provision, even such rights as trial by jury in criminal cases (Dowell v. U. S. (1911) 211 U. S. 325, 332) or presentment or indictment by a grand jury (Ocampo v. U. S. (1914) 234 U. S. 91) were held to be statutory matters rather than constitutional rights when applied to Territorial possessions.

SUMMATION

The foregoing indicates that the proposed judicial council (subject to the infirmities noted) cannot be considered a part of the Federal judicial system established under the authority of article III of the Constitution. It is more properly within the designation of a military tribunal, appellate in character. Generally speaking military tribunals established under the authority of acts of Congress are constitutional. Ex parte Reed (1879) 100 U. S. 13, 21; Ex parte Quirin (1942) 317 U. S. 1; and Application of Yamashita (1946) 327 U. S. 1. Accordingly it would be possible to establish an appellate tribunal similar to that proposed by article 67.

Article 68 authorizes the President to direct the establishment of extra boards of review, and in time of emergency, temporary judicial councils.

Article 69 authorizes the office of Judge Advocate General to review minor sentences.

Article 70 authorizes the accused to have representation by counsel at appellate reviews as well as the armed services.

Subdivision (a) of article 71, relating to the execution of sentence and the suspension of sentence, raises an intriguing question as to intent. The subdivision reads:

"(a) No court martial extending to death or involving a general or flag officer shall be executed until approved by the President. He shall approve the sentence or such part, amount, or commuted form of the sentence as he sees fit and may suspend the execution of the sentence or any part of the sentence as approved by him, except a death sentence."

Numerous readings of the last clause stating that the President "* * * may suspend the execution of the sentence or any part of the sentence, as approved by him, except a death sentence" lead to the conclusion that this intends a limitation on the constitutional powers of the President as President and as Commander in Chief. The Constitution not only makes the President Commander in Chief (art. 2, sec. 2, cl. 1), the same article grants to him "* * * Power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment." Now these court-martial cases are to be prosecuted in the name of the United States. See proposed article 38, also AW 17. Accordingly, is this not an attempt to control legislatively the pardoning power of the President? (See 20 Op. Atty. Gen. 668; 27 Op. Atty. Gen. 178; ex parte Garland (1867) 71 U. S. 333), and Taft, Our Chief Magistrate and His Powers (1926), page 121. If something else is intended by the proposed wording, then subdivision (a) should be changed to convey that intention. If it is actually intended to limit the constitutional power of the President, then we invite attention to the statement of Attorney General Jeremiah S. Black in his opinion concerning the memorial of Capt. M. C. Meigs. He stated (9 Op. Atty. Gen. 462, 469):

"Congress is vested with legislative power; the authority of the President is executive. Neither has a right to interfere with the functions of the other. Every law is to be carried out so far as is consistent with the Constitution, and no further. The sound part of it must be executed, and the vicious portion of it suffered to drop. A legislative act is not to be treated as void merely because it is coupled with an abortive attempt to usurp executive powers. It stands to reason that if a condition, such as this is asserted to be, is void, it can have no effect whatever either upon the subject matter or upon other parts of the law to which it is appended. To say that it is void, and yet of such force that it controls the operation of the statute in which it is found, is a contradiction in terms. As a rule of constitutional interpretation, I think this is nowhere denied, and it agrees with all the analogies of the law. The principle universally applied to public and private grants is, that where a grant is made upon an illegal condition, the grant is absolute and the condition void. It is as old as the Yar Books (2 Henry IV, 9); it is laid down by Coke (Co. Litt., 206); the old reports are full of it, (Rolls, Abr., 418; 2 Vent., 109); and no modern authority disputes it. You are therefore entirely justified in treating this condition (if it be a condition) as if the paper on which it is written were blank."

Article 72 establishes the procedure for vacating a suspended sentence.

Article 73 permits a petition for a new trial within 1 year where the sentence extends to death, dismissal, dishonorable or bad-conduct discharge, or to confinement for more than 1 year.

Article 74 permits the Secretary, Under Secretary or Assistant Secretary of the Department, or commanding officer designated by the Secretary to remit and suspend unexecuted portions of sentences other than those approved by the President. An administrative form of discharge is authorized.

Article 75 relates to restoration to duty.

Article 76 seeks to foreclose any possible review by Federal courts. It reads:

"ART. 76. Finality of court-martial judgments.

"The appellate review of records of trial provided by this code, the proceedings, findings, and sentences of courts-martial as approved, reviewed, or affirmed as required by this code, and all dismissals and discharges carried into execution pursuant to sentences by courts martial following approval, review, or affirmation as required by this code, shall be final and conclusive, and orders publishing the proceedings of courts-martial and all action taken pursuant to such proceedings shall be binding upon all departments, courts, agencies, and officers of the United States, subject only to action upon a petition for a new trial as provided in article 73 and to action by the Secretary of a Department as provided in article 74."

This provision is substantially the same as AW 50 (h) as enacted by the Eightieth Congress (U. S. C. 10:1521). Considering Schita v. Cox (1944) 139 F. 2d 971; Henry v. Hodges (1948); and Innes v. Crystal (1943) 131 F. 2d 576, cert. denied 319 U. S. 755, rehearing denied 319 U. S. 788, the question of whether or not Congress desires to completely foreclose review by Federal constitutional courts. [Mention should be made of article 140 which provides for the delegation and subdelegation by the President of all the authority so carefully granted him in the preceding articles. The constitutional question thus presented concerning the right to delegate a judicial function is too involved to be discussed here if there is to be any limit at all to this brief.]

Part X, Punitive articles, includes articles 77-134 and will not be discussed in this memorandum.

Section 2 of the bill carries the savings clause. Section 3 states that no inference of legislative construction is to be drawn from the position of any article in the bill or by reason of the catch lines. Section 4 retains jurisdiction for crimes committed prior to the enactment of this bill. Section 5 proposes an effective date 12 months after approval or on July 1, 1950, whichever is the later date.

Section 6 carries technical amendments relating to residual Articles of War.

Section 7 sets out the authority of naval officers after loss of vessel; the authority of officers of separate marine organizations; the commanders' duties of example and correction; the requirement of divine service and reverent behavior.

Section 8 prescribes the oath of enlistment. Section 9 provides for the removal to Federal district courts of all civil or criminal prosecutions commenced in State courts against personnel of the armed forces on account of activities arising from their status or duties. Section 10 relates to dismissal of officers; sections 11, 12 carry certain amendments and repeals.

SUMMATION S. 857

As indicated at the beginning, in appraising the system of military justice, the emphasis must be on its actual operation rather than upon the relevant statutory provision standing alone.

From the viewpoint of judicial proceedings, review in S. 857 is provided ad infinitum, but nowhere is there assurance that this maze of review will be for any purpose other than to fix the record in such a manner or to such an extent that possible intervention by a constitutional court be precluded.

This brief should not be concluded without some special attention to the operation of the Navy court-martial system, especially since most of the articles under consideration seem to have been adopted from either the present AGN or the proposed AGN.

The Navy has not been subject to the volume of criticism that has befallen the Army for three reasons. First, it is a smaller and more compact organization; second, because of its smaller size, it could be more efficiently administered from the legal standpoint; and third, its powers to execute, discharge, and dismiss offenders were not as broad as those granted the Army.

The present AGN were adopted, in the main, in 1862. There have been no changes of significance since then. Thus it will be seen the situation is substantially different than that prevailing in the Army where great reforms have been effected as late as 1948.

Unlike the Army, the Navy has not now, and never has had, a corps of lawyers. Until the recent war it possessed a very small group of officers who were regular line officers, but who had been sent to law schools. Most of them had never been admitted to any bar outside of an officer's club. Of all the Judge Advocate Generals of the Navy, not more than three have been graduates of law school admitted to practice before the bar of any State of the Union after taking a bar examination. (During the war most legal billets were filled by Reserve officers called for that purpose or by retired Regulars who had had some legal training in the past.) Hithereto the practice was to send officers to sea for a tour of duty after their "legal training." After the sea tour was completed they returned ashore for 3 years' duty in a legal capacity. This rotating system, at the beginning of the present war, forced the creation of the Office of the General Counsel of the Navy Department to provide competent legal assistance in the Navy Department on contract and procurement matters, although the Judge Advocate

General continued to pretend that he was the "legal adviser" to the Secretary. The civilian office still functions. In effect, it causes two separate (and how distant) offices to carry on the legal work of the Navy.

Since the war the Judge Advocate General has accepted some Reserve lawyers in the Regular Navy in the evident hope of regaining some lost ground. However, the Navy continues to consider these lawyers as specialists, and apparently has no plans for integrating them properly into their promotion system, holding fast to the belief that a prerequisite to being the Judge Advocate General is the training and experience necessary to command a battleship or a division of destroyers.

The system presently in vogue is not changed in the proposed code. It is earnestly hoped that Congress will amend the bill so as to set up in the Navy a system similar to the Judge Advocate General Corps in the Army. Such a system at least insures that lawyers will do lawyers' work. It will have the further advantage of enabling lawyers, to some extent, to be promoted on their ability as lawyers. They will work as lawyers at all times during their naval career and thus furnish the Navy with a type of lawyer qualified to cope with those outside the service and with whom they must deal in carrying out their naval duties.

Consideration should be given to having only one Judge Advocate General of all the armed forces, with deputies in the three branches. If we are going to have unification, let's have it.

Finally the bill should be amended so as to provide that no discharge other than one under honorable conditions shall be given except pursuant to sentence of a court martial.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a number of Senators have asked me whether or not there will be a vote upon the pending measure this afternoon. I was unable to tell them definitely. I am wondering if my good friend from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] could give me any information in order that it may be transmitted to Senators who are inquiring from the Senator from Illinois about the situation.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I shall answer the question of the Senator from Illinois by saying that personally I do not intend to make any extended remarks on the amendments as they come up. I cannot speak for other Senators, but I understand that they will be fairly brief.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator believe that we might reach a vote on the bill this afternoon?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think so.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. NEELY obtained the floor.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. For what purpose does the Senator rise?

Mr. LANGER. I wish to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LANGER. Under the agreement, I wished to address the Senate briefly on the question of Germany. Am I prevented from doing so under that agreement?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia cannot yield for that purpose, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from West Virginia be permitted to yield to me for a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WHERRY. I merely wished to ask the distinguished Vice President what the answer was to the question propounded by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] a moment ago. He said something about an agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The agreement was that unanimous consent was given that Senators might submit routine matters and bills, and insert matters in the RECORD. The Senator from North Dakota wanted to know whether he could make a speech.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Vice President.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the text for my observations on the unnecessary, unscientific, and unjust sales-tax proposal before the Senate is the first verse of the second chapter of the Gospel according to St. Luke which is as follows:

> And it came to pass in those days that there went out a decree from Caesar Augustus that all the world should be taxed.

This decree was issued 5 years before the birth of Christ. It has ever since been in continuous, persistent, and progressively distressing operation in every civilized land under heaven. It has one of the attributes of Cleopatra—

> Age cannot wither it, nor custom stale its infinite variety.

The world has ceremoniously noted and long remembered the execution and promulgation of Magna Cartas, Bills of Rights, and Emancipation Proclamations. But all such documents and all other memorials of historical events will be searched in vain for a trace of an attempt to annul the Caesarean decree that all the world should be taxed.

In 1776 the American colonists courageously declared their independence of Great Britain. But they did not have the audacity to declare their independence of a Roman emperor who had been dead more than 1,700 years, and whose ghost is now haunting the Senate Chamber. Those gallant colonists did not have the temerity to consign Caesar's oppressive tax decree to the lake in which sulfur constantly sizzles and brimstone forever burns.

We have not only failed to free ourselves from the burden and bondage of unscientific taxes unrighteously levied upon us, but, by our craven conduct, we have demonstrated our erroneous and preposterous belief that taxation is—

> A monster of such frightful mien,
> As to be hated, needs but to be seen;
> But seen too oft, familiar with its face,
> We (should) first endure, then pity, then embrace.

Originally taxes were levied on only a few things. Now they are levied on everything from swaddling clothes to winding sheets; from cradles to coffins; from the graveyard's granite monuments to the gravel that grinds the grain in a goose's gizzard.

From morning till night we wander through a wilderness of taxes that are levied on everything we touch or taste or hear or see or feel or smell. When we finally go to sleep, we are plagued with nightmares about still other taxes that we know not of, but which we fear some Member of the Congress or of a State legislature will ingeniously devise and with which we and our harassed posterity may be bedeviled forever.

Our present burden of taxation is absolutely inescapable. When at work on the land, it remains on our backs. When we go down to the sea in ships, it is there. When we take the wings of the morning and soar into the stratosphere, it rides by our side and, like the evil spirit in Manfred, shrieks in our ears:

> I am the rider of the wind,
> The stirrer of the storm;
> The hurricane I left behind
> Is yet with lightning warm.

But notwithstanding the taxpayers' countless woes, the ancient Royal Order of Tax Inventors that neither slumbers nor sleeps proposes to saddle the voteless, voiceless people of the District of Columbia with an additional abomination, known as a consumers' sales tax. If the undertaking succeeds, the consumers of the District of Columbia will be compelled to pay on their retail purchases a tribute of $18,000,000 a year.

The proponents of reactionary tax legislation for the District have again and again campaigned for the adoption of a consumers' sales tax. Year after year the spokesmen for the District have informed the Congress that a budgetary crisis existed and that nothing short of a consumers' sales tax would be sufficient to solve the District's financial problems. Year after year District officials have frantically wrung their hands and wept before the congressional wailing wall and argued that the oppressive consumers' sales tax is the only financial salvation for the people of the Nation's Capital. This year's campaign has been waged with extraordinary vigor and apparently with more than ordinary success. The employees of the District have been made to believe that without a sales tax their compensation can never be increased. This is base, false propaganda to which no Senator should, for an instant, lend his ears. But Democratic Senators should be especially deaf to the sales-tax clamor for, be it remembered, that with the assistance of the distinguished Democratic Senators MCGRATH, MYERS, JOHNSTON, and HUMPHREY the last National Democratic Convention wrote into its platform this unconditional vigorous language:

We are opposed to the imposition of a general Federal sales tax.

In my opinion, no Democratic Senator can vote for the consumers' sales-tax provision before us without violating both the spirit and the letter of that platform declaration.

We are confronted with the simple question: "Shall we force an unjust consumers' sales tax on the residents of the District when much more equitable means of raising all necessary additional revenue are available?"

We are informed by the second page of the majority report that—

For the past 12 years committees of Congress, District officials, interested citizens, and civic organizations have lent their efforts in attempts to provide a sound and adequate tax system for the District.

Repeated attempts have been made to broaden the coverage of the District income tax but to no avail.

The records of the efforts that have been made clearly indicate the proper courses that should have been pursued in order to obtain the desired results. Unfortunately, those courses have been habitually shunned or ignored.

In comparison with the other large cities of the country Washington, which for practical purposes is synonymous with the District of Columbia, is undertaxed so far as generally approved methods of raising revenue are concerned. Existing taxes here are so much lower than they are in other similar cities that they could be substantially increased and still remain below the levels which elsewhere prevail. The personal income tax in the District could, with undoubted justice, be made to produce three times as much revenue as the city now derives from its operation.

Notwithstanding the assertion of the majority report that "repeated attempts have been made to broaden the coverage of the District income tax but to no avail," the same majority has incorporated in the bill—section 1, title IV—an income-tax provision which would accomplish what these alleged attempts have so far failed to do. This provision would impose an income tax on all residents who are defined to mean "every individual domiciled in the District on the last day of the taxable year, and every other individual who maintains a place of abode within the District for more than 7 months of the taxable year, whether domiciled in the District or not."

Without any other change in the law, this provision would produce $5,000,000 a year additional revenue. But the majority has failed to recommend the adoption of an adequate income tax. It has offered only lip service to the time-honored principle of ability to pay.

The majority of the committee, having broadened the base of the income tax to include all residents, proceeded in section 12 of the title under consideration to emasculate the income tax by raising the exemptions to $4,000 a year for each taxpayer and providing a $500 exemption for each dependent. Thus, under the bill, a married man with two children would not be subject to taxation if his income were less than $6,000 a year.

In brief, all but a small group of the District's residents would be completely exempt from the payment of a District income tax; while practically all the income of those who would remain taxable would be exempt—leaving only a negligible part of the total income subject to District taxation.

The majority vainly invokes ancient history. Past failure to broaden the coverage of the income tax cannot be the real reason for the majority's sales-tax recommendations because the bill contains broadened coverage. The majority manifestly prefers to levy additional taxes on those in the lower income-tax brackets who can least afford to pay them and, at the same time, lighten the tax burdens of those in the higher brackets who, without hardship, could continue to bear them. The majority has my congratulations for having made the issue so very plain.

Proceeding further with an analysis of the arguments presented in the majority report, we find on pages 3, 4, 5, and 6, statements by authorities on taxation defending the sales tax as an equitable source of revenue. The Members of the Senate should carefully read these statements. Professor Haensel, former professor of economics at Northwestern University, is quoted as follows:

If we want to tax the rich according to their income, there is an income tax available, but if we apply a sales tax, our exact aim—I repeat, our exact aim—is to reach the poor and the less prosperous mass consumer.

Professor Fairchild, of Yale University, who is also quoted by the majority, challenges the common assumption that the sales tax bears no relation to ability to pay and then goes on to say:

The amount of tax bears some relation to taxpaying ability. It does not bear the perfect relation. It does not permit the progressive relation such as the income tax allows. It does not, perhaps, even place a burden in proportion to total income or taxpaying ability.

Mr. President, let me supplement Professor Fairchild's discourse with the assertion that a consumers' sales tax is an unfair, burdensome, and distressing tax. It, in effect, enriches the wealthy and impoverishes the poor. Many outstanding economists and tax experts have emphatically declared that a sales tax is unjust, and they might have added that the poor are the first and the last victims of its oppression.

The experts upon whom the majority rely grant that the income tax is the only fair method of raising revenue, but like the majority of the committee, they do not favor taxation according to the humanitarian principle of ability to pay.

Finally it is argued that it would be more desirable to raise $14,000,000 by taxing sales than by increasing the tax on property. This argument is irrelevant to the pending question. The majority wishes to emasculate the income tax so as to make room for a sales tax, and we are informed that this is justified because it would be unfair to raise $14,000,000 by means of the property tax. A property tax is not involved in the consideration of the relative merits of a tax on income and a tax on sales.

To summarize, first, we are informed that past efforts to establish the income tax on an equitable basis have failed. Yet, in the bill the majority sets forth the means by which this result could be achieved.

Second, the majority cites a few tax experts who justify the adoption of the sales tax, but these very experts tell us that the income tax is far superior to the sales tax from the standpoint of justice.

Third, the majority asserts that it is more desirable to raise $14,000,000 by the sales tax than by raising property-tax rates, and fails to compare the income tax and the sales tax in the same way. Here is logic at its worst. I hope that the Members of the Senate will not be influenced by such fallacious reasoning.

I oppose enactment of a sales tax in the District of Columbia because of its notorious injustice to those who cannot afford to pay it. Prices are high enough. Low-income families already find it extremely difficult to purchase the necessaries of life. Any addition to current exorbitant prices will be prejudicial, if not distressing, to all low-income families.

And are there low-income families, and poor people in the District of Columbia? The following figures for March 1949 speak to the point. Two thousand five hundred sixty-two persons receive old-age assistance. If the proposed sales-tax provision is approved, these needy ones would have to pay that tax.

There are 1,710 dependent children in the District. Should a part of their scanty governmental allowance be diverted from the purchase of necessaries to the payment of sales taxes?

There are 223 blind in the District who are receiving Federal aid. The sales tax would add to their sightless distress.

There are 98 poor families and 1,235 poor individuals receiving Federal assistance.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I gladly yield to the able Senator from California.

Mr. DOWNEY. I notice that the memorandum which the Senator is using apparently does not include the number of persons in the District of Columbia who have old-age insurance.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator is correct, I did not obtain that information.

Mr. DOWNEY. There would be a number of persons receiving unemployment compensation.

Mr. NEELY. Of course.

Mr. DOWNEY. All of whom, like myriads of others, are in the very low income group.

Mr. NEELY. That is quite true.

Mr. DOWNEY. I congratulate the Senator on the very able statement he is making.

Mr. NEELY. I am greatly obliged to the Senator for his gracious remark and also for his valuable contribution to my argumentation.

Mr. President, a personal income tax exempts low-income families because they cannot afford to pay taxes. But a general sales tax is paid by everyone, regardless of his financial status. Thus, an elementary concept of equity is violated every time a sales tax is collected from one of poverty's many unfortunate victims. One of the functions of government is to help the needy. In fact, a substantial part of the District budget is spent for that purpose. Why should we provide public welfare and health services for those who cannot afford to pay for them, and at the same time further impoverish the beneficiaries of those services by compelling them to pay a sales tax on the necessaries of life?

The majority of the committee has recognized the basic injustice of a sales tax by exempting food and medicine from the operation of the proposed law. But we cannot stop there. Shoes, clothing, and shelter, for example, are also indispensable even to the poorest of God's children. There is no dividing line between essentials and nonessentials for low-income families because they have no nonessentials. They cannot afford them. They never enjoy them. All their incomes are spent for the basic necessaries of daily life. We should exempt from taxation everything that is indispensable to the very poor. But under a sales tax, no one is exempt.

A sales tax is a wasteful means of raising revenue. It is a constant irritation to merchants and their customers. It adds greatly to operating costs, because the bookkeeping involved is complicated. In most retail stores taxable and nontaxable merchandise will be sold, and it will be difficult for the merchants to account correctly for their tax liabilities.

Under the bill, customers will pay a 1-cent tax on purchases of 14 to 63 cents, 2 cents on purchases of 64 cents to $1.13, and an added cent for each additional 50 cents of purchase price. Although we are assured that this is a 2-percent sales tax, it would actually be a 5-percent tax on a 20-cent item and a 4-percent tax on a 25-cent item. Merchants would not be required to account for each penny of tax they collect. Instead, they would pay 2 percent of their total receipts, and be permitted to retain the additional pennies collected on inexpensive items.

This is not an insignificant matter. It means a subsidy to the seller, at the expense of the buyer. The poorer the buyer, the smaller his purchase. The smaller the purchase, the more burdensome the tax will be.

The objections to a sales tax we have indicated are arguments for a personal income tax. The latter provides graduated rates, so that taxpayers with high incomes will pay proportionately more than those whose incomes are less. This is taxation according to ability to pay—the important principle of commonsense economics by which we should be guided.

The income tax is more desirable than the sales tax on administrative grounds, as well as on grounds of equity. The sales tax will require substantial initial expenditures to set up its operating machinery. Everything necessary for the collection of income taxes in the District of Columbia already exists. Moreover, all who would be subject to tax under the District income-tax law would also be subject to the Federal income tax. Consequently, it will not be necessary to educate the taxpayer relative to new complications if we depend upon the income tax for the revenue needed.

The sales tax has been utilized in many States as a measure of fiscal desperation. Several States originally adopted the sales tax during the 1930's, when incomes were low, and when direct taxation was expressly prohibited by State constitutions. In the District, we have no legal obstacles to prevent us from imposing the necessary income tax, and we need have no fear that incomes will eventually drop so low that this tax would become a poor revenue producer.

The per capita income of the people of Washington is among the highest in the Nation. The number of very low income families is proportionately smaller than it is in the various States. Income is concentrated in the middle brackets, between $3,000 and $7,000, and it is from these brackets that most of the income-tax revenues are obtained. Should employment drop elsewhere in the country, it would be likely to drop less in the District because those working here are in Government service, which must continue. For these reasons we can be assured that an income tax would provide adequate revenues, and that its yield would, over a long period of time, be more constant here than in any other community in the country.

It will be argued that the need for revenue in the District is urgent, and that it will be necessary to delay this legislation if the sales tax is not enacted. This would be misrepresentation. The bill contains not only provisions for a sales tax, but also the elements of a good income tax. It is only necessary to raise the proposed exemptions to their present levels, and to increase the rates moderately in order to provide additional revenue of $15,000,000 a year.

Mr. President, it is submitted that the arguments of the majority of the committee in favor of a sales tax fail to demonstrate that it is either desirable or necessary. We should not be deceived into believing that only a sales tax can rescue the District from its present financial crisis, when as a matter of fact we can promptly and properly solve the existing financial problem by enacting an adequate personal income-tax law.

District residents have no voice in the affairs of their government. In the absence of local self-government Congress is morally obligated to provide wise and just administration, and a sound and equitable tax structure for the District. This obligation compels us to reject a sales tax and provide an adequate personal income tax in its place.

Mr. President, the following relevant communications have been received by me during the last few days. They speak so impressively for themselves that comment upon them would be superfluous:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 11, 1949.

Hon. MATTHEW M. NEELY,
United States Senate:

In the name and behalf of the membership of the American Federation of Labor I appeal to the Members of the United States Senate to defeat the sales-tax legislation now pending in the United States Senate. The enactment of such a measure would impose upon the masses of the people in District of Columbia an additional tax burden. I hope and trust the sales-tax measure referred to will be decisively defeated.

WM. GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 10, 1949.

Senator MATTHEW M. NEELY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

The following telegram was sent today by the CIO to Senator MCGRATH, chairman of the Senate District of Columbia Committee:

"The CIO urges you strongly to oppose the proposed sales-tax bill for the District of Columbia. This bill flies in the face of the best accepted principles of tax legislation, namely, that the tax burden must be distributed on the basis of people's ability to pay. Contrary to this sound principle of ability to pay, this measure would bear down most heavily upon the low-income residents of the District of Columbia. Sales taxes consume a far greater percentage of the income of the poorest families than of those in the upper income brackets. Passage of such legislation would be especially unwise at a time when low-income groups are already experiencing difficulty in purchasing even the bare necessities of life. Congress has continuously resisted retail sales-tax legislation as a national policy, and to impose it upon the people of the District would be both unfair and inconsistent."

NATHAN E. COWAN,
CIO Legislative Director.

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., May 11, 1949.

Memorandum to: United States Senator MATTHEW M. NEELY.

From: Thomas Kennedy.

The position of the United Mine Workers of America, not only as a national organization but in our various districts and local unions, is in opposition to the imposition of any sales tax. Our policy is based on actual experience because we have found, in sections where the sales tax is already in existence, that it falls the heaviest on the wage earner who is less able to handle the situation, particularly the wage earners with large families.

This question has been discussed in many State legislatures, especially in industrial States like Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and the proponents of sales-tax legislation have been unable to refute the contention that the person with the smaller income will be taxed much more heavily under a sales-tax arrangement than other individuals with more ample means.

Furthermore, it is the thought of the United Mine Workers of America, expressed through its president, John L. Lewis, and the undersigned, that to adopt a sales tax in the District of Columbia by the Members of Congress, would establish a precedent which would be the forerunner of similar legislation throughout the Nation, and especially in States that do not now have the sales tax.

Our organization has been consistent in its opposition to this matter for years, and we herewith again express the opposition of the United Mine Workers of America to the sales-tax question. We sincerely believe our position is meritorious and respectfully request that it be given every consideration.

THOMAS KENNEDY,
Vice President.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 12, 1949.

Hon. MATTHEW M. NEELY,
Senate Office Building:

The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen is opposed to the sales tax proposed to be levied on the District of Columbia by H. R. 3704. This measure strikes at the traditionally accepted and truly American principle of distributing the burden of taxation according to ability to pay.

In contrast to the equitableness of the principle of taxation according to ability to pay, the proposed tax would exert a distinct hardship upon only the lower income groups of the Nation's Capital, who even now experience difficulty in maintaining an acceptable standard of living.

The platform of the Democratic Party condemns retail sales tax as a national policy, and to impose a similar tax upon residents of the District is unjust. We urge you and your fellow Senator to oppose this measure.

A. F. WHITNEY,
President, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Mr. Benjamin Marsh, in behalf of The People's Lobby, has sent me the following letter:

The proposed District 2-percent sales tax violates the principles of the Democratic Party, and is not essential to obtain the revenue the District needs.

The purpose of a sales tax is to extort income indirectly from people whom Government is afraid to tax directly, and is an income tax, without the exemption which equity requires.

The alleged justification for a sales tax in the District, is to reach nonresidents who trade here, but do not pay the local income tax.

They already pay taxes here, however, in providing the profits of local merchants upon which the District now levies taxes, and rent.

ALTERNATIVES TO A DISTRICT SALES TAX

The two basic principles of taxation are that taxes should be levied according to ability to pay, and benefits received from Government.

Personal income taxes and profits taxes comport with the first principle.

Taxation of land values is the effective way to tax benefits received from Government, since all Government expenditures enhance the selling price of land.

This principle has been ignored in the District.

The assessed value of taxable land in the District is about $505,000,000.

This is an untaxed value, and measures benefits received from Government, and the presence of population, as residents, and nonresidents employed here.

This value is very highly concentrated in business areas.

Three blocks—bounded by Fourteenth Street, Pennsylvania Avenue, Fifteenth Street, and New York Avenue—out of about 4,800 blocks in the District have about 3 percent of the value of all taxable land in the District—about $14,130,000.

Congress should levy an additional tax of 1 percent upon the value of taxable land in the District, exclusive of all improvements thereon, which would yield a little over $5,000,000.

The owners of land in these three blocks would pay $141,390 more; the owners of a small home would pay only $5 to a maximum of $10, in both cases, only a small part of what he would have to pay under a sales tax, which would yield substantial revenue.

Such a tax on land values would enable the Government to obtain land for housing and other purposes, much cheaper than now.

To get the additional revenue for the District, personal-income taxes and profits taxes should be increased.

Mr. President, on the foregoing I rest my case, and now earnestly appeal to Democratic Senators to be loyal to their party's platform pledge of opposition to the consumers' sales tax. I appeal to them to be loyal to the age-old praiseworthy principle of taxation according to ability to pay. I appeal to all Senators, whether Democratic or Republican, to obey the Golden Rule, and in voting on the proposed sales-tax abomination, to do unto the poor of the District of Columbia as Senators would have these unfortunate ones do unto them and thus defeat one of the most objectionable and distressing tax proposals that has ever been seriously considered by the Senate.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I note that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], who is in charge of the bill, is in the Senate Chamber, and I should like briefly to ask him a couple of questions.

I am a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on the District of Columbia. I have attended all the hearings on that appropriation bill this year. Several things appealed to me very much in that connection.

We increased the salaries of employees of the District of Columbia by approximately $330, on an annual basis. It is my understanding that on that basis for the fiscal year 1949 there is owing to the employees of the District of Columbia approximately $4,937,000. If we place it on an annual basis, for the fiscal year 1950, which is not now included in this budget, the amount would be $5,731,000. The total for the 2 years would be $10,668,000. My question is, Did the committee have this in mind when it was considering the tax bill?

Mr. HUNT. It definitely did. From the very first of our hearings, it seemed to be understood and agreed that there was a moral obligation on the part of the District to make this salary increase retroactive, as of July, the reason being that the increase to the District employees was included, I believe, in Public Law 600, provisionally upon the passage of the sales-tax bill. When that measure failed, as I remember, Public Law 600 was amended to provide for such increases to District employees when moneys were available.

I see the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] directly behind the Senator from Massachusetts. He was in charge of the bill at that time. He will correct me, I am sure, if my statement is incorrect.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, my memory indicates that what the Senator from Wyoming has just said is literally correct.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I thank the Senator.

I should like to ask another question. I note that in the report on the bill the committee takes up this year's budget. The bill which was passed by the House containing appropriations for the District of Columbia amounted to $93,900,000 in round figures. The Commissioners requested $4,305,000 additional. I listened to all those requests. Many of them appealed to me as extremely reasonable and proper. Some of them involved questions of salaries. Many of them involved questions of hospitals and schools. School buildings and school facilities in the District of Columbia are particularly poor at the present time in comparison with those in many other cities.

I note also that the House committee stated that it believed that many of those requests should be granted if there were additional revenue. I assume that the committee went into some of those subjects when it was considering this bill.

Mr. HUNT. It certainly did. The House action was predicated on the basis that, as of the date of its action, the sales tax had not yet been enacted. Therefore it made some reductions in the budget of the District of Columbia. The committee frankly stated that it was making them solely because at the time it did not see the money available.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. So it is perfectly clear that if we are going to provide proper school facilities for the District and improve the hospitals as we should, if we are going to provide increased pay for District of Columbia employees, for which there is a moral obligation, either there must be a greater contribution by the Federal Government or there must be some tax remedy. Is that correct?

Mr. HUNT. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Did the committee go into the question of whether or not, in its opinion, increased property taxes and increased income taxes alone would provide the necessary revenue, without making those taxes too burdensome?

Mr. HUNT. Such taxes would not provide the necessary revenue, unless the taxes were entirely out of line.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. If I read the newspapers correctly, the per capita property taxes today in Washington are the second highest of any large city in the Union.

Mr. HUNT. I think that statement is approximately correct. The position of the committee with reference to increased taxes on real estate was that the increase which we have suggested, 15 cents on each $100 valuation, makes a total increase of nearly 40 percent within the past 3 years, since 1946.

Looking further into that question, we had some spot checks made with reference to similar properties in Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia. In each of those spot checks we found that on like properties, the same type of structures, built at the same time, and identical in almost every detail, the taxes in Washington were higher than they were in Maryland or Virginia.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. So in the opinion of the committee, as stated by the Senator from Wyoming, who is in charge of the bill, the issue boils down to this: If we are to provide proper services, and proper pay to employees of the District of Columbia, either there must be an increase in the Federal contribution, the burden of which will fall on all the people in cities and towns outside the District, or there must be a higher payment on the part of residents of the District of Columbia alone.

Mr. HUNT. The Senator is quite correct. If we are to meet our responsibilities we must choose between an increased Federal payment, a sales tax, or a great increase in the taxes now in effect.

The Senator well knows that the type of school buildings in the District is disgraceful. I think that word was used yesterday. I believe that the Congress should be ashamed because it has not appropriated sufficient money for the schools of the District. The situation is such that if a teacher is ill, she must employ her own substitute and pay the bill.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, is the Senator from Massachusetts aware of the fact that if he directed exactly the same questions to members of the minority he would get exactly the opposite answer to practically every question he has asked the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President I respectfully reply to the Senator from Oregon that I have asked those questions of the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. HUNT] on the theory that he would give me honest answers.

Mr. MORSE. I have no doubt that he gave honest answers, from his sights; but I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that if he really wants to get the facts he should also look into the opposing points of view. He will find just the opposite point of view expressed by the minority.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that the Senator from Massachusetts attended every hearing this year in connection with the appropriations and the budget of the District of Columbia. The Senator from Massachusetts was shocked, if he may use that extreme expression, by some of the statements made with relation to the schools, the hospitals, and the payment of the personnel of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORSE. I know how fair the Senator from Massachusetts wants to be in getting both sides of an issue into the RECORD. There is no question that the Senator from Massachusetts is correct about the shocking conditions in the District; but the question I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts is this: Was any attempt made on the part of the District Committee to make a recommendation for an increase in property taxes and income taxes before the proposal for a sales tax was made?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I shall have to refer that question to members of the committee for reply.

Mr. MORSE. I think the committee's report speaks for itself. The answer is "No."

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I should like to propound a question to the able Senator from Wyoming, who is in charge of the bill. It has to do with the exemptions under subsection (m) on page 13, with which the Senator is familiar. It exempts from the operation of the law sales in interstate commerce. Of course, the Senator is very well aware of that exemption. I should like to ask him to amplify slightly, and indicate the sales and the gross receipts from sales which would be exempt under that subsection.

Mr. HUNT. I may say to the distinguished Senator that we have in mind the exemption of any tangible personal property to which interstate-commerce laws apply. In other words, it would not be lawful under the Constitution for a sales tax to be levied on the sales of a magazine printed in the District of Columbia and distributed throughout the United States.

Mr. O'CONOR. Very good. Therefore, I should like to ask the Senator whether my understanding is correct, that gross receipts from the sales of magazines—for example, magazines printed in the District of Columbia, but distributed throughout the country, to subscribers in various of the States of the Union—would be exempt from the operation of the tax.

Mr. HUNT. Yes; that is quite correct.

I may say that I think I know, perhaps, one of the companies in which the Senator from Maryland is interested in that connection.

Mr. O'CONOR. It happens that it is a nonprofit association that is operating in the District of Columbia, and has asked me for information on this subject. I refer to the National Rifle Association.

Mr. HUNT. That group has already been declared to be exempt, under the operation of other laws in the District of Columbia.

Mr. O'CONOR. Let me ask a further question, which is prompted by the observations just made by the Senator from Wyoming: Would the gross receipts from the sales of printed matter generally, which is prepared in the District of Columbia but is sent outside the District of Columbia, be exempt from the operation of this proposed law?

Mr. HUNT. They certainly would.

Mr. O'CONOR. I thank the Senator.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM PROMISES—TAXES—GERMAN FISHERIES

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I am delighted to see so many Democratic Senators in their seats on the other side of the aisle, and I am particularly pleased that the Senator who is national chairman of the Democratic Party is occupying his seat in the Chamber. I wish to call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island to the Democratic platform. This platform was drawn up at Philadelphia with the idea, I presume, of getting votes. But, Mr. President, now that the votes have been secured, we are once more confronted with the old cry, "The people be damned."

On page 6 of the platform of the Democratic Party, adopted in July of last year at Philadelphia, we find what the Democratic Party said at the time when it needed votes:

> We are opposed to the imposition of a general Federal sales tax.

Of course, when the Democrats wanted votes, they were opposed to a sales tax; but after the election is all over, we find the Democratic leaders saying, "We want a sales tax."

But, Mr. President, that is not all. They also said in that platform:

> We favor the reduction of taxes, whenever it is possible to do so without unbalancing the Nation's economy, by giving a full measure of relief to those millions of low-income families on whom the wartime burden of taxation fell most heavily.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President——

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I decline to yield at this time. Later on, I shall be glad to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). The Senator from North Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, when the President of the United States was looking for votes, he said to the voters: "We are going to reduce taxes."

In contrast to his position at that time, I refer now to a copy of today's Washington Post, and on the front page we find the following headline: "Truman Stands on $4,000,000,000 Tax Hike."

So, he wants $4,000,000,000 more than the Democratic Party ever had in all its history. You see, Mr. President, the election is over, and the Democrats do not need votes now, or for the next 3 years. The election being over, instead of wanting votes, they want $4,000,000,000 more in taxes.

So, although some of the Democratic leaders say they can get along with from $1,000,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 of new taxes, President Truman, having been duly elected and installed, now says he needs and wants $4,000,000,000 of additional taxes.

In contrast to what the Democratic Party said it was going to do for poor people, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that last year the Republican Party gave an increase of $320 to poor Federal workers. Furthermore, the Republican Party removed the income-tax burden from 7,000,0000 people. That was done by the Eightieth Congress, which the President of the United States condemned so viciously in the campaign. In that Congress, as a result of the action taken by the Republican Party, 7,000,000 people in the low-income groups were entirely relieved from the payment of income taxes.

But the Democratic Party's platform goes on to say that they are going to take care of those who are on relief.

As all Members of the Senate know, there are thousands upon thousands of low-paid Federal workers, some of whom are trying to live on $2,300 or $2,400 a year. Veterans working as mail carriers were receiving $1,900 a year and in many cases were trying to support a wife and two children on that salary, the testimony shows, until the Republican Party gave them an increase of $450, so that those veterans who work in the Post Office Department—and 80 percent of the mail handlers in the Post Office Department are veterans—were able to make a decent living.

But what does the Democratic Party propose to do now? Before I leave this point, I wish to say that my distinguished friend, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], was in favor of increasing the wages of the Federal workers in the lowest bracket. His objection to the proposal was against raising the pay of those who are receiving $10,000 a year or more. I certainly concur in the position the distinguished Senator from Virginia took; and I wish to say that I have always taken pride in the fact that for 6 years I served on the Civil Service Committee with the Senator from Virginia, a man who, so far as the civil service was concerned, did a magnificent job for the Federal employees.

But, Mr. President, what do the Democrats propose now? I hold in my hand a copy of the Times-Herald published here in Washington on May 5, 1949. I read from it:

Bill providing * * * raises of $50.

That does not mean a pay raise of $50 a day or $50 a week, but it means a pay raise of $50 a year. So the Democratic Party is going to take care of 860,000 Federal workers by giving them a pay raise of $50 a year. So, Federal workers who up to the present time have not been able to send their children to college, unless they received scholarships—Federal workers who have been unable to go to Miami Beach to spend the winter—now at the hands of the Democratic Party are going to get $50 a year more than they have been getting, and so, no doubt, they will be able to send their children to college, when the time comes for them to go there.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I decline to yield now, but I shall yield a little later. I think I know what the distinguished Senator from Louisiana is going to say.

Mr. LONG. I do not believe the Senator from North Dakota does.

Mr. LANGER. Yes; I think I do; and I decline to yield at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, the article which refers to the proposal to give the Federal workers a pay increase of $50 a year is so interesting that I wish to read it in full at this time. It is by Howard Lewis, and was published on the second page of the Times-Herald:

President Truman's bill—

So, the bill comes from the President of the United States. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana had gone to the White House, as chairman of the subcommittee, in order to get the very latest orders from the President of the United States.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, to permit a correction to be made?

Mr. LANGER. I decline to yield at this time.

The Senator from Louisiana went to the White House to get his orders from the President of the United States. Then he returned to the Senate and reported this:

President Truman's bill providing yearly raises averaging $50 a year—

I tell you, Mr. President, compared to the $330 pay increase which the Republicans provided for the average Federal employee last year and the $450 pay increase which the Republican Party gave to postal workers, we find that the Democratic Party now proposes to give Federal workers a pay increase of $50 a year, although the testimony shows that they need a pay increase of more than $1,000 a year.

President Truman's bill providing yearly raises averaging $50 for 860,000 classified Government workers, including 150,000 here, was introduced in the Senate yesterday by Senator LONG (Democrat), of Louisiana, only a few hours after it was sent by the Civil Service Commission to Capitol Hill.

LONG, chairman of the Federal Pay Subcommittee, announced he will put in the hopper today a measure proposing a $150 yearly raise for 450,000 postal workers—

Fifty dollars, Mr. President, for those poor people who last year received an increase of $330, when, in my judgment, they should have had more, and for the postal workers, who got $450, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana says he is going to introduce a bill—I have not seen it yet; it may have been introduced—providing a yearly raise of $150—for 450,000 postal workers, including 25,000 in the local area, not covered by the President's pay bill.

So it appears that President Truman is running the Senate. He is the man who says whether it shall be $50, $60, $70, $100, or $200. It is not the bill of my friend, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, at all. It is the President's bill—Mr. Truman's bill, as it is called here in the newspaper. It continues:

The President's proposals—

The President's proposals, not the proposals of the Senator from Lousiana—were transmitted in a 26-page legislative draft sent to House Speaker RAYBURN by the Civil Service Commission and which, if passed, would revise and simplify the entire salary structure.

Included among the 150,000 local federalites would be 7,600 District of Columbia municipal employees.

The bill, by raising the classified salary ceiling for nonappointive officials from $10,330 to $16,000, would make it possible for some top-bracket career workers to get as much as $5,670 more a year.

In other words, Mr. President, under the bill introduced by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, Government employees who are getting $10,330 a year have nothing to fear. Under the Democratic pledge, they are raised from $10,330 a year to $16,000. My recollection is that there are now about 3,217 persons who work for the Government who receive $10,000 a year or more. But the poor man, the veteran who spent days and weeks and months in the fox holes, and who is a mail handler now trying to live on $2,300 or $2,400, receives the great sum of $50, or $150 at the most, in the event the bill as introduced is passed. I refer again to the platform of the Democratic Party, wherein the Democrats said they were going to do exactly the opposite. The article continues:

Here are some of the essential features of the proposed measure:

1. The three most important classified services would be merged into one new overall service. Those to be combined would be CAF (clerical, administrative, and fiscal); P (professional); and SP (subprofessional).

EIGHTEEN GRADES TO REPLACE THIRTY

2. More than 30 grades now in the three services to be merged would be consolidated into 19 new grades.

3. The present classified salary ceiling of $10,330 would be raised to $16,000 a year.

I particularly call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] to the fact that under the bill drawn by the President and by him sent to the Senator from Louisiana, who introduced it on May 5, the present classified salary ceiling of $10,330 would be raised to $16,000 a year—the very measure that was defeated in the Eightieth Congress as a result of a speech made by the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia upon the floor of the Senate.

4 An average raise of $50 a year will be provided for classified workers, but this would be only an average. Some officials would get an increase of more than $5,000; other workers would get a boost of only a few dollars.

The average is $50. I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the article be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the remainder of the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

5. Several thousand workers in the clerical-mechanical service, all of whom work for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, would be removed from the classification structure and their wages would be determined by wage boards on the basis of prevailing rates for similar work in private industry.

NEW CUSTODIAL SET-UP

6. Workers in the custodial-protective crafts service would be set up in an entirely independent classified system, with 10 separate grades of their own, which would provide slightly higher wages than these employees now receive.

7. Workers making up to $10,000 under the proposed new schedule would be eligible for longevity increases. These increases would be given workers who have served several years at the top of their grades in dead-end jobs and who presently have no hopes of further promotions.

About 7,600 classified D. C. employees would benefit. Any increase they would get under the bill also would be above and beyond the $300 salary raise, retroactive to last July, which they would get under legislation awaiting action on Capitol Hill. Other nonclassified D. C. employees would not be covered.

In addition, the bill would bring into the Federal classification structure thousands of employees here who are not now covered, such as employees of RFC, who currently have their own classification structure.

Meanwhile, Chairman LONG of the Senate pay subcommittee announced that in an effort to get speedy consideration of the President's pay proposals, the subcommittee will hold hearings on the Federal pay question starting at 10 a. m. Monday.

Mr. LANGER. So, Mr. President, we come again to the pledge on page 6 of the Democratic platform, reading as follows:

We are oposed to the imposition of a general Federal sales tax.

Yet here they are, today, asking for a sales tax in the District of Columbia, knowing full well that a sales tax such as is provided for in the bill imposes by far the greatest burden upon poor people. Senators know what a terrible burden the sales tax is.

Let us take up further the record of the Democratic Party, the party that said it was going to help the poor, but is giving veterans an increase of $50 a year. That is about $6 a month. I think it comes to about 20 cents a day, perhaps less. The leaders of the Democratic Party say they are able to take excellent care of people in foreign countries, and that is shown by the record compiled by Representative VAN ZANDT, who is a Pennsylvania Republican, who, incidentally, fought in both world wars, and three times was commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Certainly, when a man like Representative VAN ZANDT prepare figures like these, they can be relied upon.

How much money have we given to foreign countries since the end of World War I? Here we have the figures. We gave Austria $885,118,000; Rumania, $39,942,000; Belgium and Luxemburg, $1,744,000,000; the British Empire, $44,679,000,000. Mr. President, do you know how much a billion dollars is? When I was governor of my State the entire assessed valuation of the whole State of North Dakota, including every acre of land, every bit of city property, all the bank deposits, every horse and cow and all sheep, everything we had in the State, was roughly $921,000,000. But there has been given to the British Empire $44,679,000,000, roughly 44 times the value of everything we had in the State of North Dakota at that time, including millions of acres of land and all the other property of every kind, character, and description, including all our public utilities.

Oh, Mr. President, this Democratic Party that gave Great Britain $44,679,000,000, are worried now that we might spend too much money for public health in the United States. It will be recalled how they tried to cut down the few dollars we set aside the other day for cancer research, and the few dollars we appropriated for the investigation of heart disease; and when they came to taking care of mental health, they said we could not afford it, we should let those folks who are crazy just remain crazy; we should let those who are going crazy, go crazy. We have no money to make an investigation to find out how such persons may be kept from becoming insane. If they are insane, why, just let them continue to be insane.

As a matter of fact, by reason of the discovery of insulin, the medical profession is able to cure 80 percent of a certain kind of insanity. It is being done in some of the State hospitals every day. Of course, the treatment is expensive. The patients are treated with insulin by being given 350 units of the drug, and they become unconscious from the shock. Later they have to be fed glucose through the veins, and gradually they recover. But, as I stated previously, it is an expensive process. In any event, it is said we cannot afford it. We will let the sick veterans die. If they are insane, let them stay insane. It is too bad we cannot give them enough medicine, but that is just their hard luck, because we have to take care of Great Britain, Ethiopia, and many other countries.

In addition to the money which we have given to Great Britain, we also gave China $3,446,000,000. We have given China $54,000,000 since, which is not included in the list which I have here. During the debate on the Marshall plan bill, the distinguished Senator from California offered an amendment under which we gave China an additional $54,000,000.

That is much more than was asked in the mental health bill. In any event, the mental health bill was not passed, but there was $54,000,000 more to be spent in China.

The following amounts have been given by the United States to foreign nations:

Czechoslovakia	$17,348,000
Denmark	234,792,000
Egypt	59,700,000
Estonia	25,903,079
Ethiopia	16,447,000
France and possessions	3,371,000,000
Finland	24,600,056
Germany (bizonia)	3,260,000,000
Greece	681,000,000
Hungary	64,000,000
Iceland	20,900,000
Israel	63,009,000
Italy	4,700,000,000
Iran	23,100,000
Iraq	7,805,000
Ireland	142,703,000
Japan	1,891,000,000
Korea	89,469,000
Latvia	10,713,000
Liberia	14,829,000
Lithuania	9,603,059
Netherlands and possessions	979,000,000
Norway	345,000,000
Philippine Islands	708,000,000
Poland	373,600,000
Portugal	11,647,000
Rumania	79,435,000
Russia	12,793,400,000
Saudia Arabia	46,200,000
Sweden	104,100,000
Trieste	35,200,000
Turkey	305,400,000
Yugoslavia	117,200,000
American Republics (13)	1,651,392,000

Mr. President, every time the ruler of one of the foreign nations comes to the United States he is met at the airport by the President, or someone from the Department of State. The red carpet is rolled out, and the ruler gets off the plane with his tin cup and is promptly rushed over to the Blair House or to the White House to get some more money.

I again invite the attention of the Senate to the promise made in the Democratic platform. On page 6 of that document we find:

> We favor the reduction of taxes.

I again invite attention to the fact that in the newspapers this morning it is reported:

> Truman stands on $4,000,000,000 tax hike.

The Democratic Party said, in Philadelphia:

> We shall endeavor to remove tax iniquities and continue to reduce the national debt.

To continue to spend more and more money and send more and more money abroad is a strange way to reduce the national debt.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, did the Senator say "tax iniquities"?

Mr. LANGER. Tax iniquities. According to the Democrats' theory, there are no inequities. They simply take all they can possibly get, and by imposing a Federal sales tax they want to get the last cent the poor man in Washington has left after paying his other expenses.

I invite the attention of the distinguished acting majority leader to the Democratic platform, in which it is said:

> We are opposed to the imposition of a general sales tax.

When they were looking for votes they were against the sales tax, but now that the election is over they want to establish a sales tax in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I shall yield later. I do not want to have my thought interrupted at this particular time. Yes; I yield to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I wanted to ask the Senator if he interprets a general sales tax to be restricted only to the District of Columbia?

Mr. LANGER. I interpret it to be a Federal sales tax, to take money out of the pockets of the poor people of the Nation, whether it is called a general sales tax or simply a Federal sales tax. It is the same kind of a tax, no matter what it is called. There is an old saying that a rose by any other name would smell as sweet.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. Is it the Senator's interpretation of the Democratic platform that that party is opposed to a sales tax only where people vote, but where they do not vote the party is not opposed to a sales tax?

Mr. LANGER. That may be the theory of the persons who drew up the Democratic platform. There were strange people helping in drawing up the platform. I understand that some distinguished Senators who are now on the floor were at the Philadelphia convention, and I am sure they may be able to answer the question of the distinguished Senator from Oregon. But any common, ordinary man reading the Democratic platform would certainly come to the conclusion that the Democratic Party was opposed to a Federal sales tax. It is there in plain, simple, unequivocal, clear language. It says:

> We are opposed to the imposition of a general Federal sales tax.

Mr. President, we cannot rely upon what is said in the Democratic platform. People should have known that by their experience with the Democratic platform of 1932. I dissected the platform of 1932, and with the possible exception of one, not one pledge that was written into the 1932 platform was kept. The distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], now presiding over the Senate, remembers that in that platform it was said the Democrats were going to cut down the number of bureaus. Instead of cutting down the number, they increased the number. They said at that time all the things they were going to do, that they were going to reduce expenses and the national debt. They also failed to keep those promises.

UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA LIBRARIES

I call attention now to another paragraph in the Democratic platform. This is on page 3:

> We pledge our best endeavors to conclude treaties of peace with our former enemies.

Yet, Mr. President, 4 years have gone by since the war, and they have not yet concluded a treaty of peace with any of the leading nations involved in the war. I repeat, that was nearly 4 years ago.

But that is not the worst of it. The worst is that there are all kinds of secret treaties, with which not only the people of the United States are entirely unfamiliar, but with which the Members of the Senate are unfamiliar, and about which they know nothing. I might add that the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations are in total ignorance of them.

Every once in awhile they come along and take off the ban of secrecy. I have here in my hand the message sent to the Senate a few days ago by the President of the United States, under date of May 9, 1949. Listen to this. This convention, mind you, was sent to the United States Senate:

> Convention was read the first time and the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom. The convention, the President's message of transmittal, and all accompanying papers were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

This was the international convention for the North Atlantic fisheries.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the Senator, who I understand has to leave to attend a committee meeting.

Mr. LONG. I should like to point out to the Senator from North Dakota that it is true that the bill to which he has referred provides very mild pay increases, and he will notice that in some cases it provides less than $50 in the way of increase. There are some brackets in which the pay increase would be only $1.72, and I understand there are some other brackets in which there would be no increase at all.

If the Senator will refer to page 5568 of the RECORD of May 4, 1949, he will see that I said, at the time I introduced the bill, that it was my understanding that it more or less represented the point of view of the administration. This is not a pay-increase bill, because, as the Senator will see, in some brackets there is no increase at all. If the Senator will refer to page 5568 of the RECORD he will see this statement, in the last paragraph of the letter which I inserted when introducing the bill:

> We recommend the proposed bill for consideration and enactment by the Congress. We have been advised that this proposal is in accordance with the President's financial and administrative program.

It was upon that basis that I stated to the Senate I understood that the bill represented the administration's point of view. I will say to the Senator that I did not go to the White House and receive any orders. I merely received the bill, with the attached letter. I presume it is an administration bill, and that it is what the administration would like to have enacted.

Mr. LANGER. The newspapers stated that the distinguished Senator did go to the White House, and that he did meet with the President. As a matter of fact, he introduced the President's bill, and I ask this question, if the Senator cares to answer it: Can the Senator name any other pay-increase bill that is advocated by the administration, except the one we have been discussing?

Mr. LONG. There is none that I know of. I believe that if the Senator will check the appointments with the President, he will find that the junior Senator from Louisiana has not been to the White House for a long time.

Mr. LANGER. So, Mr. President, in spite of the promise in the platform of the Democratic Party which was adopted last summer in Philadelphia, no bill of any kind providing pay increases for Federal employees has been introduced, except the one that has been described as being sent to the Senator by the President, or the Civil Service Commission. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. LONG. So far as I know.

Mr. LANGER. The Senator is chairman of the subcommittee. If anyone in the whole world knew, he would know. The Senator from Louisiana would be the only person who would know it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I must take issue with that statement. Personally I have no idea what the President thinks about a general pay increase, other than what I read in the newspapers on the subject.

Mr. LANGER. In other words, neither from the Civil Service Commission nor from the White House has any bill dealing with pay increases been sent to the committee headed by the junior Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LONG. Not so far as the junior Senator from Louisiana knows.

Mr. LANGER. So, Mr. President, I come back to the proposition that the Federal pay bill, sent down by the White House, provides raises of $50 a year, on the average. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana says the raise in some cases may amount to $1.72 a year. I contrast that with the comparatively fine record made by the Republican Party in the Eightieth Congress when we, together with the members of the Democratic Party on the committee, voted to increase the pay of postal employees $450 a year and to increase the pay of general Federal workers $330 a year.

I return now, Mr. President, to what I was saying relative to the peace treaty. On page 3 of the Democratic platform we find the following language:

> We pledge our best endeavors to conclude treaties of peace with our former enemies. Already treaties have been made with Italy, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Rumania. We shall strive to conclude treaties with the remaining enemy States.

I call this language particularly to the attention of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN]:

> We shall strive to conclude treaties with the remaining enemy States, based on justice and with guaranties against the revival of aggression, and for the preservation of peace.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'CONOR in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Does not the Senator from North Dakota agree that our Government, the President, and the administration, and both political parties, have been doing everything possible to bring about peace?

Mr. LANGER. I do not agree with that statement. To the contrary I most emphatically dispute it. I cite as an illustration, for the benefit of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, the message sent to Congress by the President on the 9th of May, which deals with the matter of the international convention for the North Atlantic fisheries, and which was kept secret until the 9th day of May.

I also call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas to the meeting held at Potsdam. What did the present President of the United States agree to at that time? It was said at that time, "We are going to take away the fishing rights from the people of Germany." Those people were starving. The committee of Catholic and Protestant clergymen that went to Germany from this country said the people then were trying to live on as low a food standard as 800 calories a day. When some of us tried to have that food standard raised to 2,500 calories a day we were met by the opposition of the administration.

Not only that, but under the terms of the Potsdam agreement the Allied authorities continued to dismantle German industrial plants, to carry out the Morganthau plan of starvation, of making Germany an agricultural country, when, as a matter of fact, it was the most highly industrialized country in all of Europe.

I read again from the Democratic platform:

> We shall strive to conclude treaties with the remaining enemy states, based on justice and with guaranties against the revival of aggression, and for the preservation of peace.

What was done the other day with respect to German fisheries? With the taxpayers of the United States spending more than $1,000,000,000 each year in Germany to feed the people of Germany, what was done with respect to German fisheries? The distinguished Senator from Arkansas will remember that General Clay a while ago announced that there was no more important question connected with the solving of the entire world situation than the question: What are we going to do with Germany?

Senators will also remember that persons in the office of the Secretary of State said that whether Germany went communistic or did not go communistic depended on whether Russia would win the cold war or whether the United States would win the cold war.

Yet what has been going on in Germany? It now appears that our pro-Communist policy of destructive vengeance which Mr. Morgenthau succeeded in putting over on the American people has been leading to such economic, social, and political chaos, that our policy makers have finally been shocked into an awareness of what has been happening.

When Mr. Stewart Alsop and the Washington Post become alarmed about conditions in Germany we have every reason to believe that our policy makers now realize that a complete change of policy and attitude toward the German people is an absolute necessity if we do not drive them into the hands of communism.

On February 27, this same columnist, writing in the Washington Post, devoted his whole article to the question—

What are the real objectives of American policy in Germany?

He went on to say—

This is as important a question as any that confronts the United States.

Mr. President, "it is highly significant that at long last this Government is now making a serious effort to find an agreed and intelligent answer," as the article states.

It is also interesting to read what the article further reveals, that:

An attempt is now being made to draft a whole series of agreed policy papers, dealing with all aspects of American policy in Germany. The preliminary drafting is being done by a four-man committee, which is now quietly meeting two or three times a week in the State Department.

Chairman of this committee is George Kennan, brilliant chief State Department planner. Richard M. Bissell, able Deputy ECA Administrator, speaks for the ECA, which has a vital interest in the German problem; Robert Blum, special assistant to Secretary of Defense Forrestal, represents Forrestal and the Defense Department. The Army and Gen. Lucius Clay, American commander in Germany, are represented by Assistant Secretary of the Army Tracy Voorhees, who may succeed William Draper as Under Secretary of the Army and chief Washington spokesman for Clay.

These four men will not, of course, make German policy independently. The policy papers they draft will be referred back to the organizations and individuals they represent, including General Clay. Moreover, each preliminary paper will be sifted through another higher committee. This committee consists of Secretary of State Acheson, as chairman; ECA Chief Paul Hoffman, and Secretary of the Army Royall. If Acheson's committee approves a paper, it will be referred in turn to the National Security Council and the President for final decision.

There, Mr. President, in this article by Mr. Alsop will be found exactly how the entire matter of treating Germany works.

Then, what Mr. Alsop went on to say was:

What this means is simply that the period of improvising policy in Germany is coming to an end.

Of course, Mr. President, what Mr. Alsop refuses to admit is that the improvising policy toward Germany to which he refers was not an improvisation. It was a policy of planned chaos, designed to destroy the German-speaking peoples and a policy which is now playing directly into the hands of the Communists.

Mr. Alsop continues in his column by protesting that:

We do not want a western Germany kept in a permanent colonial status, at or near the starvation level. We do not want a Germany in constant danger of being drawn into the Kremlin orbit.

Mr. President, these protests amount to nothing but a sorry admission of where the Morgenthau plan has led us. It has produced the very inhuman conditions in Germany which Mr. Alsop now admits are becoming increasingly suicidal, not only to Germany, not only to Europe, but to the United States of America as well.

I do not want to take the time now to recount in detail the insanities underlying our policies toward Germany to date. I want merely to refresh our memories on what has happened, and to point out the inevitable human degradation and chaos that have resulted. What else was to be expected when this Government drafted the basic policy which we have pursued toward the defeated peoples of Central Europe almost 4 years after the end of the war? We pursued it in spite of the fact that the Democratic Party adopted a certain platform in Philadelphia and since that time has consistently ignored it. Under that policy Germany was carved into 5 basic zones of occupation. That policy left in the hands of Russia the maximum of raw materials and the minimum of population, together with the greatest part of the surplus food-producing areas of Germany. The policy resulted in the sinking of the German fishing fleet in the North Sea. That policy tore up by the roots 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 helpless expellees and drove them into the already overcrowded western zones of Germany. The Democratic policy put into practice the despicable de-Nazification program, which has destroyed the economic opportunity and the social and personal security of millions of Germans. The Democratic policy called for the dismantling and destruction of the industrial potential upon which those overcrowded millions were absolutely dependent for a minimum livelihood. The policy called for deliberate deforestation, which has hastened the erosion of the soil resources of western Germany. The Democratic policy has denied the manufacture of fertilizer to enrich the remaining soil, and has resulted in the perpetuation of human slavery in the form of exploitation of prisoners of war, leaving western Germany with pitifully inadequate manpower to operate such farming facilities as are left. The stupid, insane, and suicidal Democratic policy has been grinding out the perfect soil for communism.

Think of it, Mr. President. A Democratic President of the United States signed a document which sold into human slavery millions of German people and permitted the conquerors to take them to their country for slave labor. I refer to those things because the same article states, concerning the new committees and the policy papers containing the draft of a new German policy, that—

The policy papers which result will be and should be secret.

Mr. President, are not the American people, 4 years after the war, entitled to know what secret agreements were entered into? Four years after the war is not the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations entitled to know what agreements were made? Four years after the war are not the American people, who pay the taxes, entitled to know what secret agreements were made 4 or 5 or 6 or 7 years ago? All over the United States this morning, taxpayers pick up the newspaper and read, "Truman stands for $4,000,000,000 increase in taxes."

I invite attention to the fact that southern Senators are all Democrats. On the other side of the aisle they are standing together, terror stricken at the fact that the President has asked for $4,000,000,000 more in taxes, knowing very well that the people of the country are going to revolt against any measure increasing taxes by $4,000,000,000 at the request of the President of the United States.

I am entirely satisfied that as they stand there the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is saying to other Democrats, "Boys, we must go easy. We cannot put on $4,000,000,000 of new taxes. We must keep taxes just as low as we possibly can." The senior Senator from Georgia is perhaps the best fiscal authority in the United States. The senior Senator from Georgia and the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are two men who have their ears to the ground, and who know all about the widespread terrific revolt today against an increase of $4,000,000,000 in taxes. As everyone already knows, the poor taxpayer can hardly pay the taxes assessed at the present time, without such an enormous increase.

I continue in connection with the so-called international convention for the North Atlantic fisheries. Since Mr. Alsop wrote that article and the Washington Post printed it, four major events have taken place.

The first is the West German Occupation Statute, released on Monday, April 11, 1949, in which we are advised that the three occupying powers of the western zone are arranging to restore civilian rule to western Germany.

The second is the publication of the Humphrey report on dismantling, and the announcement of an agreement of the occupying powers in the three western zones of Germany revising the German reparations program.

Every Senator knows about the insane policy adopted by the Democratic Party in the matter of dismantling. We went over there and tore down the finest fertilizer factories anywhere in the world, and then we proceeded to ship fertilizer from the United States to Germany. Of course, they have a planting season over there, just as there is a planting season in every other place. They have days, weeks, months, and years. There are only 7 days in a week over there, and there are only 30 days in a month. But those who sent the fertilizer over forgot all about that. They did not get the fertilizer over there until many months had elapsed and the planting season was over. There was no fertilizer to put on the ground in Germany, and the result was that 2 years ago and 3 years ago, instead of having a very fine crop, because of the lack of fertilizer, which did not get there from the United States in time, and because of the fact that the fertilizer factories had been torn down under the infamous agreement made at Potsdam, the American taxpayer was stuck for hundreds of millions of dollars in order to see that people were fed.

The third historic event is the signing of the Atlantic Pact.

The fourth is the lifting of the Berlin blockade. Yet, Mr. President, we still do not know what America's basic policy toward Germany really is. In effect, these agreements have taken place against a background of such distortions of fact and such terribly complicated economic problems, which are so highly technical in nature that only experts can grasp their implications, that the new agreements themselves do not help the American people to understand what really is taking place in Germany.

In effect our basic policy toward Germany still lies buried in secrecy, even behind the new developments of which I speak. By way of illustration, I ask any Senator, What does the occupation statute mean? Can any Senator on either side of the aisle explain it? It means that the civilian government in Germany is to be held responsible for the development of policies which it has no power to control. The reservations of the occupation statute leave in the hands of the occupying powers the very authority and control without which no civilian government could effectively function.

I refer specifically to the contradiction which exists between the professed desire of the three occupying powers to increase German exports and the fact that the same occupation authorities so control the economic life of western Germany as to compel the German people to depend upon the export of coal and raw materials, a policy which can only impoverish a highly industrialized people.

This dilemma, which certainly is not being resolved by the new occupation statute, is clearly revealed in the fact that England herself is having a desperate struggle to increase her exports, which are largely based upon the increased valuation of any manufactured article which is the end product of basic raw materials.

A recent article by the director of the Institute for World Economic Affairs shows most clearly the futility of America's continued underwriting of such an economic process in western Europe.

Listen to this, Mr. President; I read now from an article prepared by the Institute of World Economic Affairs:

> England exports, and she exports with success.

That is the same England that refused to help Germany after World War I; during the time of the Weimar Republic, England refused to help the Hindenburg government.

I read further:

> Her 1948 exports will have reached $6,180,000,000, of which $5,384,000,000 were contributed by finished goods, and only $257,000,000 by coal and raw materials. This sum of $6,180,000,000 constitutes the annual importing power of the British Isles, which is increased by $1,500,000,000 of Marshall aid. In contrast, western Germany will have exported goods to the value of not quite $600,000,000, of which coal and raw materials make up by far the greater part, while the amount of finished goods exported is quite insufficient—almost microscopic.

I commented upon this matter 3 weeks ago, and at that time I said that the articles which might be manufactured from raw materials by Germany might have a value of more than one thousand times the raw materials which are being exported by Germany under the present form of government there.

I read further from the article:

> Food imports at the expense of the American taxpayer have so far prevented millions of people from starving in this artificially overpopulated area cut off from its natural access to world markets by throttling of foreign trade, dismantling, and enforced raw-material exports. In 1948 western Germany will have received additional imports from the United States in the value of $1,200,000,000. Two-thirds of the grain, three-quarters of fats consumed by western German town inhabitants are unpaid supplies covered by the United States Army budget or by the Marshall plan. In spite of this historically unprecedented help of a victorious to a vanquished country, nutrition is shockingly insufficient.

Mr. President, the economic consequences of such a program mean that the American people will be permanently compelled to finance the permanent loss of one of America's traditional and largest markets.

What about the new agreement on German reparations, which involves a revision of the former dismantlement program? What light does this new agreement throw on our basic, over-all German policy?

Again we find that this agreement has to be interpreted against the background of such a complicated program that only experts can understand its implications. In the first place, it is a fact that even this new program for reparations has been undertaken without any reference whatever to the role Germany ought to play in the over-all European recovery program. Mr. Hoffman himself so testified before the Foreign Relations Committee.

In the second place, this agreement has been reached in spite of the fact that, so far as I know, there is not in existence today a list of the end uses to which dismantled plants have been put on either side of the iron curtain since the end of the war.

In the third place, it develops that this revised list on dismantling does not contain exemptions, recommended by the Humphrey committee itself. Yet those specific recommendations dealt with the necessity for maintaining within the orbit of German production certain basic key industries, upon which even this agreed level of industry is in reality absolutely dependent.

What are these key industries which are now scheduled for dismantling? The first one is the Bochümer Verein Gussatahlfabrik Bochum. It is interesting to note, Mr. President, that this plant, located in the British zone, is a key industry upon which Germany's railway system is completely dependent. This is one of the greatest locomotive works in Europe.

A second plant, Mr. President, is Deutsche Edelstahlwerke (Tiegelstahl) Bochump. Mr. President, this plant lies at the heart of the hardened-steel industry upon which the machine-tool industry of Germany is so dependent.

A third plant, Mr. President, is the Klockner Werke A. G. in Dusseldorf. Under this new reparations agreement, this plant is to be dismantled. Yet it is a key plant in the manufacture of mining equipment upon which even the export of coal and raw materials from Germany is absolutely dependent.

A fourth illustration, Mr. President, of what this German reparations program is really covering up is the I. G. Farben buna plant at Ludwigshafen. Yet, Mr. President, this is a key plant that manufactures synthetic rubber. The Germans can manufacture synthetic rubber at a cost of around $400 a ton. With the destruction of this plant, the American people will be compelled to pay for the import of natural rubber at the rate of anywhere from $1,200 to $1,600 a ton. Do I need to remind my colleagues that that is nothing but economic insanity?

A fifth illustration, Mr. President, of what lies behind this reparations agreement is that while we are assured that Germany will be able to start rebuilding its merchant marine, we learn at the same time that the only 5-meter heavy plate mill in Europe, located in Hoerde, in the British zone, is to be dismantled. This is the mill which I understand was designed particularly to manufacture steel plates for the shipbuilding industry, not only of Germany, but of Norway, Denmark, Sweden, Holland, Belgium, and other European countries who are receiving ECA aid.

Mr. President, this brings us to the Atlantic Pact and its provision for German participation in the defense of western Europe. Not only do we find that no place has been assigned to Germany in the program for the over-all defense of western Europe, but we learn to our dismay that, so far as Germany is concerned and so far as any future American policy toward Germany is concerned, instead of clarifying and insisting upon the underwriting of our interests, we have surrendered those interests out of our hands for good. A recent article by Walter Lippmann reveals that—

> The pact, because it binds the Atlantic nations together, will mean that in the diplomatic show-down and the negotiations, which must soon begin, the western governments must now act together and can no longer act separately. It will, henceforth, be a violation of the spirit, and indeed the letter of the pact, for American military government in Germany, or for the British Foreign Office, or for the French, to insist upon, or to carry out separately, any serious policy in Germany which has not been worked out together by the members of the pact. The gentlemen who have talking glibly about whether we should place our bets for Europe on Germany or on France must now shut up and sit down. The choice, if it ever existed, has been made by signing this pact, and from now on our policy in Germany will not be an American policy but a common policy worked out by the Atlantic community.

Mr. President, how plain I wish I could make that to the American people. If the North Atlantic Pact is ratified by the Senate, the United States will not be able to make an agreement with Germany. Although there are in the United States 33,000,000 people who have, to some degree or other, German blood in their veins, no matter whether the Senate might feel that a certain agreement should be made with Germany, under the North Atlantic Pact such an agreement could not be made, for under the North Atlantic Pact such agreements must be made by all the nations which sign the pact. So we would have to satisfy England; we would have to satisfy France; and we would have to satisfy some of the other countries of Europe, where hate and jealousy exist.

Mr. President, I believe the time has come to do away with the secrecy surrounding our policy toward Germany. I showed how the treaty relating to North Atlantic fisheries had been kept secret, month after month. The United States Senate could not be trusted.

I am convinced that we must restore jurisdiction over these basic policies to the United States Senate. I believe a surrender of our constitutional rights and the duty of the United States Senate to safeguard the vital interests of the American people can only end in tragedy. We cannot continue to underwrite policies of economic insanity without playing directly into the hands of the various totalitarian forces we are seeking to destroy. It may be that the new policy makers in our State Department are waiting for the United States Senate to reassert itself in its traditional field of foreign affairs. If this be true, I have here a simple proposition by which to strengthen the hand of these new policy makers in their efforts to draft a basic reorientation of our American policy toward Germany. I am referring, Mr. President, to the simple matter of restoring Germany's rights to construct, to own, and to operate a domestic fishing fleet. For nearly 4 years the German people have been denied the right to supplement their diet through access to this source of protein food and fats.

In his recent testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Mr. E. E. Collisson, who was personally appointed by the President to investigate the whole problem of the German economy last summer, testified. Here is what the man appointed by President Truman himself said. The Germans were without a fishing fleet. It had been taken away from them by the Potsdam agreement for 4 years. Testifying before the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, Mr. Collisson said:

> The Germans are woefully deficient in fats and oils and proteins. Today, almost 4 years after the end of the war, Germany is existing on a daily ration that is subnormal both in calories and proteins. Germany, through its fishing fleet, supplied a lot of fish which was an excellent protein but through the destruction of their fishing fleet they are not now able to supply that.

Aside from the inhumanity of this policy of stark vengeance, Mr. President, is the economic insanity it involves, which compelled the American people during the second quarter of the operation of the ECA to pay not only for the destruction of that fishing fleet, but because of that destruction, to pay $2,960,000 for the import of whale oil into Germany, and during the third quarter of the ECA to pay $1,440,000 for imports of whale oil from South Africa, $2,400,000 for imports of whale oil from Belgium, and $1,694,000 for imports into Germany of herring oil from Iceland.

Just think of it, Mr. President. By the Potsdam agreement we put this little fishing fleet out of business, and then we paid out last year $2,960,000 to import whale oil into Germany; we paid $1,440,000 to South Africa; $2,400,000 to Belgium; and $1,694,000 for herring oil from Iceland. Every dollar of that money could have been saved to the American taxpayer had the Germans been allowed to retain the fishing fleet which was sunk as a result of the Potsdam agreement. But so long as the Senate will vote to give the President $4,000,000,000 additional taxes, just so long will our money be wasted in Europe.

Therefore, Mr. President, I want to submit a resolution, both as an effort to support and as a means of proving the basic good intentions of those who have now taken over the formulation of a new American policy toward the German-speaking peoples. The resolution is offered on behalf of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], and myself. The resolution is as follows:

> Resolved, That (a) it is the sense of the Senate that the right to construct, own, and operate a domestic fishing fleet, within the limits defined by international fishing conventions, should be restored to the German people; and (b) the President is requested to take such action as may be necessary and appropriate to effectuate the immediate restoration of such right to persons within American zones of occupation.

I send the resolution to the desk, Mr. President, and ask for its reference to the appropriate committee, which, I take it, will be the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The resolution (S. Res. 118) submitted by Mr. LANGER (for himself, Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. WHERRY, and Mr. BUTLER), was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LANGER. Referring again to the Democratic platform, and referring once more to the fact that they only propose to raise the pay of Federal employees $50, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my remarks the testimony of Mr. William C. Doherty, president of the National Association of Letter Carriers. The testimony was given by him on May 11 before the Subcommittee on Pay Increases of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. It includes questions asked by the various members of the committee. I ask that it be printed in full at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the testimony was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF WILLIAM C. DOHERTY, PRESIDENT, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS, BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON PAY INCREASES OF THE COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICE AND CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. DOHERTY. My name is William C. Doherty. I am president of the National Association of Letter Carriers, which represents more than 95,000 letter carriers in the city, rural, and village delivery service of the Post Office Department.

I want to compliment the chairman and members of this subcommittee for holding these hearings. I also want to assure you that I am very happy for the opportunity to make a statement which expresses the sentiments of the employees I have the honor to represent.

One of the most asked questions among letter carriers is, When is the Eighty-first Congress going to enact legislation to bring postal wages and other conditions affecting postal employees in line with present-day realities? It is my sincere wish that, as a result of the deliberations and recommendations of this subcommittee, the answer will be furnished.

Speaking for the letter carriers, I tell you in all frankness and candor and in all sincerity that I do not consider our request unreasonable. I do not think it is excessive or demanding in any way. And I am equally certain that letter carriers and other postal people are in need of immediate relief.

Letter carriers do an honest day's work every day, rain or shine. Today mail volume is at an all-time peak, with indications of further increases. Letter carriers are delivering heavier loads than ever before. I repeat, letter carriers do an honest day's work, and they expect, they are entitled to, and they hope to get an honest day's pay, no more no less.

Senator BALDWIN. May I interrupt you there, Mr. Doherty?

Mr. DOHERTY. Certainly, Senator BALDWIN.

Senator BALDWIN. There is one question I would like to ask. Have you any information on the question of how often the letter carrier routes are changed?

For example, here you indicate that there is a further increase in the load that a letter carrier has. Now, if a carrier, as I have observed from my own experience in my own home town, has a particular route, is there any effort made by the Post Office Department in the light of the amount of mail that he has to distribute, to readjust those routes? How widely is that done?

Mr. DOHERTY. Senator BALDWIN, there is an annual route inspection of all routes, and there is a regular count and weigh of mail. The two things coincide.

Based on that annual inspection and the count and weigh, the Department attempts to adjust the routes. However, the mail volume has increased so tremendously that it is now difficult for the Post Office Department to secure sufficient appropriations and sufficient carriers to cope with the situation. In other words, the mail volume is always ahead of the readjustments. I think I had better put it that way.

Senator BALDWIN. Thank you. That answers the question.

I had been used to seeing the man that comes to my house year after year after year.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

I wondered if he was continuously for his lifetime on that route regardless of the load.

Mr. DOHERTY. Occasionally he gets relief, but not often enough, Senator.

We can only secure relief as the result of congressional action. We have no other bargaining rights; we are not suggesting there should be any other type. My purpose in being here this morning is because I want to impress upon you gentlemen the urgent need to look into our situation and evaluate the merit of our requests.

Shortly after the present Congress convened in January the National Association of Letter Carriers endorsed S. 558, a bill introduced on January 18 by Senators JOHNSTON of South Carolina, O'CONOR of Maryland, LANGER of North Dakota, and BALDWIN of Connecticut. This bill provides for a $650 annual increase in the basic salary of letter carriers. It was a justifiable bill in January; it is equally justifiable today.

Public Law 900, enacted by the Eightieth Congress, granted postal employees a $450 annual wage increase. This was approximately 14.5 percent of the then existing 33 percent spread between postal wages and costs of living. That 19-percent deficit in our purchasing power has been reduced approximately 2.5 percent, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics as of May 9—2 days ago. We are, therefore, approximately 16 percent behind the economic parade.

Senator LONG. That is relating the economic parade back to what point?

Mr. DOHERTY. Back to 1939, and the adjustments that have been made in postal salaries, Senator LONG, since that time. We are still 16 percent behind the parade.

Senator LONG. In other words, since 1939 you might say that the cost of living has advanced in effect 16 percent more than your pay has been increased. Is that right?

Mr. DOHERTY. That is substantially correct, yes, Senator. That is the point I am making here this morning.

So, while Public Law 900 was at best a halfway measure, nevertheless, it did represent a partial consideration of postal employee needs. Thus far in the Eighty-first Congress we have had very little by way of action on postal personnel problems in either House.

In his annual budget message to the Eighty-first Congress, President Truman asked for more realistic salaries for Government career employees. At another point in the same message we read: "The Government and its employees should be assured that the salaries paid for positions at all levels are fair compensation for the work performed."

I say without equivocation that letter carriers are not now getting fair compensation for work performed; moreover, the Congress, the administration, and the responsible officials of the Post Office Department have a joint moral obligation to correct the situation. It is difficult indeed for letter carriers to understand the apparent reluctance to modernize their wage structure and other considerations affecting hours of duty, sick and annual leave, and other equally important items on a realistic and ever current basis. I want the record to show that the National Association of Letter Carriers at this point renews its unqualified endorsement of S. 558.

There is also a bill before the Senate committee which is designed to provide certain fringe benefits to letter carriers and it is a measure that is wholeheartedly endorsed by the organization I represent. Reference is made to S. 1772, introduced on May 5 by Senators MCKELLAR, of Tennessee; FREAR, of Delaware; HUMPHREY, of Minnesota; KEFAUVER, of Tennessee; LANGER, of North Dakota; BALDWIN, of Connecticut; ECTON, of Montana; and HENDRICKSON, of New Jersey.

S. 1772 amends Public Law 134, enacted July 6, 1945, which is more popularly known as the Postal Reclassification Act. And I might add at this point that Public Law 134 very definitely needs correction in several sections. Many inequities in the law have been exposed during the almost 4 years it has been in operation; S. 1772 is the key to the solution of several of these inequities.

Section 1 of S. 1772 provides for 26 days' annual and 15 days' sick leave, cumulative, for all postal employees. I believe that this particular section of the bill warrants the sympathy of every Member of Congress who is interested in removing an outright discrimination. Letter carriers have never been able to understand why there is no equalization of sick and annual leave, particularly so since the very nature of their work takes them out in all types of weather and is otherwise arduous and hazardous. I think it will be interesting to this committee to have me place into the record statistics which have been furnished by the Compensation Commission. I am advised that, in computing the frequency of injuries, the Commission uses as a basis the rate of disabling injuries per million man-hours. The frequency rate for letter carriers is 17.8. To illustrate the significance of that figure, I want to point out that the frequency in the Post Office for all employees is 8.8; in the Navy Department, 6.5; in the Interior Department, 13.8; in the Federal Works Administration, 15.6. I think these figures show conclusively that letter carriers not only are entitled to equalization in the matter of sick and annual leave, but the nature of their duties requires them to have more than the present 15 days' annual and 10 days' sick leave.

If I might digress for a moment, Mr. Chairman, I would like to state at this point that I have read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the debate which occurred on the floor of the Senate yesterday with reference to a proposed amendment to the Treasury-Post Office Appropriation Act. The amendment has been offered by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, Senator FERGUSON, and has as its purpose cutting the appropriation 5 percent.

It will probably interest the distinguished chairman and members of this subcommittee to know that Senator FERGUSON has pending before this committee a bill known as S. 95. S. 95 is sort of a perennial bill that Senator FERGUSON introduces and has as its purpose granting 26 days' annual and 15 days' sick leave to civil service postal employees.

Senator LONG. I would like to ask you a question too, since you digress at that point. Do you have an opinion as to whether or not the Post Office appropriations can be reduced 5 percent and be absorbed out of increased efficiency in the Post Office Department? Do you have any idea how that can be done?

Mr. DOHERTY. I say in all sincerity and as conscientiously as I know how, Mr. Chairman, that the Post Office Department appropriation cannot be reduced and insofar as efficiency is concerned, it is the most efficient branch of the Federal Government.

Senator LONG. I was informed when Postmaster General Donaldson testified before this committee, I believe it was yesterday or the day before, that 95 percent of the Post Office expenditures are for either personnel or for mail pay, the mail pay being set by Federal law, and the personnel pay being set by Federal law also.

If we are going to absorb a 5-percent decrease, do you see any way that that can be absorbed other than by the reduction of personnel?

Mr. DOHERTY. The only way it can be absorbed, Mr. Chairman, is to start cutting out delivery service to the public, and I cannot conceive that the people of this great country want a curtailed mail service in the United States of America today, especially with the mail volume ever expanding.

It just cannot be done without increasing the work load on the individual clerk and carrier and the other postal employees.

Senator LONG. Well, now, if this Senate should pass S. 95, would not that make it necessary that you have additional employees or someone to take the place of a man while he had his 26 days' leave during the year?

Mr. DOHERTY. In some instances it probably would. The point I make is that there are approximately 2,000,000 Federal employees, roughly 1,000,000 or more receive 26 days' annual and 15 days' sick leave, and approximately 500,000 postal workers are perpetually discriminated against.

I am not asking that the other employees be reduced to our level, not by any stretch of the imagination, but I am asking that postal field employees be brought up to their level. It is a very fair request.

Senator LONG. I have not had a chance to review your statement, but I feel that we should give some consideration as to how we are going to pay these increases if we can get them. How do you think that these increases could be granted out of current appropriations to the Post Office Department as it stands today?

Mr. DOHERTY. Out of the current appropriation, Senator? No, sir, I do not.

Senator LONG. In other words, it would take either an increase in mail rates or it would take an increase in some of the appropriations to the Post Office in order to enable these to be paid. Is that right?

Mr. DOHERTY. It would probably necessitate a deficiency appropriation if the bill should pass.

Senator LONG. Has your organization taken a stand on the Post Office rates?

Mr. DOHERTY. No, but we have definite views on the subject, Mr. Chairman. We do not think that postage rates should at any time be used as a yardstick for measuring the salaries paid to the employees in the postal service.

As an illustration, the postal deficit for fiscal year 1947 was $263,367,632. Now, the revenues for that year, Senator LONG, were $1,299,141,000. The expenditures that year were $1,562,508,673. I make this point, that the deficit in the year 1947, $263,367,000——

Senator LONG. Which year is that year?

Mr. DOHERTY. For the fiscal year 1947. That deficit actually represents what it costs the Government to operate the postal service.

Senator LONG. That was before the last pay increase, was it not?

Mr. DOHERTY. That is right, and I will get to that too. I will be very happy to, Senator LONG.

Senator LONG. The point I have in mind is this: I have had the impression since coming to this committee that the post office, in line with what every other industry has done, had been compelled to increase its salaries in an effort to catch up with the increased cost of living.

Mr. DOHERTY. That is true.

Senator LONG. And also in the effort to catch up with prevailing wage rates.

Now meanwhile we find that every other business that has had to increase its cost and increase its salaries to its personnel has found that it had to increase its price for the service that it was rendering.

Now it occurs to me that the post office is faced with about the same necessity, and offhand it appears to me that that is one way out of which the money could be found to pay the post-office employees. The letter carriers are justified in a raise in pay.

Mr. DOHERTY. Senator, the post-office worker has never caught up with the increase in the cost of living. We are always the tail on the kite or the caboose on the train. We have to come back each session of Congress and ask for more.

In the latter part of my statement I elaborate upon that at quite some length, but at this particular moment I am making the point that the $263,000,000 deficit in fiscal 1947 is the actual cost to the Government for operating the Postal Service in its vast ramifications.

Now it is estimated by the very distinguished Postmaster General, a man in whom I have great faith and admiration and respect, that the postal deficit for this year will be about $550,000,000.

Now that being the case, then I would say by the same comparison that the actual cost of operating the Post Office Department to the Government in the current fiscal year is $550,000,000, and I would ask any citizen on the street whether they think that expenditure is worth while, $550,000,000 being the cost to the Government to operate the Post Office Department. That is the deficit, in other words, the excess of expenditures over revenues.

Senator LONG. It occurs to me, a man mailing a 3-cent letter is paying his way if the Post Office Department cost analysis is correct, but there is an enormous number of businesses that are not paying their way, and I am not sure that the man on the street wants to subsidize somebody else. My impression is, everybody is for something for nothing, provided he is the one that is getting it. He is against it if somebody else is getting it.

Mr. DOHERTY. I might remind the Senator that a 3-cent postage stamp costs just as much in Louisiana as it does in any other State in the Union. That is the question that the Congress itself of course will have to answer, but I do not think that any man on the street or anyone in public life would want to turn the post-office service over to private enterprise, and yet it seems that there is a trend in that direction when we start talking about profits.

We are going to abandon service for profit, as I see the picture. That is the trend right now, and I do not agree with that. I am in total disagreement with that philosophy.

Senator LONG. I do not believe we will ever in our lifetime see the post office make a profit, I agree with you on that.

Mr. DOHERTY. May I make one more point, Senator, while we are disgressing? The national defense appropriation for this year is approximately $16,000,000,000. I understand that the European relief program for 1949 is about $7,700,000,000. For 1950 it is estimated to be $11,601,000,000, and no one ever questions appropriations for the Department of Agriculture or for the Army or the Navy or the military or for the Interior Department or the Labor Department.

I do not hear them question those appropriations, so that by comparison then, Mr. Chairman, it would appear to me that the $263,000,000 deficit is a pauper's mite. I think the people of America are very happy to have the postal service operate so efficiently and so effectively.

Now may I take up section 2 of S. 1772?

Section 2 of S. 1772 would extend the meritorious grades to all employees who have sufficient service at the present time to be entitled to the grade increases. Four longevity grades are incorporated in the measure, with $100 being awarded at the completion of 10 years' service; a second $100 at 13 years; a similar amount for 17 years, with the maximum of $400 for an employee with 22 years' service. These longevity awards are particularly desirable in employment such as you find in the Federal service where there are dead-end streets after the first several years. Real honest-to-goodness longevity would be an incentive for young men to make the postal service a career.

Section 3 of the bill provides for the complete elimination of the four lower grades and gives all employees entering the service since July 1, 1945, an increase of four grades.

The present law provides an entrance salary of $2,550 per annum; the next grade is, of course, $2,650; the third, $2,750; and the fourth, $2,850—it is these four lower grades that would be completely eliminated. The entrance salary would then become $2,950 per annum.

Much has been said about the distortions in flat pay increases and that such wage adjustments greatly benefit those in the lower pay brackets. I want to point out that prior to July 6, 1945, grade 1 in the postal service was $1,700 per annum. As previously stated, grade 1 today is $2,550 per annum, an increase of $850 or 50 percent.

Mr. Clague, of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, testified on Monday of this week that the consumers price index for March 1949 had risen to 71.9 over August 1939 levels. In order to break even on living costs, a grade 1 letter carrier should be given an increase of approximately 21.9 percent over the 50 percent previously allocated. It is sad enough that the present starting salary is low, but the injustice is compounded when you stop to consider that practically all of the new men that have been recruited into the postal service during the past 4 or 5 years are veterans of the military. Most of the men in the four lower grades are young men discharged honorably from the military; they are anxious to establish homes, raise families, contribute their share to the development of their communities, live on equal terms with their neighbors—but it is impossible for them to do anything but eke out an existence on $2,550 per year.

The ex-GI in the ranks of letter carriers very often must ask himself: "What price glory?"

Section 4 of S. 1772 grants a flat $150 annual increase to all regular employees, and 5 cents per hour to employees on an hourly basis. In this connection, I presume the eight Senators sponsoring S. 1772 were guided by the opinion recently expressed by Postmaster General Donaldson relative to postal wages. During the hearings in the House on H. R. 3083—the Treasury-Post Office appropriations bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950—Mr. Donaldson states: "I would like to say that I feel very strongly that every salary increase voted by this Congress was fully justified. As a matter of fact, I believe that if this last salary increase of July 1, 1948, had been for $600 instead of $450, you would not have the salary question in front of you now."

Senator LONG. Do you agree with that statement?

Mr. DOHERTY. Yes, I do.

Senator LONG. That if there would have been a $600 increase?

Mr. DOHERTY. It was for $450; it should have been $800.

Senator LONG. You said if it had been $600 instead of $450.

Mr. DOHERTY. I am using that quotation, Senator, in the support of the reclassification bill, S. 1772. I have referred previously to an outright pay raise in S. 558. I am also asking that this committee favorably consider S. 558. This measure that I am now discussing is S. 1772, which in a way compares with the reclassification measure that the administration has sent up here and your committee is considering.

The administration, however, has not sent a reclassification measure for field service postal employees, and we are very grateful to the eight Senators who introduced S. 1772, which is a very fair bill and which we would like to see enacted into law, even with that low salary stipend in there.

However, the Senators and members of the committee may consider increasing that amount to $650, and it would be all right with the employees, I assure you.

The fifth section provides payment of compensatory time at the rate of time and one-half. For 14 years—since the enactment of the 40-hour workweek—letter carriers have been reporting for duty 6 days each week, when the expressed intent of the 40-hour law was to establish a 5-day week. A 5-day workweek is the accepted standard in American industry. If there has to be delivery on Saturday, why penalize the employee by requiring him to dork on Saturday in excess of the legal 40 hours and pay him what amounts to simple straight time?

Actually, a very contradictory situation exists under present law. Payment is made at the rate of time and one-half for overtime, but the overtime that is worked on Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays is paid in compensatory time at the straight time.

Section 6 of S. 1772 provides for a $100 uniform allowance. This amount would be granted all employees in the postal service who are required to wear a uniform in the performance of their duties. It is assumed that the Postmaster General would designate those employees required to wear a distinctive uniform. There is ample precedent for this type of legislation.

Without any ready reference at hand, I think it is safe to say that letter carriers and other postal employees are one of the few, if not the only, Government employees groups required to wear a uniform to be furnished by the employee himself out of his own funds.

The seventh and final section of S. 1772 would eliminate the present efficiency-rating system. The present method of evaluating an employee's competence and ability has nothing to recommend it to any officer or agency engaged exclusively in personnel matters. The elimination of this system which serves no good purpose, either to the Government or the employee, would bring about a tremendous saving by reason of the elimination of the administrative overhead and printing of useless forms necessary to comply with the law.

The shadow of the first session of the Eighty-first Congress is beginning to lengthen. Adjournment is rapidly approaching. Letter carriers are still hopeful that something will be done to extricate them from the economic strait-jacket in which they find themselves.

I urge immediate consideration and favorable action on S. 558 and S. 1772.

Senator LONG. I would like to direct your attention to section 7 of the bill 1772 and I wonder what the purpose is of "existing efficiency rating systems for appraisal of service of officers and employees in the postal field service are hereby abolished. No efficiency rating system shall hereafter be established."

I wonder what the purpose of that is?

Mr. DOHERTY. As I understand its intent, Mr. Chairman, the postal field service is not included in the general efficiency rating system of the Federal Government which was established under the act of 1923. The efficiency rating system in the Post Office Department is a regulation established by the Postmaster General. What this section attempts to do is to abolish that efficiency rating system and to make certain that no efficiency-rating system shall hereafter be established.

However, if you will note in subsection (b), it states very definitely that "Subsection (a) shall not be held to prevent discharge of any such officer or employee for unsatisfactory service."

In other words, if an employee is unsatisfactory, he shouldn't be in the Federal service, whether in the postal service or any other branch of the Federal Government. He ought to be discharged and that is the purpose of section 7.

Senator LONG. Who would determine the unsatisfactory service? Would that be simply the employer?

Mr. DOHERTY. The administrators of the Post Office Department; the Postmaster General——

Senator LONG. The local postmaster——

Mr. DOHERTY. Of course, the employee would have a right to appeal if he felt that he was being discriminated against.

Senator LONG. This would more or less eliminate whatever system they might have for determining whether or not he is unsatisfactory? I take it efficiency would be one of the elements considered if they wanted to discharge a man; wouldn't it?

Mr. DOHERTY. Yes; very definitely. As far as efficiency ratings, the Manual of Instructions for Postal Personnel for 1948, is a very thick volume as you will see, but that part having to do with the efficiency-rating system appears commencing on page 584 thereof, and there are 221 ways to get demerits and only 14 ways to get merits.

While the other people in the Federal Government have 26 days annual leave and 15 days sick leave, I don't think any of them have that animal called "demerits." Here we have in the postal rating system all those ways to get demerits and just a few ways to get merits. Even then, if you are to get merits, it requires that the postmaster in a given city, before he can dispense from 20 to 250 merits for highly meritorious acts which reflect credit upon the service, before the postmaster can mete those merits out, he has to secure approval of the Post Office Department before he can give the man the merits for performing his duties in such——

Senator LONG. Merits or demerits?

Mr. DOHERTY. The merits. The demerits: you can hand those out promiscuously and the postmaster does. If the employee gets 500 demerits he also receives a cut in salary.

Senator LONG. Has it been your experience that there has been a widespread difficulty with that system?

Mr. DOHERTY. Yes; that has been my experience and I contend, Senator, that if it is eliminated, it will save unlimited funds of the postal service in attempting to administer the efficiency-rating system.

As a matter of fact, you cannot standardize a human being and oftentimes, likely as not, the immediate supervisor, or the postmaster, wouldn't like the color of the hair of some man and he will issue a lot of demerits and eventually a cut in salary. Maybe he doesn't like the size shoes he wears, or perhaps he doesn't like his politics. That enters into the picture now and then, not so much in the postal service, but it does enter the picture and he is loaded up with demerits and eventually given a cut in salary. We would like to see the thing go out the window.

Senator LONG. Thank you very much.

Mr. DOHERTY. Thank you, Senator, and members of the committee.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I again call particular attention, as I did a while ago, to the fact that, although we have billions upon billions of dollars for foreign countries, yet the only bill that has been sent to the Congress by the President of the United States in the matter of pay increases provides for an increase of $50, and, in some instances, an increase of as low as $1.72 a year, according to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, who is in charge of the bill.

I shall close, as I began, by reading portions of the Democratic platform adopted last year at Philadelphia; first, the subject of peace with Germany, on page 3:

We pledge our best endeavors to conclude treaties of peace with our former enemies. Already treaties have been made with Italy, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Rumania. We shall strive to conclude treaties with the remaining enemy states, based on justice and with guaranties against the revival of aggression, and for the preservation of peace.

I call attention to the fact that the Democratic Party, in bringing out a contemptible, miserable international convention with respect to north Atlantic fisheries, leaves out Germany entirely. Who was it signed by, Mr. President? Under the Potsdam agreement, the fishing vessels of Germany were sunk. The President's own appointee, Collisson, testified before the Foreign Relations Committee that the German people need sea food and supplies of protein, yet we find here an agreement covering northern fisheries, signed by Canada, Denmark, France, Iceland, Italy, Newfoundland, Norway, Portugal, Spain, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the United States of America, and by representatives of the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations, representatives of the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea; but not signed by Germany. Germany is not included in the agreement.

I invite the attention of the Senate again to a portion of the Democratic platform which says:

We favor the reduction of taxes—

This morning the President of the United States asks for $4,000,000,000 in taxes—whenever it is possible to do so without unbalancing the Nation's economy, by giving a full measure of relief to those millions of low-income families on whom the wartime burden of taxation fell most heavily.

Now we are confronted, Mr. President, with a sales tax which, admittedly, would impose a burden upon those persons least able to bear it.

Then the platform says:

We shall endeavor to remove tax inequities and to continue to reduce the public debt.

They are going to reduce the public debt by voting $4,000,000,000 in additional taxes, apparently.

Then the Democratic platform says—and I want to show it to my distinguished friend, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] and have him look at it while I read it—

We are opposed to the imposition of a general Federal sales tax.

Today we find the Democratic Party fighting for a sales tax on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. I ask my distinguished and beloved friend from North Dakota if he knows anyone—Democrat or Republican—who is trying more faithfully than I am to redeem that very pledge?

Mr. LANGER. Let me say, Mr. President, that the Senator from West Virginia, all the time he was previously in the Senate, all the time he was the Governor of his State, all during his service in the other body, and since he has returned to the Senate has been a fighter for the benefit of all the people. He has been leading, with the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], a gallant fight in behalf of the little fellows in the District. I am delighted to associate myself with those two Senators. It seems to me that every Democrat upon this floor who had anything to do with the formulation of the Democratic platform, when that party was looking for votes, might as well go home and say to the people in the States which they represent, "We repudiated the platform which we adopted. We did not mean what we said. We were looking for votes at that time, and what we said was only campaign oratory."

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Is it not true that we discussed in the Senate this very same issue on June 19, 1948 just prior to the Democratic National Convention? If the Senator will recall, at that time I took the floor and discussed it at length, and finally the bill was laid aside. Immediately thereafter the National Convention of the Democratic Party met in Philadelphia and adopted the platform from which the Senator from North Dakota has just been reading, placing that party on record as being opposed to a general Federal sales tax.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, for hours upon hours the junior Senator from the State of Washington [Mr. CAIN], who was a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, stood at his place in the Senate and argued for a sales tax for the District of Columbia. He stated that there were thousands of District employees who could not be paid, that there was no money available, unless a sales tax should be imposed. Mark you, Mr. President, those who are so anxious to fasten upon the backs of the people of the District of Columbia the infamous sales tax were not for an amendment to increase the salaries of District employees $330. The Eightieth Congress increased the pay of Federal employees to that extent, but there was no amendment pending at the time with reference to employees of the District government. If there had been such an amendment, I am sure it would have been agreed to. But the distinguished Senator from Washington said; "No; if we are going to raise their pay $330 we must provide funds with which to do it, and the way to do it is to pass a sales tax." The distinguished Senator from South Carolina, in June of last year, only a day prior to the meeting of the Republican convention in Philadelphia, stood upon this floor protesting. He said, "We shall fight a sales tax from A to Z. It will never be passed unless it be done over my dead body."

The distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] was not a Member of the Senate at that time, but I know that if he had then been a Senator, he would have associated himself with some of the rest of us, including the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE].

An adjournment was taken in order to attend the convention in Philadelphia, so we did not fight out the issue at that time. It has been dragged in again by those interests who want to put their feet upon the heads and the throats of the poor people of the District of Columbia, and tax them for food, clothing, and everything else for which they can possibly tax them.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It is claimed that a sales tax is fair to all. Is it not true that in the Federal income-tax law we try to help those persons who have large families?

Mr. LANGER. That is correct—by giving exemptions.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Suppose we had a general sales tax in force, and suppose there were two men working side by side, each drawing a salary of $3,000. One of them has no wife or children; the other has a wife and five children. Under a sales tax, the man who has no wife or children will pay a sales tax on what he buys to supply himself. The other man, who has five children and a wife, will have to pay a sales tax for everything he purchases for his five children, his wife, and himself. Is not that correct?

Mr. LANGER. There is no doubt about it at all. The man who has five children is rearing them, trying to give them an education, and if a war should break out the boys of his family would be taken in order to fight for their country. The other man, who has no wife or children, receives the benefit which should go to the boys who were born on the other side of the track.

I am concerned about it, Mr. President, when any party, whether Democrat or Republican, deliberately violates his party's platform which was framed in order to induce people to vote for it, and then when their votes are obtained, it is said, "Well, the people of the District do not vote. We will soak them with a sales tax. We shall not try to pass a general sales tax, to be applied all over the country, but we shall just soak the poor people in the District of Columbia."

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. McGRATH. The Senator has been reading the Democratic national platform. As I understand it, the language of that platform says, "We do not favor a general Federal sales tax." The bill we are talking about in the Senate has nothing to do with general Federal taxes. The bill we are discussing is a tax bill for the District of Columbia. The capacity in which we are acting is as members of a city council.

If the Senator would take the time to read the testimony before the platform committee of the Democratic National Convention, he would find that the reason why the Democratic Party took the position it stated in its platform was that it felt that this field of taxation should properly be reserved to the States or to the local municipal governments, rather than for the Federal Government to encroach upon it.

I should like to make it perfectly clear in the RECORD that those of us on the Democratic side who favor the proposed legislation for the District of Columbia, purely as a municipal tax, are in no way violating either the spirit or the letter of the Democratic national platform. I think it is less than straightforward to try to read such an implication into what we are attempting to do out of a sincere desire to meet a very serious financial problem which the District of Columbia faces.

This is no more a general Federal tax than would be the real-estate tax in the District of Columbia, or the corporation tax within the District of Columbia, or any other kind of a tax which is assessed solely for the purpose of financing the municipal activities of this city.

I wish to make it perfectly clear that, regardless of the implication sought to be made, there is no violation of the Democratic national platform on the part of those who may support the pending legislation.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I am extremely sorry that a man who holds the high position of chairman of the Democratic National Committee could not offer a better explanation than has been suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island for breaking and violating a pledge made by the Democratic National Convention.

The Senator says to the Senator from North Dakota, "Read the testimony given before the committee over in Philadelphia at the time when the platform was adopted." When they were looking for votes they did not tell the poor devil in North Dakota or in Rhode Island to read any testimony which was given in Philadelphia before any committee. I heard them over the radio, and the only implication one could take from their radio addresses was that they were against a sales tax.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. The only reason why I suggest that the Senator read the testimony before the committee is that from his remarks it is quite evident that he does not understand the simple implication of the English language as forcefully expressed in the simple words of this platform. Therefore, since he needs something to supplement this simple language, I refer him to the source of authority.

Mr. LANGER. From the words of the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, I say that he was a party, as chairman of the Democratic National Committee, to deceiving the poor people of the country, and of making them believe that the Democratic Party was opposed to a Federal sales tax. The distinguished Senator is too bright a man, he has had too good a legal education, not to know that a farmer out in the country, or a workingman, no matter where he be, if he reads a sentence like this, "We are opposed to the imposition of a general Federal sales tax," would say, "The Democratic Party is opposed to a sales tax." That is what the average man or woman would believe. It is exactly on a par with some of the other things contained in the Democratic platform which were absolutely untrue, two of which I brought to the attention of the Senate only a few days ago.

I say, Mr. President, they can use all the weasel words they want to use, they can twist and squirm all they care to, but in the minds of the rank and file of the people the Democratic Party has repudiated a pledge enunciated when they said they were opposed to a general Federal sales tax, and try to get away with it by inserting legalistically the word "general."

Mr. President, if Congress passes a sales tax bill, the people of Mississippi or any other State where there is not a sales tax will say, "Certainly the Democrats are in favor of a sales tax, because the chairman of the Democratic Party, a United States Senator, rose on the floor of the Senate advocating it for the District of Columbia." If it is good for the District of Columbia it is good for Mississippi, it is good for Rhode Island, it is good for every other State.

What difference does it make if by the action of the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island we adopt a three, four, five, or six percent sales tax, and have it enacted by the Democrats in Mississippi or West Virginia, if the people have to pay that tax regardless of whether one is passed by the Federal Government or is not? What difference does it make if by example here, if by actions here, if by what they do here, the Democratic Party of the United States says, "We are in favor of a Federal sales tax in the District of Columbia"? It is an open invitation to the people of every State where there is not a sales tax to adopt one just as rapidly as they possibly can.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brewster	Hickenlooper	Morse
Butler	Hill	Murray
Byrd	Holland	Neely
Cain	Hunt	O'Conor
Douglas	Ives	Pepper
Downey	Johnson, Tex.	Russell
Fulbright	Johnston, S. C.	Sparkman
George	Knowland	Taylor
Gillette	Langer	Wherry
Graham	Lucas	Withers
Hayden	McGrath	Young
Hendrickson	Millikin

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is not present. The clerk will call the names of absent Senators.

The legislative clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BRICKER, Mr. CORDON, Mr. FREAR, Mr. GURNEY, Mr. KEM, Mr. LONG, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. MCCLELLAN, and Mr. MCKELLAR answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is not present.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

After a little delay, Mr. BALDWIN, Mr. WATKINS, Mr. HOEY, Mr. SALTONSTALL, and Mr. MCCARRAN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. GREEN, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. KILGORE, Mr. MCFARLAND, and Mr. STENNIS also entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

ORDER FOR RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. MCGRATH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today it stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] for himself and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to take 2 or 3 minutes, now that I see my good friend from Washington [Mr. CAIN] in the Chamber, to make a brief reply to certain comments which he made on the floor of the Senate yesterday afternoon. He said:

> There is no doubt in my mind concerning the sincerity of the opponents, for I take for granted that they are expressing what they consider to be the sentiment of their home constituencies.
>
> I think we had a remarkable illustration of that fact just a few minutes ago. The distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], in opposing the pending measure, and in an answer to an inquiry or observation made to him by the able Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], said, as I remember, that the speech the Senator from Oregon was giving this afternoon in opposition to the pending measure would make first-class political ammunition to be used in a coming campaign—where? Not in the District of Columbia where the sales tax we talk about is to be established, if approved, but 3,000 miles away from here, in a sovereign and magnificent commonwealth known as Oregon.
> It seems to me to be a fact, however, that the opponents of a sales tax are not expressing the feelings of a majority of those who are residents of the District of Columbia. It is likewise true that few of the opponents are members of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I even consider it to be a probable fact that few among the opponents have ever looked at a District budget or considered and studied the staggering and difficult financial problems which confront the District.

In order that my good friend from Washington may have no question at all as to what the junior Senator from Oregon was addressing himself to, let me make clear to him that I was addressing myself in opposition to what I consider to be a notorious system of taxation, namely, a sales tax.

When I was talking about political ammunition, of course I was talking about campaigning in the State of Oregon, because on four occasions my people have made perfectly clear that they will have none of the notorious principle of a sales tax. I stand against that principle, whether I am in Oregon or in the District of Columbia.

But when my good friend the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] says:

> It seems to me to be a fact, however, that the opponents of a sales tax are not expressing the feelings of a majority of those who are residents of the District of Columbia.

He draws the issue with the junior Senator from Oregon, and he draws the issue that the junior Senator from Oregon sought to lay down in his speech yesterday afternoon when he challenged the Democrats, who, he understands, are in favor of home rule in the District of Columbia, to submit this sales tax to a referendum in the District of Columbia. I now draw that issue with the junior Senator from Washington and say to the junior Senator from Washington that if he thinks a majority of the residents of the District of Columbia want a sales tax, then why does not the junior Senator from Washington offer to submit that proposal to a referendum in the District of Columbia?

Mr. President, I will tell you why I think the Senator from Washington does not offer to do so, and I will tell you why the Democrats do not do so. They know in their own consciences that it would go down in an overwhelming defeat. If they do not think so, why do not they accept the challenge of the junior Senator from Oregon?

I say to my good friend the Senator from Washington that I will continue to campaign against the sales tax in Oregon, in the District of Columbia, or at any time that the Congress of the United States tries to impose the principle of a sales tax by way of Federal legislation upon the people of the United States.

Mr. MCGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question which I should like to ask?

Mr. MORSE. I am happy to yield to my good friend the Senator from Rhode Island for a question.

Mr. MCGRATH. Is it not true that no machinery whatsoever by which the citizens of the District of Columbia could give expression to their views in a referendum is provided?

Mr. MORSE. Then why do not the Democrats, the majority party, get busy and put such machinery into operation?

Mr. MCGRATH. We have a home-rule bill pending.

Mr. MORSE. The Democrats have a majority in the Congress. Why do not they vote to pass such a bill?

Mr. MCGRATH. We may be able to do so eventually.

Mr. MORSE. Until the Democrats vote for and pass such a bill, I do not think they have any moral rights to impose upon the residents of the District of Columbia taxation without representation.

Mr. MCGRATH. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Oregon that I hope we will have his assistance in securing the enactment of a home-rule bill which will set up machinery by which the residents of the District of Columbia can govern themselves. But the enactment of such a bill is not possible at this particular time. At this time we are trying to obtain sufficient funds for the operation of the Government of the District of Columbia and its affairs.

Mr. MORSE. Of course, in endeavoring to secure the enactment of tax legislation before the enactment of home-rule legislation, the Democrats, the majority party, are putting the cart before the horse, as usual. Instead, they should increase the property taxes and the income taxes applicable in the District of Columbia, before they attempt to impose taxes upon the necessities of life needed by the residents of the District of Columbia, whom they do not give a chance to vote. The majority party does not give the residents of the District of Columbia a chance to come back at it by way of voting.

Mr. MCGRATH. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon seems to have greater wisdom than all other Members of the Congress, either in the House of Representatives or in the Senate.

Mr. MORSE. Why do not the Democrats check on my wisdom in this case by putting the matter to a vote in the District of Columbia? Mr. President, I will tell you why the Democrats do not do that. They do not do it because they know that the residents of the District of Columbia would sustain me by an overwhelming vote.

Mr. MCGRATH. Mr. President, demagogery is sometimes better than logic, I realize.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, if I could ever equal the Senator from Rhode Island in demagoguery, I would be ashamed of myself.

Mr. MCGRATH. The Senator from Oregon will never have occasion to be ashamed, because I am sure he can outshine me in that respect at any time he wishes to do so.

Mr. MORSE. Certainly I will not take any lessons in that subject from the Senator from Rhode Island, I assure him.

Mr. MCGRATH. The Senator from Oregon does not need to.

Mr. MORSE. I will join the Senator from Rhode Island in endeavoring to protect the rights of the people of the country, and my record shows that I have always endeavored to do that; but I will oppose the Senator from Rhode Island if he ever seeks to impose a sales tax upon the people of the District of Columbia without first securing the enactment of home-rule legislation for the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, is there any other question that the Senator from Rhode Island wishes to ask of me?

Mr. MCGRATH. I shall take the floor in my own right.

Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon expresses his own opinions, and he has opinions about practically every issue that arises in the Congress. He generally expresses himself very forcefully, I may say.

Some of us who come here with many obligations to the people of our home States are not particularly happy when we, too, realize that among the constitutional duties imposed upon Senators is that of looking after and presiding over the affairs of the District of Columbia.

I think all will concede that I have plenty to do to occupy all my waking hours, yet no duty or honor which has befallen me has given me greater pleasure or a finer feeling of patriotic service than that which I get from serving as a member and chairman of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McGRATH. I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. The recent discussion in reference to home rule in the District of Columbia recalls to my mind the experience in 1941 when the question of home rule for the District of Columbia was brought up. At that time most of the people in the District of Columbia did not want home rule.

Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island that I am opposing the proposed sales tax not because it is a sales tax but because, when I asked some of the officials of the District of Columbia to agree to earmark for education the funds obtained from the proposed sales tax, they declined to do so. Therefore I shall have to vote against it.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, I realize that more revenue must be obtained for the District of Columbia. The only question is how to obtain it.

I wish to point out that situation to the distinguished Senator; and I say that, although complaints may be made against the imposition of a sales tax, at the same time we must realize that the people of the District of Columbia must accept responsibility in these matters, although they have declined to do so thus far, as the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island well remembers.

Although I may differ with the Senator from Rhode Island, at the same time I realize that it is necessary to obtain more funds for the District of Columbia. I have objection on constitutional grounds against the imposition of a sales tax in the District of Columbia unless the funds so obtained are earmarked for a specific objective. Because certain officials of the District of Columbia have refused to agree to do that, I shall vote against the bill. Under the circumstances, I must vote against the bill, regardless of the fact that I realize that more revenue must be raised for the District of Columbia, and regardless of how I may feel about the action taken by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia in that connection.

It seems to me that when the District of Columbia officials to whom I have referred refused to agree to earmark such funds for some necessary purposes, such as education, they showed a rather shortsighted viewpoint.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia. I am not one who believes that municipal funds or State funds should be specifically earmarked. I believe that such funds should go into a common pool, and should be distributed from the pool for specific purposes, as occasions arise, by the appropriating body.

However, I am pleased to note the interest of the Senator from West Virginia in the problem of providing proper education for the children living in the District of Columbia. If the only reason he has for voting against the proposed sales tax in the present instance is that some officials of the District of Columbia have not agreed that the money to be raised by the sales tax shall be devoted solely to educational purposes, I may say to him that, serious and grave as is the educational problem in the District of Columbia, nevertheless we should realize that the amount of money to be raised annually by the sales tax will be in excess of the amount of money which could be judiciously spent for education in the District of Columbia.

I may further say to him that in another bill, which could almost be called a companion bill to the sales-tax bill—and the bill to which I now refer probably should be before us almost simultaneously, if that were possible under the Senate rules, I refer to a bill for home rule in the District of Columbia—there is a provision for fixing the formula by which the obligation of the Federal Government to the District of Columbia in respect to the payment of money by the Federal Government as its share in the over-all payments to meet the bills of the District of Columbia, would be determined. If the proposed formula is adopted, among other things it will provide that any money raised by the sales tax and any money raised under that formula or any money raised by real estate taxes or any of the other taxes imposed upon the residents of the District of Columbia in excess of the amount of money appropriated by the Congress, in connection with the budget sent to the Congress for its consideration, must be earmarked for the purpose of use in constructing and reconstructing schools in the District of Columbia.

We are trying a new experiment. We estimate that the sales tax will raise $14,000,000 or $15,000,000 a year. We may be entirely wrong about that. It is the best estimate that can be made. It may, on the one hand, raise $12,000,000; conceivably, on the other hand, it could raise $18,000,000. It depends upon the prosperity of the District. It depends on what happens here, and we realize this contingency. But we are at a starting point, and so in order to protect whatever revenue may be raised, to insure that it will not be squandered, that it will not be appropriated to the use of any other agency of the government of the District of Columbia, there is proposed a provision under which the District Commissioners may not spend anything beyond that which is approved in their budget, and all the rest of it must be set aside for school purposes.

It is entirely conceivable, Mr. President, if we adopt the formula that will be proposed in the home-rule bill, and if we adopt this legislation which will provide for a sales tax, plus increases in other tax categories, the District of Columbia may for the first time in its history be able to accumulate a surplus of $1,000,000, $2,000,000, or $3,000,000. I assure you, Mr. President, if that could happen, every Member of the Senate and all the Congress should be happy indeed. Then we would have a start on a long-range program for the reconstruction of the school system of the District. After we shall have had 1 or 2 years' experience in the operation of the sales and other taxes, we shall be better able to estimate within a reasonable figure the amount that they can produce.

Mr. President, I started to say that it is not pleasant for any of us to have to spend our time and our energy in advocating policies for the District of Columbia, or in giving our time to the affairs of the District of Columbia. Yet, the job has to be done. The Congress of the United States has not seen fit to pass the responsibility on to the local citizenry. We have wanted to keep it ourselves, and therefore some of us must discharge that responsibility. I assure you, Mr. President, that I have plenty to do, plenty to occupy my time, in connection with matters and measures which are of interest to the people of my State. But I also have a deep feeling within me that the Capital of the Nation and every spot in it, every public shrine and every building here belong fully to every citizen of my State just as they do to everyone who happens to reside here. I like to feel that the people of my State, just as those who are fortunate enough to reside in the city of Washington, have the same deep sense of pride in and admiration for this, the National Capital. I like to feel, Mr. President, that it is the prayer within the hearts of all young men and women, no matter where they may live in the United States of America, that God will permit them to live long enough so that some day they may come to Washington and see the great National Capital, where so much history fateful to mankind has been and is being made. Because I feel so deeply about it, Mr. President, I am willing to take the slings and arrows that may come my way—because, perhaps, of partisan considerations—in order to do what in my heart and conscience I believe to be the right thing for the Nation's Capital in providing the revenue which will make it the greatest, the most beauteous, the most glorious city in all the world.

Mr. President, the city of Washington is not only a shrine of Americans; it is the shrine of freedom. The kind of government it has, the manner in which it is administered as a democratic city, the means with which it is provided by Congress to do the things which enable all the world to look to Washington with pride, constitute the test whether in the long run democracy is really going to survive against other experiments in government which may be brought forth to contest with it.

Ah, Mr. President, I say to you that the day must come, and come soon, when slums will disappear from Washington. The day must come, and I pray it will come soon, when it will have the finest school system in the world, the greatest programs of social security, the finest parks, and the greatest highways, as well as everlasting monuments to the glories that have been achieved. That cannot come, Mr. President, it cannot even be planned in Washington, D. C., under the fiscal policies which have been pursued by the Congress in all the years that have passed.

Despite all it stands for, the city of Washington, and all who have lived within it, have been nothing more than stepchildren of the Congress of the United States. We have now come forward with a proposal for putting the finances of the city on a solid, a firm foundation. I probably would join with the Senator from Oregon, I probably would join with the Senator from South Carolina, in opposing a sales tax as an instrument of national policy. We are not advocating here an instrument of national policy. We are merely proposing a source of income for the District of Columbia, which has been accepted by a vast majority of the States of the Nation and by a great many of the municipalities of the United States. Nothing in the Democratic platform rebels against a sales tax as an instrument of policy on the local and community level. We have merely said in that platform that we do not favor a national sales tax, a sales tax as an instrumentality for the support of the Federal Government.

There are those, Mr. President, who will say that this establishes for the first time a new concept in Federal taxation. That is not true, for many times in years past the Congress has resorted to the principle of a sales tax, not on the municipal level alone, but on a great broad national scale. The great jewelry industry of my State suffers, and suffers severely, today because of a national policy established by the Congress, growing out of the necessities of war and prevailing conditions, under which a 20 percent sales tax is placed upon every piece of jewelry manufactured and sold in my State. Mr. President, we broke precedent then. Nobody complains about it; but it is none the less a sales tax.

The great fur industry of the United States suffers today almost to the point of collapse because the Congress of the United States, in the name of the emergency of war and in the continuing name of financial necessity, retains a 20-percent sales tax upon the goods of that industry when they are sold.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McGRATH. I am glad to yield.

Mr. IVES. Is it not true, the junior Senator from New York asks the able Senator from Rhode Island, that virtually every excise tax proposed by the Federal Government is a specialized sales tax, and that, on that basis, the Federal Government has for many years adopted the policy of the sales tax as a form of taxation?

Mr. McGRATH. I thank the Senator for his suggestion. It is corroboration of the point I was trying to make. Indeed, we have adopted the sales tax as an instrument of national policy many times in the past, and we adopt it and maintain it today, to the detriment of a great many of our national interests. Every citizen of the United States who buys himself a ticket for interstate transportation in any part of our country pays a sales tax which was imposed by the Congress of the United States. The only remaining great system for fast communication in the United States today is the Western Union Telegraph Co. A sales tax has been placed upon the service which it renders, and it is maintained, even to the point where very soon, if relief is not offered, the United States Government will own the Western Union Telegraph Co.

In the case of this bill we are not breaking with precedent in any manner whatever, even though we might be talking about a Nation-wide Federal general policy. We are talking now only about the District of Columbia. We are talking now only about how to give the greatest possible relief to this city without placing an undue burden on any one segment of the population.

We know, Mr. President, historically, it was never intended that the District of Columbia would grow beyond the immediate needs of the Federal Government. We know, historically, that when this piece of land, 10 miles square, was set aside, it was not the intention that anyone would reside or do business there except those who came for the purpose of doing business with the Federal Government. So the Government undertook, in the very beginning, to pay the entire bill for the operation of the District of Columbia. But the rapid growth of population, the tremendous advance in the science of government, the immediate needs of the great Federal Government, have brought about, without choice on our part, the development of one of the great cities of the world, with hundreds of thousands of persons residing in it who have no relationship whatsoever to the Federal Government, and hundreds of thousands of persons doing business in it who have no relationship to the Federal Government, save that the Government's operations have become the largest industry in the community.

Mr. President, we have long since passed the time when it was the obligation of the Federal Government to bear more than its share. We have long since passed the time, also, when the Federal Government should, as it has done in the recent past, bear less than its share. There is a happy medium between what we have been doing, what we should be doing, and what some persons advocate as the alternative, namely, to have the Government pay the entire bill.

There come to this community, day in and day out, throughout the year, hundreds and thousands of visitors who enjoy the beauty of the city. They take pride in everything that goes on here. They are given the benefit of the protection which the city affords, and they enjoy its beautiful parks, fine highways, splendid historic buildings, and the protection afforded them by the Police and Fire Departments and the health service—all the things which are so expensive in the maintenance of a great American city. But we know that those visitors, however willing they may be to contribute to the upkeep of this great shrine, are not able, under our present tax laws, to do anything about it.

Mr. President, the sales tax will not hurt anyone. It will enable the citizens of the District, by accepting the burden of the sales tax themselves, to receive probably an extra dollar in support of the community from those who come from outside. I am sure that visitors to Washington would hardly regret the expenditure of the few pennies they may leave here in the form of a sales tax. It has been demonstrated to the committee that such a tax will produce hundreds of thousands; yes, millions of dollars, in the course of a year.

I have heard the sympathetic arguments in behalf of the poor man. Mr. President, the program we now propose is indeed a poor man's program, so far as taxpayers in the District of Columbia are concerned, because it says to the taxpayer, as no other tax program can say to him, "For every dollar you are willing to assume yourself in the form of a sales tax, you will receive nearly $2 from outside to help in the problems of your home community."

Mr. President, if we had the machinery and if it were possible to place the question upon a referendum basis and receive an honest and sincere expression from the people of the District of Columbia, I am sure they would choose to accept the sales tax as a proper medium of supporting their government and getting the assistance they know they are entitled to from persons who come here and enjoy the city's benefits.

Mr. President, I have no desire to delay the vote. But here we have a picture drawn by committees of the Congress who have labored unselfishly and devotedly, for certainly none of us can take any advantage to himself in his home community by trying to do a good job in the District of Columbia. A bill of this kind is a sort of jig-saw puzzle. If we take a little bit out here by amendment and attempt to put something else there by amendment, the result will be that it will be found we have taken a square peg out and tried to put a round peg in its place, and, in the end, we shall have the confusion which we have been seeking to overcome through the studies which have proceeded during the past several years. There may be great merit, there may be considerable merit, or merit to a lesser degree, in certain proposals which could be made by every Member of this honorable body in order to amend the bill. We are not here to write a tax law for the District of Columbia on the floor of the Senate. It has been written, to the best of our ability, by the committee appointed, through expert studies and with due consideration to all facets of the problem.

Therefore, I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will not destroy the picture in the hope that the bill may be improved in a haphazard manner. I hope it will not be torn apart piece by piece through the adoption of amendments, however worthy they may appear to the Senators who offer them.

Let us try it out. We can come back next year and undo everything we have done, if we have been wrong. But let me remind the Senate that we are starting upon a great experiment in government in the District of Columbia and in the fiscal approach of a city of a million people.

Do it, please, as the experts have pointed out it should be done. Do not destroy the pattern by amendments.

If we shall pass the bill I shall be happy to take the political consequences, for good or evil, adverse or otherwise, that may come to me. I can accept them. I am sure I can explain the situation to my people; but if I cannot, I shall be content to accept the political consequences in the full knowledge that in trying to do this I have tried to do an honest job, to serve my country, and to make the Capital of my country a place which my children and I can be proud of so long as we shall live.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, it will not do the country at large any good for my friend to offer to accept the political consequences. After World War I, Senator after Senator, according to the RECORD, rose and said he made a mistake in voting for the declaration of World War I. The RECORD is replete with such speeches. The question is a simple one. If the Senator is right, why not accept the offer of the Senator from Oregon and have a referendum?

The Senator from Rhode Island says the city of Washington is a beautiful city, the shrine of America. It was built, Mr. President, without any sales tax on poor people.

This afternoon, in another speech, I read the amounts of money voted for foreign nations, most of which were supported by the distinguished Senator. We gave money to Austria. There is no sales tax in Austria. We voted $30,000,000 for Rumania. There is no sales tax there. Money was voted for Belgium, the British Empire, China, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, Estonia, Ethiopia, France, Poland, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Iran, Iraq, Netherlands, Norway, the Philippine Islands, Portugal, Russia, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Trieste, Turkey, Yugoslavia, and countries in South America. There are no sales taxes there.

In some of the nations to which we have sent billions of dollars, a few people own all the land, and there is a system of serfdom and peonage, if not worse. Yet the American taxpayer furnished billions of dollars for those nations. If the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island is so eager to help Washington, in addition to helping all those foreign nations, why does he not try to have set aside a few million dollars more for the city of Washington? Why not treat the city of Washington the same way we have been treating London, Amsterdam, and certain other cities across the sea to which we have been contributing our taxpayers' money without having any sales tax in any one of those countries? Why not treat the American taxpayer in the city of Washington on the same basis with the citizens of the foreign countries?

Let us take, for example, Mr. President, a GI coming home to England. A short time ago his family debt was $1,339, while the American GI had a debt of nearly $5,000 per family. Yet they call upon the American GI, through the system of taxation, to help the GI in the British Empire.

I say the time has come to help the taxpayer of America. We are not helping him by sending billions of dollars to foreign countries, while we put our hands in the pockets of a poor man in the city of Washington and take, for taxation purposes, the last penny he has.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the first amendment we have for consideration, as Senators will find if they read it, would make the Federal contribution toward the cost of running the local government of the District of Columbia 25 percent. I was very much impressed by the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island. He pictured to us what a lovely city Washington is, and he pictured how we must keep it, as the National Capital, looking lovely for all the people who visit this wonderful Capital City.

This city does not belong only to the residents of Washington; it belongs to all the people of this great Nation. That being so, I have advocated all along that we should help, not only in keeping it as it is today, but in building it into a greater National Capital. In order to do that, we should not expect the residents of the District of Columbia to pay all the expenses, or practically all the expenses, and at the same time ask that the Government be given certain privileges which it has in Washington.

I was glad to hear the Senator from Rhode Island refer to the police protection to hundreds of thousands of Government workers here who do not pay any taxes to the District, but pay taxes back home. Their children also attend schools here. As I see it, when these residents of the District are sending taxes back to their homes, the solution would be to have a Federal contribution, not of 50 percent, as it was prior to 1921, but of 25 percent, which is all the pending amendment calls for. The contribution was from 25 to 30 to 40 percent, then a contribution of $9,000,000 was made for several years, which amounted to about 33⅓ percent. But it will be found that in the depression years the Government began to contribute less and less to the District. Today it is contributing only 12 percent, $11,000,000, or $12,000,000, when we count the $1,000,000 which goes into the water fund.

Mr. President, I do not believe that is sufficient. I am calling to the attention of the Senate the fact that the Government can make a contribution of 25 percent to the District, and when it does that we will not have to adopt any other amendment, we will not have to adopt any of the amendments the committee has reported, we will not need any sales tax.

I have another way of raising taxes. It is said they cannot be raised, but I also have other amendments which would provide sufficient revenue, even if Senators did not agree with the distribution of 25–75 percent in paying the expenses. I have another plan, namely, to raise the liquor tax in the District 100 percent. That will make it practically the same, as members of the committee will admit, which Maryland is charging at the present time, in Silver Spring, Bethesda, and all around this territory. Who would pay that tax? The man who bought whisky, not the one who would buy clothing for his little children.

Mr. President, let me give a picture of what the result of the sales tax would be. Let us say that two men are working side by side. One is a single man and the other, working by his side for the same salary, $3,000, will pay an income tax, as will the other. But if a sales tax is enacted, what happens? The man who has no children will buy clothing and necessities only for himself, living in the same stratum of life with the other who has a wife and five children. The latter will buy necessities of life for seven people. So the single man will pay one-seventh, under the sales tax, of what is paid by the married man with five children.

I have an amendment designed to increase the income tax. It would make the tax about twice as much as it is today. I think that would be fair to everybody. There is the lowest income tax in the District of Columbia to be found anywhere in the United States. I ask anyone to look that up, and if my statement is not true, charge me with having made an untrue statement on the Senate floor.

It is realized that the real-estate tax must be low, even when the sales tax is imposed. It is increased from $1.85 to $2.15. An amendment I intend to offer will make it $2.25, which I think will put Washington in line with cities of similar size throughout the United States. I am trying to work out a plan which will be equitable to the people of the District and at the same time raise revenue.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Is it not true that in the District of Columbia the real-estate property values remain at a more stable figure than they do in other cities throughout the country?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think that is true. I could not be positive about it. I have not made a study of that, but what the Senator states is the information that has come to me.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Is it the Senator's observation that there has always been, over the long period of time, as compared to other municipalities of similar size, a greater demand for properties within the District of Columbia than there has been in other cities?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is certainly so, and always will be. Washington is the seat of government; therefore there will aways be a great number of Government workers here. Also the population of the District of Columbia does not depend on industries, as do the populations of most other cities of the United States. Here the people rely almost entirely on one big industry, the United States Government. I think property values will be found to be quite stable for that reason.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Did the Senator not find in his study of the budget of the District of Columbia that the real-estate taxes for last year amounted to approximately $32,500,000, which was about, if my figures are correct, one-third of the grand total?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes. I am glad the Senator mentioned that. The real-estate taxes amounted to about $32,000,000 last year. My amendment would raise the tax about 25 percent. That alone would raise almost half the amount which would be raised by the proposed sales tax.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Is the Senator familiar with the general figures as to the relationship of the property-tax revenues in municipalities throughout the Nation as compared to other revenues?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I have studied that subject somewhat.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Is it not true that according to the American Municipal Association, which makes studies of property-tax revenues as a main source of income for municipalities, that approximately from 60 to 75 percent of municipal revenues in other cities than Washington, are derived from property taxes?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is true.

Mr. HUMPHREY. One other question. My investigation of the budget of the District of Columbia and the pertinent economic facts relating to it, reveals that approximately 51 percent of the land in the District of Columbia is tax exempt. There are such things as embassies, churches, schools, hospitals, and, of course, large areas of Federal property. Would not the Senator from South Carolina then say that his suggestion that 25 percent of the budget of the District of Columbia should be met by a Federal contribution would be a modest or a reasonable suggestion?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I certainly think so. I should like to call to the Senator's attention that once we had a law on the statute books which called for the payment by the Federal Government to the District of Columbia of 40 percent of its budget. That law remained on the books until 1939.

Mr. HUMPHREY. What was the percentage of Federal contribution compared to the total budget as of last year, exclusive of the water fund.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator speaks of the total budget. Does the Senator mean expenditures?

Mr. HUMPHREY. What was the percentage of the Federal contribution in relation to the total budget?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Less than 12 percent.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Less than 12 percent.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. About 12 percent. Let me correct that statement. It was between 12 and 13 percent.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I understand that out of a budget of $103,000,000, which was the total budget of the District of Columbia, there was an $11,000,000 Federal payment, which included $1,000,000 for the water fund, which would mean that there was $10,000,000 of Federal payment, exclusive of the water fund.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I believe that if the Senator will look at the figures he will find that the Federal contribution amounted to $11,000,000, and that $1,000,000 additional was paid to the water fund, which made $12,000,000 in all, as I recollect.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I will accept that figure. I should like to ask this question, Is it not true that under the Federal public housing program we generally consider that the Federal Government would pay to municipalities, where there are not extensive Federal holdings, a minimum or an average of 10 percent of the shelter rent?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is so.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That would be in the ordinary municipality, let us say, such as Austin, Tex., Charleston, S. C., or Minneapolis, Minn.?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is true.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Certainly then we would not be wrong, would we, I ask the Senator, if we were to expect that in the Nation's Capital, where 51 percent of the land is tax-exempt, where vast areas of the territory of the District of Columbia are occupied by Federal buildings, there should be a larger percentage of Federal contribution than there is in other municipalities in connection with public housing projects?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is true. Remember that all those who live in the embassies are tax-exempt, so far as their incomes are concerned. There is reciprocity in that respect, so far as our representatives in other countries are concerned. This is not merely an ordinary city. The city of Washington is the city of the Nation. That is why I call for 25 percent Federal contribution, which I think is not really a contribution. It does not mean that we are giving the District 1 cent, for I believe we owe them that amount in order to keep this the city it ought to be.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. HUMPHREY. A sales tax is a direct tax upon the individuals who are in the market making purchases. Would the Senator not expect, then, that before a sales tax was placed upon the people of the District of Columbia by the Congress of the United States it might be a good policy for the Congress first to grant the program that has been promised to the residents of the District of Columbia, the program of home rule?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator knows that I differ with him on the question of home rule.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am very much aware of that, but I want to get first things first.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I want the Senator to know that at the same time, in connection with a matter which is so far reaching as is the sales tax, the people of the District of Columbia ought to have something to say about it. I would be willing to have the bill passed if a proviso were placed in it that the people of the District should first be allowed to vote on the question of the sales tax.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Would the Senator from South Carolina change his point of view about home rule if the sales tax were adopted?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I fear the Senator from South Carolina has convictions on that subject which are so deep rooted that I might not be able to change them simply because the sales-tax bill were passed.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I should like to make an observation in prefacing my next question. It appears to me that a question which is so fundamental to the economic well-being of the individual citizens of the District of Columbia as is a direct sales tax, which surely affects the incomes of the individual citizens, is a question which should be at least faced by the people of the District of Columbia themselves, and decided by their own government.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I will say that if the Congress is thinking about giving home rule to the District of Columbia, it certainly should not impose upon the people of the District a sales tax without permitting the people to decide for themselves whether they want the sales tax. Congress should leave to those who would be in charge of the government of the District of Columbia to decide whether they want a sales tax.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am glad the Senator from South Carolina has made that observation, because, as he knows, I am an advocate of home rule for the District of Columbia, and I am opposed to the sales tax. I simply want to get the cart and the horse in their right positions. It has appeared to me that if we are going to provide such an extensive tax program for the District of Columbia, which so fundamentally affects the individual lives and the well-being of the citizens, the least we could do would be to hold up that kind of program until such time as we have acted upon the proposal which will be before the Senate, the proposal of home rule, which is being advanced by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER]. I simply make that observation. Of course, I respect the convictions of the Senator from South Carolina on the question of home rule. I will say to the Senator that I shall be in his office to see if we cannot work out that problem.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I shall be glad to discuss it with the Senator from Minnesota. I am glad to hear that the Senator believes that what is now proposed to be done under the bill is, in effect, putting the cart before the horse. I believe as the Senator does about leaving the question of sales tax to the decision of the people. Such a vital matter as a sales tax should be left to the people of the District of Columbia. They should be given the right to say whether they want it or not. It seems as though an effort is being made to make an over-all change in the taxation plan of the District of Columbia just before the proposal comes before Congress to give to the people of the District home rule. Then Congress would say to the people of the District, "Here is this tax law. We have passed it. It is your baby. You carry out its provisions." That would be the effect of our action if we should adopt home rule for the District after the passage of the sales-tax legislation.

Mr. President, I had been speaking of the various amendments I had offered. As was brought out by the junior Senator from Minnesota, $32,000,000 was collected under the real-estate tax in the District. That amount does not represent more than 30 percent of the total revenue collected in the District of Columbia, which is entirely out of line with the tax collections in other cities of similar size in the United States.

Reference has been made to the great amount of property in the District of Columbia which has been taken off the tax books. Much of it is land in Government control. The property occupied by embassies is off the tax books. Fifty-one percent of the land area of the District of Columbia is off the tax books. Would it be wrong to give to the District 25 percent of the total budget, to up the $32,000,000 collected under the real-estate tax? If the Federal Government were to give 25 percent of the total budget for the District, it would mean thirteen or fourteen million dollars additional being paid by the Federal Government. When we add the two together we make up for the loss of real-estate taxation, income taxes, and other forms of taxation which the people in the District of Columbia are not paying to the full extent. I think it would be only right and just toward the District of Columbia, the city of all of us, to make this contribution.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FREAR in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. We were speaking a moment ago about the property tax. I note from the papers which I have before me that my own city, for its budget, obtains 88 percent of its entire revenue for the operation of a municipality of 550,000 people from the property tax.

I also note that the analysis of the present laws pertaining to alcoholic beverages shows that the tax on them is considerably lower in the District of Columbia than are such taxes in my own State. I have heard a great deal of comment since I have been in Washington about the cocktail parties and the social life of the city. I gather from talking with those who have been long-time residents that such parties are often conducted by those who pay visits to the District of Columbia for one purpose or another. I presume that such parties are also given by some of those who have been long-time residents within this beautiful city.

Is it not true, from the Senator's observation and study of the municipal and State tax laws pertaining to alcoholic beverages such as beer, whisky, and wine, that the license fee in this city and the tax per barrel or per case of beer, or per gallon of wine or alcoholic spirits, is among the lowest in the country?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It is one of the lowest in the country. It does not amount to more than one-fifth of what it is in South Carolina.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Is it not true that this is one of the greatest consuming areas in the country?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. There is no question about that. If it is desired to tax visitors who come here and pitch parties, there is an opportunity to do so by agreeing to my amendment.

Mr. President, the amendment which is before the Senate at the present time provides for a contribution to the city of 25 percent. I do not intend to consume any more time of the Senate, but I wish to impress upon Senators that it is my judgment that we should pay to the city far more than 25 percent. I believe that if we enact a sales tax and then give to the city of Washington the privilege of home rule, the sales tax will not remain in existence very long. We shall find that some of the proposals in my amendments will be put into effect.

I believe that when Members of Congress study the situation and see the treatment that is being accorded the District of Columbia, they will agree with me. Washington is not like other cities. It cannot expand and take in Bethesda, or any of the surrounding territory in any direction. The boundary lines were written into the law enacted by the Congress of the United States when the Government was brought to Washington, D. C.

The city of Washington is cramped, so to speak. People may live just outside the District and receive the benefits of the city of Washington, paying no taxes for its support. Such people come from the home States of all Senators. They work in our offices, and they work in every department of the Government.

I believe that we owe the District of Columbia even more than 25 percent, when we consider all the advantages that the people of the States are receiving at the present time. I believe that the District budget ought to be balanced, but that is not the only reason why I am advocating a contribution of 25 percent. I believe that we owe it to the people of the District, in fairness. For that reason I urge support for my amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, inasmuch as we have reached the time when we are about to vote, I should like to say a few words and state for the RECORD how I intend to vote.

I have the greatest sympathy for the dilemma in which the members of the District Committee find themselves in searching for new sources of revenue. I appreciate the circumstances of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], the distinguished chairman of the Democratic Party. I sincerely wish that I could find it in my heart and conscience to vote with him; but I cannot. I am conscientiously opposed to the principle of a sales tax, which falls most heavily in proportion upon the poorest man with the biggest family.

Happily I am in the position of knowing that the people of my State agree with me, because at one time a sales tax was enacted in Idaho. At the very next election the Governor, who was in power when the sales tax was enacted was defeated, although he was one of the most popular Governors we ever had. The sales tax was repealed. However, I do not feel disposed to risk enacting a sales tax in the District of Columbia simply because we were successful in having it repealed in Idaho. I feel that if we enact a sales tax for the District it will set an example for the rest of the country, or at least furnish an excuse for proponents of the philosophy of the sales tax to urge the enactment of similar measures in other parts of the country.

For these reasons I regretfully announce that I cannot support my party chairman. I am happy to note the caliber of other Senators with whom I am about to vote. I shall vote against the bill if it remains in its present form. I intend to vote for the pending amendment to increase the contribution of the Federal Government to 25 percent. I think that is very reasonable. I shall probably vote for other amendments; but if the bill is not amended so as to eliminate the sales-tax feature, I shall have to vote against the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I should like to make a very brief statement in reference to the amendment which is before the Senate and the proposal for a sales tax in the District of Columbia.

I am opposed to the proposal for a sales tax, and I am in support of the first amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

I realize that the District Committee has a very difficult job. I fully sympathize with members of that committee. If my loyalties and affections were to govern my judgment in this instance, I would, of course, join with the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], the chairman of my party and the chairman of the District Committee, who has given many months of time and much devoted service in an effort to solve the difficult problems which face the District of Columbia and its government. However, I must say that this question goes far beyond loyalty. It even goes far beyond a great personal affection and high respect for the members of the committee, and particularly for its chairman.

I wish to associate myself at this time with the remarks of my colleague the distinguished junior Senator from the State of West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], who spoke earlier in the day and gave to us a very clear and pointed analysis of the meaning of the proposal for a sales tax, as advanced by the committee.

I should like to make some observations as a result of my own experience, observations which I believe will be worthy of the consideration of the Senate, observations from one who has long been interested in municipal government. I made a very brief—and I must say in all candor, a sketchy—study of the government of the District of Columbia. I am not an expert on it. I realize that I do not have all the information which those who have studied the question in greater detail have as to the operations of the District government.

I spent at least 3 years of my life in the study of local government in a university, 2 years of my life as an instructor in the field of local government, and 3½ years as mayor of the fourteenth largest city in the United States. Never have I seen a government so completely confused, so completely lost in detail, and so completely mixed up in terms of its responsibilities and its alinement of authority and power as is the District of Columbia.

The District of Columbia government is a product of the Congress of the United States. I am not condemning the commissioners of the District of Columbia. I am not condemning those who serve ably as responsible executive and administrative officers of the District of Columbia government. I know there are more than 70 departments and agencies in this municipal government, and I submit that three Commissioners appointed by the President cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, supervise that many departments and agencies.

For example, I know that the Treasurer of the United States and the General Accounting Office have something to do with the Government of the District of Columbia. I know that Federal Bureau of the Budget and its executive officers have something to do with the District of Columbia's budget officer. I know there is no way by which we can place our finger upon the focal point of responsibility in the District of Columbia.

I say it would be a disservice to the people of Washington, D. C., and its government for the Congress to vote a sales tax which would produce approximately $18,000,000 of additional revenue and would place a burden on each and every citizen residing in the District of Columbia, until something constructive is done about the nature of the government of the District of Columbia.

So, Mr. President, I must disagree with my esteemed colleague the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], who spoke a moment ago, because I believe in home rule. I wish to commend the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, and particularly the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], who has introduced a home-rule bill for the District of Columbia, for their insight into the very basic nature of the problem confronting us in connection with these matters.

I do not wish to see this beautiful city without finances; but I submit to the Senate and to the entire Congress that the troubles of the Government of the District of Columbia are our responsibility. We are the ones who, only recently—at least, according to the records which I have from the Committee on the District of Columbia—since the war have given three salary increases to District of Columbia Government employees—increases which certainly were needed—and a 40-hour week, which certainly the workers are entitled to, and provision for time-and-one-half pay for overtime work, to which workers in the municipal government are entitled just as much as are workers in private industry; but in none of those instances did the Congress of the United States appropriate additional money with which to meet the requirements thus arising for additional funds.

Mr. President, after the war the District of Columbia had a surplus of $10,000,000; but because of the actions of the Congress since that time, that surplus has been used up, and today the District of Columbia has a deficit of approximately $7,500,000. That much money is needed to balance the District of Columbia's budget, and $10,600,000 is needed to pay the salary increases which have been granted to District of Columbia employees and to take care of the retroactive features of the pay-increase bills.

We should do first things first, and I believe the first thing which should be done by the Congress is to give as much power as possible to the people of the District of Columbia. I realize the constitutional limitations; I realize that the District of Columbia and its geographical limits and part of its structure of government are prescribed by the Constitution of the United States. But I submit that when we are dealing with a million people, they should not be dealt with lightly, and we should not try to convert the Congress of the United States into a board of aldermen which occasionally thinks about the municipal problems of the greatest Capital in the world.

So I call upon the distinguished Members of this body to read this measure very carefully, and I call upon them to remember the obligations of the Federal Government in terms of the proper contribution for the Federal Government to make to the government and operation of the District of Columbia. I call upon the Members of this body to remember that what is needed in the District of Columbia, according to my way of thinking, before it receives any more money, is a municipal house-cleaning. I know that the District of Columbia has not had a survey of its municipal government since 1936, 13 years ago. I know that the last time an extensive administrative study was made of the District of Columbia was in 1935, by the firm of Jacobs & Griffenhaugen. I know that in my own city of Minneapolis we had a survey last year, and another 5 years before that, and another 5 years before that, and I know that in practically every city in the United States the authorities have called in experts to study the municipal problems, the governmental problems, the tax problems, and the other problems which confront them.

So, Mr. President, before we talk in terms of obtaining $18,000,000 of additional revenue for the District of Columbia, as is proposed to be raised by an obnoxious, unfair, inequitable sales tax, I submit we should find out where the government of the District of Columbia is going and where responsibility rests in that connection, and what is the just and proper share which the Federal Government should contribute to the government of the District of Columbia, and whether the property tax rate in this city compares favorably with the property tax rate in other cities, and also whether other taxes in the District of Columbia, such as liquor taxes, are levied in the same degree as in the case of other municipalities.

My own observation is—and I feel that I came to this body with some information about municipal affairs—that the city of Washington has been blessed by prolonged prosperity because of the nature of its major industry, namely, government. The property in this city has more value per square foot than the property in almost any other city of comparable size; at least, that is what the real-estate agent told me when I bought my house. He said, "Don't worry about how much you paid for it, for you can always sell it for more than you paid, because property never depreciates in Washington."

Yet, Mr. President, according to the little information we have—I am not willing to testify as to its authenticity—the property tax rate in the city of Washington, D. C., is lower than the property tax rate in any other city of comparable size. The people who live in the city of Washington and who profit from the government business in this city can afford to contribute their fair share in terms of the money needed to maintain a fair degree of health and safety for the people who reside in the city. I also say that the Federal Government can afford to pay its fair share.

With 51 percent of the land in the District of Columbia occupied by tax-free institutions, and with more and more public buildings to be constructed, with many buildings just across the park from the Capitol to be torn down, so as to make way for the construction of a new Senate Office Building, it is obvious that we cannot leave the major burden of finance upon the people who live in this city.

The proposed amendments take into consideration the Federal contribution, the excise taxes—such as liquor taxes, the real-estate taxes, and the most fair form of taxation which is known, namely, the personal income tax. I, for one, will never shunt aside the principle of the personal income tax, which is a fair, equitable, honorable system of taxation, and place in its stead a type of taxation which has been so well explained by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

Again I remind my colleagues of the comparison which has been made between the taxes to be paid under a sales tax by a single man earning $3,000 a year and the taxes to be paid by a married man with a wife and four or five children, who also earns $3,000 a year for doing comparable work requiring a comparable degree of skill, and who is of a comparable economic status. Of course, for the purposes of this comparison, it is not necessary to determine whether it would be best to refer to the situation of a family with five children or the situation of a family with four children, for, after all, all children are expensive each and every one of them.

Under the proposed sales tax and under the proposals to adjust the income-tax payments, what will a man with a family of that size and an income of $3,000 a year be paying? First, he will pay the taxes on what he buys for his own use, and then he will pay taxes on every article purchased for the use of his wife and children, with the exception of food and medicines. For every bundle of diapers or every hair cut or for any other article or service which his family requires, he will have to pay a tax, under the present sales-tax proposal. Would that be fair? To my mind it would be grossly unfair.

If a sales tax were the only means of raising revenue for the city of Washington, I would not oppose it, for this city must have revenue. But I submit that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and its board of aldermen, the Congress of the United States, have not made a study to determine whether the sales tax is the only revenue-raising means to which to resort.

In some States the sales tax has been resorted to because there was no other means of raising revenue. In some cities the sales tax has been resorted to because the property-tax rates already were so high that those who were responsible for the tax structure did not dare raise the property taxes any higher. However, in the city of Washington the property taxes are not that high—not by a long shot.

The liquor license fees are not very high, either—not by a long shot. And there are plenty of other things in the city of Washington, D. C., in the terms of revenue for municipal government, that have not been fully justified, and until that condition has been rectified, the junior Senator from Minnesota is not going to vote for a sales tax. I would not vote for it in Minneapolis, nor would I vote for it in Minnesota so long as other equitable forms of taxation are available. If my State is faced with a choice between a sales tax and no revenue, then I shall have to make another decision. But the State is not faced with that problem.

In this instance we are faced with a choice of proposals. If the distinguished Senator from South Carolina did not present an alternative, then I should say his argument was fallacious; I would say it was obstructionist. But I submit to this honorable body that those who have signed the minority views, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], have given to the Senate an alternative—an alternative, if you please, which surely is a fair and honorable alternative. So we are not leaving the District without the means of sustaining its government and of maintaining this beautiful National Capital.

Speaking of beauty, there is nothing beautiful about a sales tax, economically or in any other manner. There is nothing very fair about it, either, no matter how many exemptions are placed in it. If some kind of specialized sales taxes for the District of Columbia are desired, specialized taxes on luxuries, that is still another item. I submit we are talking about a general sales tax, not about a particular type of sales tax upon a particular commodity.

I am of the opinion, I may say to my colleague, the Senator from South Carolina, that the argument is not exactly one that seems to be gathering votes for our side; I hope I am wrong; but it needs to be expressed on the floor of the Senate. We know that in great America, despite its great production and high profits, there is inequity of income. Thirty-four percent of the people of the Nation are receiving less than $2,500 a year income, and vast numbers of people in the District of Columbia receive less than $2,000 a year income. If my recollection of the minority views serves me correctly, I think a recent survey made by the Census Bureau shows that 24 percent of all the families and individuals in the District of Columbia earned less than $2,000 a year in 1947. So we propose a fair system of taxation instead of one which requires a 2-percent sales tax to be paid, except on things to keep a person alive, such as food and medicines, and whatever other few exemptions there may be.

I think it is time to look at the alternatives, to consider their merits, and to consider them on the basis of providing revenue in a minimum amount, a basic minimum revenue. Then, after we have provided a minimum amount of revenue, to balance the budget of the District, to furnish the back pay that is due—that is all—we should examine the governmental structure of the District of Columbia to see whether sound administration prevails, and whether those who are the Commissioners of the District and those who are recommended as the Commissioners of the District are truly concerned with the lot of the ordinary plain people of the District. Until I am convinced that they are, I shall not vote for a sales tax, because I want to be perfectly convinced that those who are entrusted with the powers of the Commissioners, those who are the executive body of the District, are the kind of people who are deeply concerned about the lot of the average everyday citizen, and not about the lot, let me say, of those who can get along well, regardless of waste or inefficiency or any other form of maladministration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], for himself and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. MORSE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] are absent on official business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] is absent by leave of the Senate and is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] who is absent on official business. If present and voting the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] would vote "yea" and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] are absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] would vote "nay."

The senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], and the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are absent on official business. If present and voting, the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] are necessarily absent. If present and voting, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is detained on official business.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] who is detained on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] would vote "yea" and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—24

So the amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina for himself and Mr. NEELY was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I now call up my amendment A, which is dated May 9, 1949.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 74, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "2.15" and insert "2.25."

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, the Senate will notice that on page 74 of the committee bill, the committee, in line 12 on that page, provides for a tax on real property of "2.15 percent on the assessed value of such property." My amendment would strike out "2.15" and insert "2.25."

The present law provides for 1.85 percent, which raises approximately $32,000,000 for the District——

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Is that an ad valorem tax on real and personal property?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It is an ad valorem tax on real estate and personal property in the District of Columbia.

It will be found that 1.85 percent raises approximately $32,000,000. I propose to increase the rate from 1.85 to 2.25. It will be found that that increase will raise approximately $8,000,000.

If my amendment is adopted it will not jeopardize the bill as a whole. It will raise additional revenue from property within the District of Columbia. My amendment is fair and just. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] stated a moment ago that his city raised 88 percent of its revenue from the tax on real estate. The rate in the District of Columbia is out of line as compared with that in the city of Minneapolis. Raise the rate just a little here, and approximately $8,000,000 additional revenue will be received.

Of the other two main amendments I have to offer, one relates to whisky, doubling the whisky tax in the District, and making it the same as the Maryland tax. Additional revenue would be raised by that.

Then I propose to increase the income tax in the District, not as high as it is in some States, but to increase it, and that will be another amendment.

If the Senate would adopt those three amendments, we would not need a sales tax. Sufficient revenue would be raised under those amendments to offset what would be raised by the sales tax.

Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate at length, but I hope Senators will consider the amendment seriously. The District real-estate owners would be paying nearer their share of the taxation in the District than they would under the committee bill, and more revenue would be raised for the District.

What else would the amendment accomplish? I predict that if a sales tax of 2 percent is imposed and the officials find there is a deficit, next year they will come back with a proposal to impose a 3-percent sales tax, then later a 4-percent. My amendment would certainly raise some revenue, and it would prevent a deficit, even if the other amendments were not agree to.

Mr. President, this is why I am taking up the real-estate amendment first. I wish to follow it with the other two amendments.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I should like to say that the committee has given consideration to raising the real-estate tax, as appears from the bill. We provide for an increase in the tax rate of 15 cents per hundred dollars of valuation. At the present time real property in the District is bearing 53.87 percent of the total tax load. I would not at all deny that some cities have a greater property tax than is the case of the District of Columbia, but I wish to say that with the increase we have proposed there will have been approximately a 40-percent increase in real-estate taxes in the District since the year 1946. I think the increase the committee has provided for, together with the other increases we have provided, and with the liquor tax and the sales tax, the best program to meet the needs of the District of Columbia will have been adopted.

I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield for a question?

Mr. HUNT. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. In comparing tax millage rates between the District of Columbia and other cities, is it not necessary to remember that the District is more comparable to a city government, plus a county government, plus a State government, in that the taxes raised here have to meet some costs which frequently are put up by counties or States, such as contributions to the welfare fund, benefits for old age, for the blind, for dependent children, school funds, and the like?

Mr. HUNT. The Senator from Florida is quite right. Within the District of Columbia there is the equivalent of every type of political subdivision of government, including school districts, townships, counties, cities, and States. All are combined in the taxes paid in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I should like to make one brief observation on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina. I tried to reiterate, in my general remarks on the bill, that we are dealing with a composite picture. Once the Senate begins to pick the bill apart, to take one thing out and put in another, we are going to end up where we started, having an incomplete picture, and we would probably find that we would have been better off if we had not wasted our time on the bill.

We have heard much in the debate about putting the burden on the working class, on the poor people, so to speak. I wish to point out that an increase in the real-estate tax in the District of Columbia, under the procedures followed by the rent-control administration of this District, permissible under our law, would automatically be passed to the tenants. So that any increase made in property taxes would result only in an automatic increase in the rent for every rent payer in the District of Columbia. So I believe the Senator from South Carolina is, by the amendment, working against the very people he is trying so hard to serve.

The Senator also stated that the present tax rate was $1.85. The present tax rate is $2, and he proposes to increase it to $2.25. I do not know the amount of money the 25-percent increase would raise, perhaps two or three million dollars, but it would be immediately passed on, so far as rentable property was concerned, to the tenants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have another amendment which comes in on page 62 of the bill. In the amendment of the committee on page 62, line 9, Senators will find that the committee amendment reads, "A tax of 15 cents on every wine-gallon of wine," and so forth. My amendment would make the tax 20 cents instead of 15 cents. Its effect would be to exactly double the amount of the tax on wine today. At the present time it is 10 cents. The committee proposes to increase it to 15 cents. My amendment would increase it to 20 cents.

Again, on line 13, Senators will find the tax on certain wines is proposed to be fixed at twenty-two and a half cents a gallon. My amendment calls for 30 cents, which again would raise it exactly a hundred percent, from 15 cents, the present tax, to 30 cents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment of the committee on page 61, beginning in line 21, was agreed to, is reconsidered.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I respectfully request that those who are handling the bill accept the amendment being offered by the senior Senator from South Carolina, and take it to conference.

Mr. HUNT. The committee is agreeable to taking the amendment to conference. I should like to say that there were three reasons for the decision taken by the committee. First, we did increase the license fees by 50 percent. We have likewise increased the tax on spirituous liquors by 50 percent. We have made a like increase on wine. We have increased the tax on beer by $1 per barrel. We were trying to equalize or keep in the middle, so to speak, between Virginia on the one side and Maryland on the other.

We had one other thought in mind, which was that the particular amendment, as offered by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, did not meet with the approval of the House.

We had those three things in mind. We thought an increase in the tax was necessary, but we tried to keep the District of Columbia in proper relationship between Virginia and Maryland in respect to this tax. We tried also to write something that would be acceptable to the House. The committee, however, has no objection to taking the amendment to conference, if the Senate wishes to adopt it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McFARLAND in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] for himself and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], lettered A, and dated May 12, 1949, which is an amendment to the committee amendment on page 62, in line 9, line 13, line 17, and line 19.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I call up the amendment offered by me on behalf of myself and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], lettered B, relating to newspapers. On page 12 of the bill newspapers are exempted from the sales-tax provision. I ask that the amendment be stated, and on the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12 it is proposed to strike out line 8 and redesignate subsections (h) to (q), inclusive, as subsections (g) to (p), respectively.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I wish to say that the proposed sales tax would hit the little people of the District, and exempt the newspapers, which, the record shows, brings in millions of dollars. I should like to have a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment so the people may know exactly how the Members of the Senate feel in regard to my proposal. If adopted, the amendment would not result in bringing in much money in taxes, but it would bring in some additional revenue.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I remind Senators that the amendment does not penalize newspapers, as I understand. It penalizes subscribers to newspapers.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It applies to newspapers just as it applies to everything else on which a sales tax is applied.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I may say that the Maryland sales-tax law makes no reference to newspapers whatsoever. They are not taxed. The committee feels it would be rather ridiculous to have the newsboys attempt to collect each month from their subscribers one or two pennies for their newspapers. Of course, as they are sold on the newsstands there would be no tax. If the amendment should prevail, we feel the insignificant amount that would be raised by virtue of the adoption of the amendment would not be worth the trouble or the effort to collect it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina for himself and the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment lettered B, and dated May 12, 1949.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I call up the amendment offered by me on behalf of myself and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] lettered "B" and dated May 9, 1949.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is a long one. Does the Senator desire that it be stated at the desk, or printed in full in the RECORD?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I do not ask that it be read. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The amendment is as follows:

Beginning with line 5, page 1, strike out all down to and including line 4, page 58, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO ARTICLE 1 OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE ACT OF 1947

"Article 1 of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1947, as amended, is further amended as follows:

"Paragraph lettered (s) of section 4 of title I of article 1 of said act is amended to read as follows:

"'(s) The word "resident" means every individual domiciled within the District on the last day of the taxable year, and every other individual who maintains a place of abode within the District for more than 7 months of the taxable year, whether domiciled in the District or not. The word "resident" shall not include any elective officer of the Government of the United States or any employee on the staff of an elected officer in the legislative branch of the Government of the United States if such employee is a bona fide resident of the State of residence of such elected officer, or any officer of the executive branch of such Government whose appointment to the office held by him was by the President of the United States and subject to confirmation by the Senate of the United States and whose tenure of office is at the pleasure of the President of the United States, unless such officers are domiciled within the District on the last day of the taxable year.'

"SEC. 2. Section 2 of title III of article I of said act is amended by adding thereto the following new subsection:

"'(c) Adjusted gross income: The words "adjusted gross income" as used in this article mean gross income less deductions allowed under section 3 (a) of this title: Provided, however, That such deductions were directly incurred in carrying on a trade or business: And provided further, That in determining adjusted gross income no deductions shall be allowed for charitable contributions, alimony payments, medical and dental expenses, an optional standard deduction, losses of property not connected with trade or business, or for an allowance for salaries or compensation for personal services of the persons liable for the tax.'

"SEC. 3. Section 3 (a) (1) of title III of article I of said act is amended to read as follows:

"'(1) Expenses: All the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business (except as otherwise provided herein), traveling expenses (including the entire amount expended for meals and lodging) while away from home in the pursuit of a trade or business; and rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession, for purposes of the trade or business, of property to which the taxpayer has not taken or is not taking title or in which he has no equity.'

"SEC. 4. Section 3 (a) (4) (C) of title III of article I of said act is amended to read as follows:

"'(C) of property not connected with a trade or business, if such losses arise from fires, storms, shipwrecks, thefts, or other casualty: Provided, however, That no such loss shall be allowed as a deduction under this subsection if such loss is claimed as a deduction for inheritance—or estate—tax purposes: And provided further, That this subsection shall not be construed to permit the deduction of a loss of any capital asset as defined in this article.'

"SEC. 5. Section 3 (a) (8) of title III of article I of said act is amended to read as follows:

"'(8) Charitable contributions: Contributions or gifts, actually paid within the taxable year to or for the use of any religious, charitable, scientific, literary, military, or educational institution, the activities of which are carried on to a substantial extent in the District, and no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual: Provided, That such deduction shall be allowed only in an amount which in the aggregate of all such deductions does not exceed 15 percent of the adjusted gross income.'

"SEC. 6. Section 3 (a) (9) of title III of article I of said act is amended to read as follows:

"'(9) Medical, dental, and so forth, expenses of individuals: Expenses in the case of residents, paid by the taxpayer during the taxable year, not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, for the medical care of the taxpayer, his spouse, or dependents as defined in this article. The term "medical care", as used in this subsection, shall include amounts paid for the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of diseases, or for the purpose of effecting healthier function of the body (including amounts paid for accident or health insurance): Provided, however, That a taxpayer may deduct only such expenses as exceed 5 percent of his adjusted gross income: And provided further, That the maximum deduction for the taxable year shall not exceed $1,250.'

"SEC. 7. Section 3 (a) (13) of title III of article I of said act is amended to read as follows:

"'(13) In lieu of the foregoing deductions, any resident may irrevocably elect to deduct for the taxable year an optional standard deduction of 10 percent of the adjusted gross income of $500, whichever is lesser: Provided, however, That the option provided in this subsection shall not be permitted on any return filed for any period less than a full calendar or fiscal year.'

"SEC. 8. Section 3 (a) of title III of article 1 of said act is amended by adding thereto a new subsection to read as follows:

"'(15) Reasonable allowance for salaries: A reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered: Provided, however, That in the case of an unincorporated business the aggregate deduction for services rendered by the individual owners or members actively engaged in the conduct of the unincorporated business shall in no event exceed 20 percent of the new income of such business computed without benefit of this deduction: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to exempt any salary or other compensation for personal services from taxation as a part of the taxable income of the person receiving the same.'

"SEC. 9. Section 4 of title IV of article I of said act is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4. Installment sales: If a person reports any portion of his income from installment sales for Federal income-tax purposes under section 44 of the Federal Internal Revenue Code and as the same may hereafter be amended, and if such income is subject to tax under this article, he may report such income under this article in the same manner and upon the same basis as the same was reported by him for Federal income-tax purposes, if such method of reporting is accepted and approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.'

"SEC. 10. Subsections (a) of section 2 of title V of article I of said act are amended to read as follows:

"'(a) Residents and nonresidents: Every nonresident of the District receiving income subject to tax under this article and every resident of the District, except fiduciaries, when—

"'(1) his gross income for the taxable year exceeds $1,000, if single, or if married and not living with husband or wife; or

"'(2) his gross income for the taxable year exceeds $2,000, if married and living with husband or wife; or

"'(3) his gross sales or gross receipts from any trade or business exceeds $5,000, regardless of the amount of his gross income; or

"'(4) the combined gross income for the taxable year of husband and wife living together exceeds $2,000 in the aggregate or the combined gross sales or gross receipts from any trade or business exceeds $5,000 regardless of the amount of their gross income.'

"SEC. 11. Section 3 of title VI of article I of said act is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3. Imposition and rate of tax: There is hereby annually levied and imposed for each taxable year upon the taxable income of every resident a tax at the following rates:

"'Two percent on the first $2,000 of taxable income.

"'Three percent on the next $3,000 of taxable income.

"'Four percent on the next $5,000 of taxable income.

"'Five percent on the taxable income in excess of $10,000.'

"SEC. 12. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to make such changes in section 4 of title VI of article I of said act as are consistent with the provisions of sections 1 through 11 above.

"SEC. 13. Title VIII of article I of said act is repealed.

"SEC. 14. Section 10 (a) (4) of title XII of article I of said act is amended to read as follows:

"'(4) For the purposes of subsections (a) (1), (a) (2), and (a) (3), a return filed before the last day prescribed by law for the filing thereof shall be considered as filed on such last day.'

"SEC. 15. The proviso to section 11 of title XII of article I of said act is amended to read as follows: 'Provided, That if it shall be determined by the Assessor, the Board of Tax Appeals for the District of Columbia, or any court that any part of any tax which was assessed as a deficiency under the provisions of section 5 of this title was an overpayment, interest shall be allowed and paid upon such overpayment of tax at the rate of 4 percent per annum from the date such overpayment was paid until the date of refund, and in addition thereto any interest upon such overpayment which was paid by the taxpayer shall be refunded.'

"SEC. 19. Section 2 (b) of title III of article I of said act is amended by adding thereto the following new paragraph:

"'(14) Dues and initiation fees in the case of any club organized and operated exclusively for pleasure and recreation, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private individual or shareholder. As used in this subsection, the word "dues" means only sums paid or incurred by members on a monthly, quarterly, annual, or other periodic basis for the privilege of being members of such club and any pro rata assessment made against the members as such; the word "dues" does not include any sums paid or incurred by members or their guests for food, beverages, or other tangible personal property purchased or for the use of the club's social, athletic, sporting, and other facilities; and the term "initiation fees" includes any payment, contribution, or loan, required as a condition precedent to membership, whether or not any such payment, contribution, or loan is evidenced by a certificate of interest or indebtedness.'

"SEC. 21. The provisions of this title shall be applicable to taxable years beginning after the 31st day of December 1948."

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the amendment?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It will be noticed that the amendment would increase the income tax in all brackets.

The amendment provides for the following income tax:

Two percent on the first $2,000 of taxable income.

Three percent of the next $3,000 of taxable income.

Four percent on the next $5,000 of taxable income.

Five percent on the taxable income in excess of $10,000.

It will be found that the amendment raises the present income-tax rate. The bill provides for a $4,000 exemption on everyone before the personal exemptions are applied. Do Senators think such a thing as that should be done, and then provide for a sales tax? Should such a thing be done when there is a source, as can be seen from studying my amendment, from which increased taxes can be obtained? Under the terms of the bill a married man would receive an exemption of $6,000. Is that the right kind of income-tax provision? The rates provided in the committee bill are the lowest income-tax rates in the United States. We can adopt my amendment to provide for increased income tax and also include my amendment which provides for an increase in the liquor tax, and it will be found that we do not need a sales tax.

My next amendment would strike out the sales tax altogether.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Are we to understand that the exemption at present is $6,000?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The provisions of the committee bill give a $4,000 exemption before the other exemptions apply.

Mr. ELLENDER. What is the present exemption in the law?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The exemption in the present law is $1,000 for a single person and $2,000 for a married couple. But the committee bill would give a $4,000 exemption to begin with, and also retain the $1,000 exemption for a single man and $2,000 for a married couple.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the Senator know how much the committee bill would reduce the tax source?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I do not know and I do not believe the committee knows either.

Mr. ELLENDER. I wonder if the Senator who has charge of the bill can tell us. In other words, does the bill provide for a reduction in the income taxes?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It provides for a reduction in the income taxes, and a sales tax was provided so that reduction in income taxes would be acted on favorably by the House and the Senate.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I should be glad to answer the distinguished Senator from Louisiana. The bill as presented for the consideration of the Senate will increase the income taxes by approximately $800,000. Answering the Senator's first question, I may say that we purposely exempted income up to $4,000, because as of today an income under $4,000 more or less places a person in the lower income group. If he is going to pay a sales tax, we did not at the same time want to impose an income tax on him.

Mr. ELLENDER. What is the present exemption?

Mr. HUNT. The present exemption is $1,000 for a single person and $2,000 for a married person.

Mr. ELLENDER. That has been increased to $4,000?

Mr. HUNT. We have increased it to $4,000, and we have also increased the rate of payment.

Mr. ELLENDER. That was my next question. What is the rate of payment at present for a single man with more than $1,000 income?

Mr. HUNT. It is graduated. I am not sure that I know exactly what the figures are, but I shall have them in a moment.

At the present time, on the first $5,000 the income tax is 1 percent.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is, with a $1,000 exemption. What is the proposed rate, with a $4,000 exemption?

Mr. HUNT. Does the Senator mean as provided by the bill?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. HUNT. We start with 1½ percent on the first $5,000 of taxable income, exempting $4,000; 2 percent on the next $5,000; 2½ percent on the third $5,000, and 3 percent on any taxable income in excess of $15,000. The rate of income tax for the District has not been made excessive, because I will say to the distinguished Senator that to my way of thinking the Federal Government is doing a pretty good job in its income-tax collections.

Mr. ELLENDER. Do I correctly understand the Senator to say that with the changes made in the income-tax law a total of $800,000 of additional money would be raised from that source?

Mr. HUNT. I am advised by counsel that this is a combined unincorporated business tax and income tax. On the combined taxes we show an increase of slightly in excess of $800,000.

Mr. ELLENDER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, what I was trying to bring to the attention of the Senate was that under the terms of the bill it makes no difference who the taxpayer is, or what he is paying; he receives an exemption of $4,000 before he even begins to pay a tax, plus all the other exemptions he may be allowed. That is what the bill would do to the present law.

Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss this question at length, but I do want the yeas and nays on my amendment, because I feel that this is a very important question. Under the provisions of the bill as it is written, those who ought to be paying taxes would be exempted. If the District needs additional revenue, they certainly ought to pay taxes.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HUNT. Does the proposed amendment delete the sales-tax feature from the bill?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. This particular amendment does not.

Mr. President, I should like to modify my amendment by striking out, on page 1, lines 1 and 2, which deal with the sales tax. That would leave the amendment to deal with the income tax.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the right to modify his amendment.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question. Suppose his amendment as modified is adopted. What will be the exemption?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The exemption will be $1,000 for a single person, $2,000 for a married person, and $500 additional for each dependent.

Mr. ELLENDER. How does the rate differ from that in the present law?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I read the rates a little while ago.

Mr. ELLENDER. To what extent are the rates increased?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I desire to withdraw the modification of my amendment.

Answering the Senator's question, the rates will be found on page 7 of the amendment. They are: 2 percent on the first $2,000 of taxable income——

Mr. ELLENDER. That represents an increase of how much over the present rate?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I believe the present rate is 1 percent. The rates are approximately doubled all the way through. My estimate is that this amendment would double income taxes in the District of Columbia.

Mr. ELLENDER. To what extent would the Senator's proposal raise the tax in the higher brackets—say from $10,000 up?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The rate is 3 percent on the next $3,000 of taxable income, 4 percent on the next $5,000 of taxable income, and 5 percent on taxable income in excess of $10,000.

Mr. ELLENDER. Has the Senator stated how much it is anticipated this additional tax would raise?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think it would more than double the amount, but it would require an expert on taxes to give the exact answer.

Mr. ELLENDER. I should like to have an answer to that question for the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am informed that under this amendment $11,990,000 would be raised. At the present time such taxes raise $4,200,000. This would increase the revenue of the District $7,990,000. I am showing the Senate where we can get the necessary revenue without hurting anyone, and with equitable treatment for all taxpayers. That is the purpose of all my amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] for himself and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on public business.

The Senators from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ and Mr. ANDERSON], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] are absent on official business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] is absent by leave of the Senate and is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] who is absent on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] would vote "yea" and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], and the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are absent on official business.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] are detained on official business. If present and voting the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 27, as follows:

So the amendment B, offered by Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina for himself and Mr. NEELY, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have another amendment, C, which would strike out the provision for the sales tax; but I wish to be fair in presenting the amendment. I do not believe quite enough revenue would be raised by the bill without the inclusion of the sales-tax provision.

So all we can do at this time, as I see the situation, is to vote either for or against the bill as it now stands, with the revenue-raising provisions which it includes at the present time. In view of the way Senators have been voting on the amendments and in view of the way they have been expressing themselves in regard to the proposed sales-tax provisions, I am confident that they would not vote for this measure if they did not feel it would provide sufficient revenue for the District of Columbia.

As I have said, I wish to be entirely frank about the matter. Senators will have a chance to vote either for or against the proposed sales tax when they vote on the question of the final passage of the bill.

Therefore, I would ask for a vote on the question of the final passage of the bill; and on that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. IVES. Are we now considering the amendment marked "C"?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. No; I have not offered it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. What are we about to vote on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question has not yet been stated.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I understood that the yeas and nays were requested.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. PEPPER. I have been one of those who have been voting with the able Senator from South Carolina, I am not in favor of a sales tax of any kind.

Of course, all of us realize that the District of Columbia must have revenue.

What does the Senator from South Carolina propose? If the bill is voted down, is it the opinion of the Senator from South Carolina that another bill can be devised to provide the necessary revenue, without including in it provision for a sales tax?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think so. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to offer the amendment marked C; but I wish to be perfectly frank, and so I say to the Senate that the amendment B, just adopted, will raise a little more than $10,000,000 of additional revenue. In addition, the whisky-tax amendment, which the Senate has adopted, will raise approximately $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 more. so the total amount to be raised by the amendments already adopted by the Senate is close to the amount which has been anticipated under the proposed sales tax.

Mr. President, if Senators wish to vote on my amendment C, I shall offer it. I think it would be well to dispose of it, and I am inclined to offer it.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the bill as it now stands provide sufficient money for the schools and social services in the District of Columbia?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The bill as now amended will provide additional revenue in the amount of approximately $10,000,000, which will come in under the District of Columbia income-tax law, as it would be amended by the amendment which has been adopted here. In addition, the bill as thus far amended will provide additional revenue under the whisky-tax amendment, which has been offered by me.

I wish to determine how much additional revenue will be obtained under the bill as thus far amended by the Senate.

Mr. HUNT. I should like to say that as the bill now stands, most certainly there is not sufficient revenue even to start to do anything for the schools, let alone attending to other necessary things.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. But there is approximately $10,000,000 additional.

Mr. HUNT. With the sales tax left in, we are in fine shape. With the sales tax out, we should be in dire distress.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. How much does the cigarette tax produce? That is included, but there was no such tax last year.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. MORSE. I want the floor in my own right.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I was absent from the floor a short time ago, attending the session of the Committee on Appropriations, when the distinguished Senator from South Carolina informed the Senate on this matter, but I should like to know what it is expected the amendment that was adopted a moment ago will accomplish.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The amendment we adopted just now increases the income tax brackets. It does not increase exemptions at all. It keeps the exemptions the same as they are at the present time, but it will raise approximately $9,900,000 additional revenue by means of income taxes, business and individual.

Mr. WHERRY. Is that the contention of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. No, it is not. That is the position of the Senator handling the bill, and is the position of those who are advocating the pending bill as reported by the committee. Those are not my figures. They are theirs. They are the figures presented by advocates of the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the Senator from South Carolina, in view of the greatly increased revenue that has been voted, think that if the Federal contribution to the District were now eliminated, the District would have adequate funds with which to operate?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It would be close. My estimate is that it would probably lack about $3,000,000 or $4,000,000, something like that. I am interested in getting on with the amendments. I did not anticipate such questions, but I would say about $4,000,000. My guess would be, it would be within about $4,000,000 of the amount necessary.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to point out to the Senator, as the floor leader of the opposition to the bill, in view of the amendment just adopted, it seems to me it would be a great mistake to go further with this legislation tonight. I certainly think we ought to have the benefit of a subsequent report by the committee. I should like to move to recommit the bill.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question only, now, in order that I may not lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island desire to ask a question?

Mr. McGRATH. I do not care for the floor in order to ask a question. I want to make a statement with reference to the suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. In view of the action taken by the Senate on the Senator's most recent amendment, the income-tax amendment, is it not true that the amendment not only increased the rates, but also extended the coverage of the District of Columbia income tax?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Is it not true then, according to page 3 of the minority views, that the effect of the adoption of the amendment is that the yield and the levy under the amendment would be raised by $5,000,000 in a full year on those already paying income taxes, and another $10,000,000, by raising the rate to 2 percent on the first $2,000 of taxable income and graduating it to 5 percent on taxable incomes in excess of $10,000?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is true.

Mr. HUMPHREY. So that in fact is it not true that we have by that one amendment increased the revenues for the District of Columbia by $15,000,000?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It is close to that.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President——

Mr. HUMPHREY. May I first get an answer? I am confused on this, and I should like to know.

Mr. HUNT. Certainly. But the Senator is getting a wrong answer.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should say $15,000,000, minus. It raises $15,000,000. Under the amendment the income tax will bring in $15,000,000, but the amount that is being raised at the present time is about $4,200,000. I think that is the answer. The net increase would be somewhere close to $10,000,000. Nobody knows, of course, just what it would be.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. There must be some confusion then, I may say to the Senator from South Carolina, because the minority views go on to state that the $15,000,000 additional revenue which can be raised by the amendment just adopted more than covers the revenue the majority would expect to raise from the sales tax in the full year. I think we ought to have a clear understanding of it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. For the information of the Senator, the minority views so state, and I agree with the minority view. But when I quote the other figures, I am quoting the figures of the opposition. In attempting to anticipate the revenue to be derived from such a proposal as this, the Senator will find that no one knows. It is a matter of speculation to a very large extent. My figure would be somewhere between the two figures mentioned.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Will the Senator yield for a final question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Did the Senator not estimate that there would be $3,000,000 additional revenue under the alcoholic-beverage tax?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Approximately that.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Of course, all these things must be approximations, even the sales tax. But is it not true, according to the figures stated in the minority views, which figures I have not had a chance to check, but which I think I should at least accept as being reasonably authoritative, that $15,000,000 would be raised by the amendment just adopted by the Senate, relative to the income tax, and an additional $3,000,000 by the alcoholic-beverage tax, a total of $18,000,000, which is all that was contemplated under the terms of the committee bill providing for a sales tax and a compensatory-use tax for the District of Columbia?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I agree with the Senator; I think the amendment adopted will provide sufficient revenue to take the place of the sales tax alone, but the Senator will find that the bill provides for the raising of additional revenue. Some such provisions are still in the bill, of course, at the present time. We merely struck out the sales tax. But the Senator will find certain other increases. I do not think we would go very far wrong in simply passing the bill as it now stands, striking out the sales tax. With what has been provided through the amendment which has been adopted, I do not think the sales tax is needed. The revenue to be obtained without it, I think, would be very close to the necessary amount; and I think the District would get along much better than it did during the past year.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Can someone inform the Senator from Illinois now how much revenue the bill will raise, with the amendments that have been added?

Mr. HUNT. I can answer the question.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should be glad to have the Senator from Wyoming answer the question. He has the figures on other phases of it.

Mr. HUNT. The income-tax amendment that has just been adopted will increase the income $6,690,000. The liquor amendment which was adopted will increase the income $2,600,000. The real estate tax increase—I am speaking, also, with reference to the increase already written in the bill—will increase the income $2,400,000. There is a cigarette tax in the bill which, if it shall pass, will bring in $1,000,000. So, in round figures, it leaves the District of Columbia approximately $12,000,000 short.

I think the junior Senator from Oregon has made a very good suggestion, namely, that instead of our acting finally on the bill this evening, with no Senator exactly knowing the score, let us wait until Monday and do the job correctly.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, my question has not yet been answered to my own satisfaction. A certain amount of money would be raised by the sales tax, under the original bill brought in by the committee. We have accepted two amendments which increase the amount. What I am trying to find out is how much more money will these amendments produce than would the original bill reported by the committee.

Mr. HUNT. In round figures, quite close to $11,000,000.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, at the first opportunity I should like to make a motion to take a recess until Monday. Certainly something must be done in the way of a reconsideration of the last amendment, because, if $11,000,000 more than is necessary is voted for the District——

SEVERAL SENATORS. No! No!

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. We have not yet voted on the last amendment.

Mr. HUNT. The amendments which have been adopted today will increase the revenue, exclusive of the sales tax, by $11,000,000. We need $18,000,000.

Mr. LUCAS. But there is a provision to make a Federal contribution.

Mr. HUNT. That amendment was defeated. I am taking into consideration the presently existing Federal contribution.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. The Federal contribution is not included in the bill. The bill provides only for taxes in addition to what are already in existence. The Federal payment will be provided for in the appropriation bill. The calculation on which we are working contemplates that the contribution for next year will be at least as much as it was last year, namely, $12,000,000.

I do not know whether it is the disposition of the Senate to write the bill on the floor of the Senate. If that be the disposition, it is perfectly all right with me. I shall be very happy to relinquish all responsibility for it. I do not believe a tax bill can be intelligently written in that way. I do not accept the figures which the Senator from South Carolina has given us as to what his amendment will accomplish, but I think every Senator, if he considers the amendment and thinks about what it would do to the business of the District of Columbia, will regret the vote, because I will state, in all frankness, that in the long run the income-tax proposals of the Senator from South Carolina will drive people out of the District and will reduce the amount of money received from taxes. It is a mistake to think that the District of Columbia can get any such sum out of income taxes. If what the Senator from South Carolina has said is correct, it means that out of income taxes we will get 20 percent of the total revenue needed to run the District. That is not true. I do not believe there is a city or a State anywhere in the United States that receives in excess of 5 percent of its total revenues out of income taxes. The amendments we have adopted would require the permanent residents of the District of Columbia—not our employees, but the people who have to live and work and earn their living here—to pay this tremendous sum for the operation of the District government.

So, Mr. President, I think we had better pause and decide what we should do. Are we capable, here on the floor of the Senate, of writing a tax bill by the amendment method? If Senators think we are, then jolly good luck; go ahead and do it. But I think we should give the committee a chance to have the bill passed and take it to conference and see what we can bring back from the conference.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to state, in reply to the Senator from Rhode Island, that the figures which I used a few moments ago I got from his own staff. It will be found that the amendment will increase the amount provided for in the bill approximately $9,900,000. The bill would increase it approximately $800,000. That is where approximately $10,000,000 comes in. It will mean that much additional revenue over the amount received last year.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, let us assume that the figures used are our figures; let us assume that we shall receive approximately $9,000,000. I will say to the Senator, that is an unconscionable amount to expect to get out of the permanent taxpayers of the District of Columbia. It is an unconscionable percentage for those taxpayers to contribute to the support of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, let me say one thing more. When we collect taxes by imposing an income-tax law, we are doing wrong, according to the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island. We would collect $18,000,000 from a sales tax, imposing the tax on everyone in the city, whether or not he is able to pay the tax. The income-tax increase is still below that of many States in the Union which have income taxes.

The Senator says we will run people out of the District. They will not go back to South Carolina. There is an income-tax law there. It is an income tax which is higher than the present tax.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. FREAR. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina this question: What difference in revenue would the amendment just adopted make as compared with the part of the original bill eliminated by the amendment?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The amendment would raise approximately $9,900,000, I am informed.

Mr. FREAR. But would it bring in new revenue?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It would raise approximately $9,000,000 more.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, may I inquire whether the bill, as amended, and as it is now before us, continues to include a sales-tax provision?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is correct. I have another amendment to offer which would take it out.

Mr. CAIN. But, in the Senator's opinion, the sales tax continues to be in the bill?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. I thank the Senator from Washington. That is what I wanted to bring out.

Mr. CAIN. From the way in which I read the Senator's amendment, which has not been modified, he has already eliminated the sales tax from the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. There are two amendments at the desk. I think the one which was adopted——

Mr. CAIN. May I suggest that the Senator spoke of modifying his amendment, but the modification was never accepted, and there is no sales tax on the basis of the adoption of the recent amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad the Senator from Washington brought out the point he mentioned. I was attempting to do it a moment ago. I submit to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina that this is not the way to legislate. I agree implicitly with the statement made by the Senator from Rhode Island. I beg the Senator to yield the floor so that the junior Senator from Oregon may renew his motion to send the bill back to the committee, and let the committee bring back a bill at some future date which will iron out all these propositions, and in order that we may not have to continue to legislate, as we are doing now, on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I wish to make the record clear as to one matter. The present income tax revenue is $4,200,000. If the bill is passed it will bring in revenue of $11,990,000, which is an increase of $7,990,000 over the present revenue.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question only?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. For a question only.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to question the figures the Senator is presenting in regard to the effect of the amendment the Senate has just agreed to, to make certain whether or not he is correct in the interpretation he makes. I wonder if the Senator would turn to page 6101 of yesterday's RECORD, and looking at the first column, will the Senator answer this question: Is it not true that the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to change income-tax rates and exemptions is identical with the recommendation of the minority in the House of Representatives signed by Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. GRANGER, Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. MILLER, Mr. KILEN, and Mr. MORRISON? Is not the Senator's amendment the proposal of the House minority in regard to changes in income-tax rates?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It is. I wish to state that I am quoting here figures presented to me by the proponents of the bill.

Mr. MORSE. I understand that.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. This is what some others said it would raise. It is hard to tell about how much will come in the income tax.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to bring out, however, that the minority of the House committee, in its computation as to the effect of the Senator's amendment, reports that it will provide $15,000,000, rather than the smaller figure which the Senator from South Carolina states. Therefore, if the Senator will permit me to make a motion. I should like to make a motion, but unless he yields for the purpose and I get unanimous consent, I cannot make it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. In view of the confusion which exists at the present time with respect to the bill, and actually as to what it means as the result of the amendments, it seems to the Senator from Illinois that perhaps we might take a recess from now until Monday, and in the meantime the committee could have opportunity to get together tomorrow and ascertain definitely through the experts and through their own knowledge of the legislation, exactly what it means, and perhaps could come in Monday with an agreement and a settlement of the whole problem.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I should like to ask the Chair whether the amendment which was proposed by the Senator from South Carolina, and which was adopted by the Senate, did not eliminate the sales-tax proposal from the pending bill. I should like to ask the Chair that question, because it is my understanding it did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated that just a few moments ago.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That it did?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Then I suggest that we proceed with the vote on the bill as amended, from which the sales tax has been eliminated.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Who has the floor?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I have.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. For a question only.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I should like to ask the Senator if I did not go over to his desk prior to casting my vote in favor of his amendment, and ask him the specific question whether he had taken the sales-tax issue out of his amendment, so that the sales-tax issue was not affected by his amendment, and did not the Senator tell me—I so understood him, and I believe he was utterly sincere at the time—that the sales-tax issue had been eliminated from his amendment, but was still in the bill, because I told the Senator that I was for the sales tax? Am I correct in my statement?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, the Senator did come to my desk and discuss the matter with me. At that time there was confusion as to what amendment was before the Senate, and I had made a motion, if the Chair will recall, to strike out certain features of one of the amendments that I thought was up, when some Senators called to my attention the fact that I was about to amend the wrong amendment. Then I turned and we went back to this amendment. That is what took place in the situation, I think. I am sorry if the Senator was misled.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I hope the Senator understands, or I will ask him if he does understand, that a substantial influence in my casting my vote in favor of his amendment was that I understood what I have just stated as to the Senator's amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I want to explain for the record that there was confusion as to what amendment was up at that time, and I was also calling the attention of the Chair to the fact that there was another amendment on the desk.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I should like to have the Senator know that under all these circumstances, and with my misunderstanding of the assurance I thought I had had from the Senator, I intend to move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, when I can get the floor in my own right.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. In view of the ruling of the Chair as to the intent and the impact of the amendment which was presented by the Senator from South Carolina and adopted by the Senate, and in view of what the distinguished Senator from Oregon has said, and accurately said, that the amendment on the income-tax increase and broadening coverage involves $15,000,000 additional revenue, and in view of the fact that the remainder of the bill as presented by the committee offers $2,400,000 for a real-estate-tax increase, $800,000 for unincorporated business tax increase, and that the so-called whisky amendment would yield an additional $3,000,000, there are items of $15,000,000, and $2,400,000, and $3,000,000, and $800,000, or a total of $21,200,000 worth of revenue provided in the measure which has already been thus far approved; all we need is a positive vote of the Senate, and the District of Columbia will have $21,200,000 in revenue.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield the floor?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. I share the view of the distinguished Senator from Iowa. When I cast my vote on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, I was under the impression that he had modified the amendment so as to strike out the portion which deleted the sales tax. If that is not the case, and the sales tax has been deleted, I wish to say that, if a motion to reconsider shall be made, I shall vote to reconsider, for I am in favor of both the sales tax and the income tax.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield the floor?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I have not yet finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa wants to make a motion. Does the Senator yield the floor?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Wait a minute. I will yield for a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa wants to make a motion. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield the floor for that purpose?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have the floor, and I should like to discuss this further if there are any questions any Senator would like to ask.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is whether or not the Senator will yield the floor so that the Senator from Iowa may make a motion.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I would not want to yield the floor to recommit the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is not proposing to move to recommit. He wants to make a motion to reconsider the vote. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield the floor?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I want to discuss this matter just a minute. If any Senator has voted under a misapprehension respecting the sales tax I should be glad to remedy the situation in any way I can. But I am certain that the Senate voted to increase the income tax. If the Senate wants to amend that amendment I would be glad to have the Senate reconsider that part of it, if it desires to do so, but I do not see why, when the Senate knows that it voted in favor of increasing the income tax, it should reconsider the matter at all. That is my position. I sent an amendment to the desk increasing the income tax, but I did not send the other one to the desk, which would strike out the sales tax. Then the Senate voted on the amendment before it. That is what happened. I should like to have the Senate do what it wants to do. Naturally, I want to do away with the sales tax. I am glad the Senate voted as it did. But at the same time I do not want to confuse any Senator and have him vote under a misapprehension.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the Senator not recall having stated that it was his purpose to delete that part of the amendment which would strike out the sales tax?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That was the intention of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. ELLENDER. Exactly. And I so heard the Senator state.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. ELLENDER. Otherwise, I would not have voted for the amendment. The same is also true of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina, in view of his having made the statement of his desire not to delete at this particular point the sales tax provision, whether or not now, in retrospect, when we see that we have $21,200,000 worth of revenue already provided by what has already been done thus far in the Senate without the sales tax, it would not be a very practical suggestion at this moment to offer an amendment, just to make positively sure that everything is clear and above board, to eliminate the sales tax from the bill?

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, I have just listened to the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, and I wish to state for the information of the Senate that he is entirely in error in his summary of the money that would be raised by the amendment which was just adopted.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to ask the Senator two or three very brief questions. Is it not true that it was the understanding of the Senator from South Carolina when we voted on the so-called income-tax amendment that the sales-tax provision was still in the bill?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is true.

Mr. MORSE. Is it not also true that the Senator from South Carolina understood that the rest of us on the floor of the Senate were of the same understanding?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I can imagine that was so. I cannot read the minds of Senators.

Mr. MORSE. Will not the Senator from South Carolina agree with me then that it is only fair that we proceed now to reconsider that vote, and vote on the amendment which the Senator from South Carolina started to submit when he asked permission to delete from the amendment the lines which would have eliminated the sales-tax provision? Should we not now proceed to vote on the basis of what was our understanding at the time, that if we voted for the income-tax amendment, we would be voting for it with the sales-tax provision still in the bill? We have to be fair about this matter, and I think fairness requires that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to should be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from South Carolina now yield to the Senator from Iowa to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to know just exactly what the Senator's question is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa wants to move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted which included the sales tax as well as the income tax.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Chair this question. Can the bill now, as amended, or the amendment just adopted, be amended, by striking out that part which has reference to the sales tax, and adopting the part containing the income tax? If that can be done I shall agree to that much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would first be necessary that a motion be made to reconsider, and that then the amendment be voted on relating solely to the income tax.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I certainly do not want the Senate to be misled. Much as I want the income tax and much as I abhor the sales tax, I can do nothing else than yield for the purpose of the Senator from Iowa to make a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted the last amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON].

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, this is a very important matter. It is apparent from the debate which has been going on here that a tremendous amount of confusion exists as to exactly what this amendment means, and what its ultimate purport would be so far as raising revenue for the District is concerned when it is considered in relation to the other phases of the bill.

Therefore, Mr. President, under those circumstances it seems to me that the Senate in its best wisdom and judgment should take a recess until Monday, with the view of having the committee and other Members of the Senate study the debate and what has happened here today, and get together and come back here Monday to vote upon the motion to reconsider.

Therefore, I move that the Senate stand in recess until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, May 16, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 13 (legislative day of April 11), 1949:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY

Francis P. Matthews, of Nebraska, to be Secretary of the Navy.

Dan A. Kimball, of California, to be Under Secretary of the Navy.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY

Gordon Gray, of North Carolina, to be Under Secretary of the Army.

IN THE NAVY

Vice Adm. John L. McCrea, United States Navy, to have the grade, rank, pay, and allowances of a vice admiral while serving as director of the staff, Personnel Policy Board, National Military Establishment.

SENATE

MONDAY, MAY 16, 1949

(Legislative day of Monday, April 11, 1949)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of all mercy, bowing at this noontide altar may we be vividly conscious that we need not turn back to bygone centuries to hear Thy voice, as if Thou dost speak no longer in these present days. Give us ears to hear Thy imperial imperatives above the noise of crashing systems, yea, in and through the change and confusion of our troubled day when Thou art searching out the souls of men before Thy judgment seat. So, hearing and heeding the voice divine, may our compassion help to heal the open sores of the world as here we serve the present age our calling to fulfill. In the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. LUCAS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 13, 1949, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILL

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on May 13, 1949, the President had approved and signed the act (S. 227) for the relief of Stone & Cooper Coal Co., Inc.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 679. An act to authorize the admission of Mrs. Julia Balint to the United States;

H. R. 2360. An act for the relief of Theodore Papachristopoulos; and

S. J. Res. 42. Joint resolution granting the consent and approval of Congress to an interstate compact relating to the better utilization of the fisheries (marine, shell, and anadromous) of the Gulf coast and creating the Gulf States Marine Fisheries Commission.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

On request of Mr. SALTONSTALL, and by unanimous consent, Mr. HENDRICKSON was excused from attendance on the session of the Senate today.

On request of Mr. LUCAS, and by unanimous consent, Mr. PEPPER was excused from attendance on the Senate today.

Mr. BALDWIN asked and obtained consent to be absent from the Senate today.

Mr. KERR asked and obtained consent to be absent from the Senate from Wednesday through Friday of this week, because of public business.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, in order that I may appear before the grand jury in New York tomorrow, I ask unanimous consent to be absent from the Senate until 3:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCMAHON subsequently said: Mr. President, during the quorum call this morning, the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy was in session with the Joint Chiefs of Staff. I ask unanimous consent that this announcement be placed after the quorum call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President——

AMENDMENT OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION CHARTER ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 900) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, and for other purposes, which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 2 of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (Public Law No. 806, 80th Cong.) is amended by deleting the words "direction and control of its Board of Directors" at the end of the said section and substituting therefor the words "supervision and direction of the Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as the 'Secretary')."

SEC. 2. Section 4 (h) of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended by deleting the second sentence thereof and inserting in its place the following: "The Corporation shall have power to acquire personal property necessary to the conduct of its business but shall not have power to acquire real property or any interest therein except that it may (a) rent or lease office space necessary for the conduct of its business and (b) acquire real property or any interest therein for the purpose of providing storage adequate to carry out effectively and efficiently any of the Corporation's programs, or of securing or discharging obligations owing to the Corporation, or of otherwise protecting the financial interests of the Corporation: Provided, That the authority contained in this subsection (h) shall not be utilized by the Corporation for the purpose of acquiring real property, or any interest therein, in order to provide storage facilities for any commodity unless the Corporation determines that existing privately owned storage facilities for such commodity in the area concerned are not adequate: And provided further, That nothing contained in this subsection (h) shall limit the duty of the Corporation, to the maximum extent practicable consistent with the fulfillment of the Corporation's purposes and the effective and efficient conduct of its business, to utilize the usual and customary channels, facilities, and arrangements of trade and commerce in the warehousing of commodities: And provided further, That to encourage the storage of grain on farms, where it can be stored at the lowest cost, the Corporation shall make loans not to exceed 17½ cents per bushel of the estimated crop to grain growers needing storage facilities when such growers shall apply to the Corporation for financing the construction or purchase of suitable storage, and these loans shall be deducted from the proceeds of price support loans or purchase agreements made between the Corporation and the growers."

SEC. 3. Section 9 of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. Directors, Advisory Board: (a) The management of the Corporation shall be vested in a board of directors (hereinafter referred to as the 'Board'), subject to the general supervision and direction of the Secretary. The Secretary shall be an ex officio director and shall serve as Chairman of the Board. The Board shall consist of six members (in addition to the Secretary), who shall be appointed by, and hold office at the pleasure of, the Secretary. In addition to their duties as members of the Board, such appointed members shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by the Secretary. Each appointed member of the Board shall receive compensation at such rate not in excess of the maximum then payable under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, as may be fixed by the Secretary, except that any such member who holds another office or position under the Federal Government the compensation for which exceeds such rate may elect to receive compensation at the rate provided for such office or position in lieu of the compensation provided by this section. A majority of the directors shall constitute a quorum of the Board and action shall be taken only by a majority vote of those present.

"(b) In addition to the Board of Directors there shall be an advisory board reflecting broad agricultural and business experience in its membership and consisting of five members appointed by the President of the United States, not more than three of whom shall belong to the same political party. The advisory board shall meet at the call of the Secretary, who shall require it to meet not less often than once each 90 days; shall survey the general policies of the Corporation, including its policies in connection with the purchase, storage, and sale of commodities, and the operation of lending and price-support programs; and shall advise the Secretary with respect thereto. Members of the advisory board shall receive for their services as members compensation of not to exceed $50 per diem when actually engaged in the performance of their duties as such, together with their necessary traveling expenses while going to and coming from meetings."

SEC. 4. Section 10 of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. Personnel of Corporation: The Secretary shall appoint such officers and employees as may be necessary for the conduct of the business of the Corporation, define their authority and duties, delegate to them such of the powers vested in the Corporation as he may determine, require that such of them as he may designate be bonded and fix the penalties therefor. The Corporation may pay the premium of any bond or bonds. With the exception of experts, appointments shall be made pursuant to the civil service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended (5 U. S. C., 1946 ed., 661)."

SEC. 5. Section 4 (c) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended—

(a) by inserting in the second sentence thereof after the word "jurisdiction" a comma and the following: "without regard to the amount in controversy,";

(b) by striking out the fourth sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "No suit by or against the Corporation shall be allowed unless (1) it shall have been brought within 6 years after the right accrued on which suit is brought, or (2) in the event that the person bringing such suit shall have been under legal disability or beyond the seas at the time the right accrued, the suit shall have been brought within 3 years after the disability shall have ceased or within 6 years after the right accrued on which suit is brought, whichever period is longer. The defendant in any suit by or against the Corporation may plead, by way of set-off or counterclaim, any cause of action, whether arising out of the same transaction or not, which would otherwise be barred by such limitation if the claim upon which the defendant's cause of action is based had not been barred prior to the date that the plaintiff's cause of action arose: Provided, That the defendant shall not be awarded a judgment on any such set-off or counterclaim for any amount in excess of the amount of the plaintiff's claim established in the suit."; and

(c) by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "except that (1) any such suit against the United States based upon any claim of the type enumerated in title 28, section 1491, of the United States Code, may be brought in the United States Court of Claims, and (2) no such suit against the United States may be brought in a district court unless such suit might, without regard to the provisions of this act, be brought in such court."

SEC. 6. Section 15 of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"USE OF WORDS 'COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION'

"(f) No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall use the words 'Commodity Credit Corporation' or a combination of these three words, as the name or a part thereof under which he or it shall do or purport to do business. Every individual, partnership, association, or corporation violating this prohibition shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both."

SEC. 7. The act entitled "An act to facilitate the execution of arrangements for the exchange of surplus agricultural commodities produced in the United States for reserve stocks of strategic and critical materials produced abroad," approved August 11, 1939, is amended to read as follows: "That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized, upon terms and conditions prescribed or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, to accept strategic and critical materials produced abroad in exchange for agricultural commodities acquired by the Corporation. Insofar as practicable, in effecting such exchange of goods, normal commercial trade channels shall be utilized and priority shall be given to commodities which serve as prime incentive goods to stimulate production of critical and strategic materials. The determination of which materials are strategic and critical and the determination of the quantities and qualities of such materials which are desirable for stock piling shall be made in the manner prescribed by section 2 of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act (60 Stat. 596). Strategic and critical materials acquired by Commodity Credit Corporation in exchange for agricultural commodities shall be transferred to the stock pile provided for by the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act; and the Commodity Credit Corporation shall be reimbursed for the strategic and critical materials so transferred to the stock pile from the funds made available for the purpose of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, in an amount equal to the fair market value, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, of the material transferred to the stock pile. Nothing contained herein shall limit the authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation to acquire, hold, or dispose of such quantity of strategic and critical materials as it deems advisable in carrying out its functions and protecting its assets."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. AIKEN, and Mr. YOUNG conferees on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a brief explanation perhaps is in order on the pending business that is before the Senate of the United States.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was about to state what the pending question is. The question is the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment which struck out the first four titles of the bill and inserted a substitute was adopted.

PROCEEDINGS ON QUORUM CALLS

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CAPEHART. I understand the rules of the Senate provide that Senators must answer to their names on quorum calls in order to be recorded as being present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the rule of the Senate.

Mr. CAPEHART. My parliamentary inquiry is: If after a Senator's name has been called, and he arrives before the roll call is completed, is he supposed to stand up and address the Chair and answer to his name?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The practice of the clerks at the desk is to enter the names of Senators if they see them present. When a quorum call is completed and a quorum is present, it is not customary or necessary for Senators to rise in their places. That is necessary on a yea-and-nay vote, but not on a quorum call.

Mr. CAPEHART. The reason I ask this question is that the able Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] was trying to obtain recognition a moment ago to have his name placed upon the quorum call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The name of the Senator from Nevada was placed upon the quorum call. He was present, and called that fact to the attention of the clerks, and his name was placed on the call.

Mr. CAPEHART. If a Senator arrives before the quorum call is completed, does the clerk have the right to place his name on the quorum call?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Provided his presence is brought to the attention of the clerk. That is necessary because it is impossible for the clerks to notice every Senator who may enter the Chamber while the roll call is in progress.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I tried to obtain recognition. I see no way in which a Senator can be sure that his name is on the roll call unless he obtains recognition, or unless he takes the trouble to walk to the desk and see that his name is on the quorum call. The Vice President of the United States has ruled that a Senator cannot get his name on the roll call after the roll is called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When a call is made for a quorum and a quorum is developed, it is not customary for Senators to rise and be recognized so that they may get their names on the quorum call. However, if they let the clerks at the desk know that they are present, their names are placed on the quorum call. The only object of a quorum call is to obtain a quorum; and when a quorum is developed, that is the end of it.

Mr. MALONE. Suppose a Senator arrives a little late at the desk, and the clerk has not previously noticed his presence. The ruling has been that once the roll is concluded, a Senator cannot get his name on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Each case depends upon its own situation. However, if a Senator is present during the quorum call, his name is placed upon the quorum call.

Mr. MALONE. I wish to enter a protest against not being recognized for the purpose of having my name placed on the quorum call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's protest will be entered.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, before the Senate begins discussing the motion to reconsider, offered by the able Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], I ask unanimous consent that Members of the United States Senate may have the opportunity of placing into the RECORD, without debate, routine matters as though we were in the morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication and letters, which were referred, as indicated:

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY (S. Doc. No. 76)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, amounting to $60,000, Federal Security Agency, fiscal year 1950 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON COOPERATION OF UNITED STATES WITH MEXICO IN CONTROL AND ERADICATION OF FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE

A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on cooperation of the United States with Mexico in the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease, for the month of March 1949 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION OF ALIENS

A letter from the Acting Attorney General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of orders of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization Service suspending deportation as well as a list of persons involved, together with a statement of the facts and pertinent provisions of law, and the reason for ordering such suspension (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PROPOSED TRANSFER BY NAVY DEPARTMENT OF NAVAL LANDING CRAFT TO COAST GUARD AUXILIARY FOUNDATION, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, reporting, pursuant to law, that the Coast Guard Auxiliary, Fourth Naval District, Foundation, of Philadelphia, Pa., had requested the Navy Department to transfer two landing craft for use by that organization in training personnel; to the Committee on Armed Services.

REPORT ON TORT CLAIMS PAID BY GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of tort claims paid by the General Accounting Office during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONSTRUCTION OF HIGHWAY FROM SAN BENITO TO RAMA, NICARAGUA

A letter from the Administrator of the Federal Works Agency, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize an appropriation for completing the construction of the highway from San Benito to Rama in the Republic of Nicaragua (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

INTER-AMERICAN HIGHWAY

A letter from the Administrator of the Federal Works Agency, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act entitled "An Act to provide for cooperation with Central American Republics in the construction of the Inter-American Highway," approved December 26, 1941 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Foreign Relation.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers and documents on the files of several departments and agencies of the Government which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with accompanying papers); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and Mr. LANGER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A resolution of the Legislature of the State of Florida; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"Senate Memorial 37

"Memorial to the Congress of the United States against the passage of any legislation providing for socialized medicine and compulsory health insurance

"Whereas strong pressure and propaganda is being used to urge the passage of socialized medicine and compulsory health insurance; and

"Whereas such legislation would seriously impair and practically destroy American enterprise and free initiative: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida:

"1. That the President and the Congress of the United States are hereby petitioned to vigorously oppose all legislation for the enactment of socialized medicine and compulsory health insurance.

"2. That copies of this memorial be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the President of the Senate in Congress and to each of Florida's Representatives in both the House and Senate in Congress.

"3. That a copy of this memorial be spread upon the Journal of both the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Florida and sufficient copies thereof be furnished to the press."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Tennessee; to the Committee on Finance:

"Senate Joint Resolution 51

"Whereas an admissions tax is among the taxes best adapted to local administration because it is fair and easy to administer, because it provides for a minimum of intermunicipal competition, and because it is being increasingly and successfully used by hundreds of municipalities throughout the country; and

"Whereas full utilization of this source by local governments is impossible because of the high Federal tax on admissions; and early reduction in or abolition of the Federal tax has been recommended by congressional committees, the Council of State Governments, the American Municipal Association, and other groups studying the problem of Federal-State-local fiscal relations; and

"Whereas the strengthening of local government finance is essential to the sound functioning of our democracy; and repeal of the Federal excise tax on admissions would be an important step toward the proper segregation of tax sources among the Federal, State, and local governments of the country; and

"Whereas the Tennessee Municipal League has asked the Legislature of Tennessee to pass enabling legislation authorizing municipal admissions taxes to the extent that the Federal admissions taxes are eliminated or reduced, in order that the serious financial difficulties of Tennessee municipalities may be relieved: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Tennessee (the house of representatives concurring therein), That Congress be requested to repeal forthwith the Federal excise tax on admissions; be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the Presiding Officer of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Tennessee.

"Passed April 11, 1949.

"WALTER M. HAYNES,
"Speaker of the Senate.
"MCALLEN FOUTCH,
"Speaker of the House of Representatives.

"Approved April 12, 1949.

"GORDON BROWNING,
"Governor."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 34

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States in relation to securing the release of film industry assets frozen in foreign countries

"Whereas American motion-picture studios have been sending abroad skeleton crews of trained film technicians for purposes of utilizing and drawing upon assets frozen in certain foreign countries; and

"Whereas as a result of such activity, many domestic motion picture workers have been thrown out of employment; and

"Whereas as a result of such activity, a serious economic plight confronts thousands of motion-picture workers, a plight aggravated in many instances by the expiration of unemployment insurance benefits; and

"Whereas the serious dislocation of so many motion-picture employees now affects not only the motion-picture industries of California but all other areas in the United States generally where pictures are made; and

"Whereas the refusal of certain foreign countries to release assets on American film studios, unless the latter draw upon these assets to defray film-production costs incurred in the foreign countries, induces American film studios to engage in such practices: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the President and the Congress of the United States are hereby respectfully memorialized and requested to urge the State Department to take such steps as are necessary to secure the release by foreign countries of frozen assets belonging to the American film industry, or to so alter the basis upon which these assets are presently released by foreign countries as to miminize the present disruption of the domestic film industry economy; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States from California."

A resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Delaware; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"House Resolution 42

"Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States with respect to a national compulsory sickness insurance program

"Whereas the American people now enjoy the highest level of health, the best standards of scientific medical care, and the finest medical institutions ever attained by any major country in the world; and

"Whereas these accomplishments of American medicine are the results of a free people working under a system of free enterprise; and

"Whereas in all countries where government has assumed control of medical care the experience has been a progressive deterioration of medical standards and medical care, to the detriment of the health of the people: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the One Hundred and Fifteenth General Assembly—

"That the Legislature of the State of Delaware respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to refrain from imposing upon the citizens of this Nation any form of compulsory insurance, or any system of medical care designed for national bureaucratic control; and

"That the Honorable JOHN J. WILLIAMS, the Honorable J. ALLEN FREAR, JR., and the Honorable J. CALEB BOGGS, Members of the Congress of the United States from Delaware, be and they are hereby respectfully requested to oppose the enactment of such legislation; and

"That the chief clerk of the house transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Presiding Officers of the United States Senate and the United States House of Representatives and to each Senator and Congressman from Delaware."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii; to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 39

"Concurrent resolution requesting the Congress of the United States of America to enact legislation authorizing the United States of America to convey and the Hawaii Housing Authority to acquire the land, improvements and appurtenances comprising the Kalihi war homes project (TH-51030) at Honolulu, T. H.

"Whereas during World War II the United States of America acquired the land and constructed the Kalihi war homes project (TH-51030) at Honolulu, T. H., as a war-housing project; and

"Whereas the said project was constructed in such manner that it is suitable for a permanent housing project in accordance with local laws and ordinances; and

"Whereas as a result of World War II and the war effort of the entire United States of America in the Pacific area, there has existed and will continue to exist for many years at said Honolulu an acute housing shortage; and

"Whereas the present Federal law requires the demolition of the said project by January 1, 1950, unless extended by the Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency after reporting to the Congress of the United States of America; and

"Whereas the provisions of the Lanham Act have consistently required disposal of temporary war-housing projects as materials, indicating that such temporary war housing is as expendable an item of World War II as the products of those installations they were built to serve: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-fifth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is hereby respectfully requested to enact legislation authorizing the United States of America to convey and the Hawaii Housing Authority (an instrumentality of the said Territory) to acquire the said Kalihi war-homes project, without compensation to the United States of America, to be operated by the said Hawaii Housing Authority under Territorial law relating to housing; and be it further

"Resolved, That duly authenticated copies of this concurrent resolution be transmitted to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America, to the Secretary of the Interior, to the Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, and to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii."

Resolutions of the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relating to the repeal of the Federal tax on oleomargarine; ordered to lie on the table.

(See text of resolutions printed in full when presented by Mr. SALTONSTALL (for himself and Mr. LODGE) on May 13, 1949, p. 6159, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

A resolution of the Senate of the State of Ohio, relating to the commutation of the sentence of Ilse Koch; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(See text of resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. BRICKER on May 13, 1949, p. 6159, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

A resolution adopted by the forty-ninth annual convention of the Retail Merchants Association of Texas and allied organizations, meeting jointly in Dallas, Tex., relating to governmental economy, and so forth; to the Committee on Finance.

A resolution adopted by the Delta Council of Mississippi, Cleveland, Miss., relating to communism; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Resolutions adopted by the Board of Supervisors of Erie County, N. Y., and the Common Council of the city of West Warwick, R. I., favoring the enactment of legislation proclaiming October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Resolutions adopted by the Connecticut Dental Hygienists' Association of Bridgeport, Conn.; the Kentucky and Southern Indiana Hearing Aid Dealers Association, of Louisville, Ky.; the Woman's Auxiliary of the Nebraska State Medical Association; the Oklahoma State Dental Association, of Oklahoma City, Okla.; the St. Joseph (Mo.) Chamber of Commerce; and the house of delegates of the Wisconsin State Dental Society, of Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against the enactment of legislation providing compulsory health insurance; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

By Mr. GREEN (for himself and Mr. MCGRATH):

A resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America with relation to Senate Act No. 362 to bring about substantial equity between local and Federal taxpayers with respect to Federal-owned real property in respective States

"Whereas the Federal Government owns one-fourth of the total area of the United States which is about one-half billion acres; and

"Whereas in Rhode Island, the smallest of the States, the holdings of the Federal Government represent a considerable section of the real estate therein contained; and

"Whereas as in other sections of the country most of this is tax exempt irrespective of 46 separate provisions of law providing for payments in lieu of taxes in as many specific and isolated circumstances; and

"Whereas this situation has disrupted the tax bases of local governments and has imposed an unfair burden on the remaining real property which is taxable; and

"Whereas there is now pending in the Senate of the United States Senate Act No. 362, providing for contributions to States and local governmental units in lieu of taxes on real property held by the Federal Government; creating a commission to determine and pay such contributions, thereby bringing about substantial equity between local and Federal taxpayers with respect to Federal-owned property: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States of America be and they are earnestly requested to use their sincere efforts to have enacted into statutory law Senate Act No. 362 now before the Senate of the United States; and the Secretary of State is hereby directed to transmit to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States duly certified copies of this resolution."

REORGANIZATION OF GOVERNMENT AGENCIES—RESOLUTION OF MADISON (WIS.) COMMITTEE ON HOOVER COMMISSION FINDINGS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received this morning the text of a resolution adopted by the Wisconsin Committee on Hoover Commission Findings, at Madison, Wis., on May 5, 1949. This resolution urges support by myself and my colleagues of S. 526, the Reorganization Act of 1949.

I know that my brother Senators are deeply interested in implementing the Hoover Commission Reports, just as I am, and for that reason I ask unanimous consent that the text of this important resolution from the Wisconsin Committee be appropriately referred and printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government has declared in its report to the Eighty-first Congress that it is necessary to reenact and broaden the power of the President to initiate reorganization plans of the executive branch of the Government; and

Whereas the Commission has recommended that such authority should be given to the President and that the power of the President to prepare and transmit plans of reorganization to the Congress should not be restricted by limitations or exemptions of any executive department or agency; and

Whereas pressures are being exerted by a number of governmental agencies, private groups, and individuals upon Congress to exempt various agencies which threaten to undermine reorganization plans; and

Whereas there is now before Congress such legislation authorizing general reorganization plans and providing no exemption or special status of any executive department or agency in line with the Commission's recommendations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Wisconsin Committee on Hoover Commission Findings does hereby go on record as urging adoption by the Eighty-first Congress of the Senate executive expenditure committee's version (S. 526) of the "Reorganization Act of 1949," which provides that reorganization plans submitted to Congress by the President shall become effective unless rejected by resolution of either House, and further provides that no agency within the executive branch of the Government shall have exemption or special status from such plans; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to all Members of Congress from the State of Wisconsin.

THE NATIONAL ECONOMY—RESOLUTION OF RETAIL MERCHANTS ASSOCIATION OF TEXAS AND ALLIED ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I present for apropriate reference a resolution adopted at the forty-ninth annual convention of the Retail Merchants Association of Texas and allied organizations, meeting jointly in Dallas, Tex., on May 1, 2, and 3, 1949, relating to the national economy, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Retail Merchants Association of Texas; the Texas Retail Dry Goods Association; the Texas Retail Credit Bureaus, Inc.; the Retail Credit Executives of Texas; the Lone Star Council of Credit Women; and the Southwest Petroleum Credit group, in joint convention assembled in Dallas, Tex., on May 1, 2, 3, 1949, are concerned about the state of our national economy; and

Whereas it is our opinion that the national economy, in its present strained condition, cannot continue to withstand the onslaught of extravagant Federal spending and the present high level of Federal taxes; and

Whereas today in the face of lowering prices, declining business, and increasing unemployment, this condition is rapidly becoming a crisis: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this organization go on record requesting the support of the following program by each Member of the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

1. To take the lead in fostering and supporting an economy move designed to curtail Government extravagance and needless spending, thereby permitting a reduction in the tax burden.

2. To foster and support legislation designed to remove the Federal excise tax on so-called "luxury items."

3. To oppose vigorously all efforts to increase the social security pay-roll tax, and to make every effort to freeze it at its present level.

4. To remove the tremendously unfair condition whereby untaxed cooperatives are permitted to operate in competition to private businesses which are all burdened with heavy Federal taxes.

5. To inaugurate and support a move to restore to private industry without delay all governmental functions assumed as a result of the war.

6. To work aggressively for the adoption of the Hoover Commission Report for reorganization of certain branches of the Federal Government since it provides a way to cut Government expense very drastically and also provides a way for the American people to escape the increasing burdens of duplication of effort, red tape, extravagance, and higher taxes; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be mailed to each Member of the United States Senate and House of Representatives so that they may know the tremendous immediate importance attached to these vital matters by these associations representing the largest business organizations in the State of Texas.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN R. CLARK, Chairman.
HORACE C. BARNHART,
R. E. COX,
H. E. DILL,
Members, Resolutions Committee, Retail Merchants Association of Texas.

H. R. 3663. A bill for the relief of Lawrence Reves; without amendment (Rept. No. 389).

By Mr. O'CONOR, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. 1290. A bill to establish and effectuate a policy with respect to the creation or chartering of certain corporations by act of Congress, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 390).

SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN ALIENS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Judiciary, I report an original concurrent resolution, and I submit a report (No. 376) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received, and the concurrent resolution will be placed on the calendar.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 39) was ordered to be placed on the calendar, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress favors the suspension of deportation in the case of each alien hereinafter named, in which case the Attorney General has suspended deportation for more than 6 months.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, May 16, 1949, he presented to the President of the United States the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 42) granting the consent and approval of Congress to an interstate compact relating to the better utilization of the fisheries (marine, shell, and anadromous) of the Gulf coast and creating the Gulf States Marine Fisheries Commission.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. McCARRAN from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Robert E. Tehan, of Wisconsin, to be United States district judge for the eastern district of Wisconsin vice F. Ryan Duffy, elevated;

W. Bruce Matthews, of Maryland, to be United States marshal for the District of Columbia;

Joseph Y. Wisniewski, of Michigan, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Michigan, vice John J. Barc, deceased.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LANGER:

S. 1861. A bill to provide the privilege of becoming a naturalized citizen of the United States to all immigrants having a legal right to permanent residence, to make immigration quotas available to Asian and Pacific peoples, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1862. A bill to provide refunds of certain deposits made for the purpose of obtaining credit under the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, for service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. BALDWIN:

By Mr. THOMAS of Utah:

S. 1867. A bill to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of June 25, 1938, as amended, by providing for the certification of batches of drugs composed wholly or partly of any kind of aureomycin, chloramphenicol, and bacitracin, or any derivative thereof; and

S. 1868 (by request). A bill to amend the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 so as to provide full annuities at half salary or wages, based on the five highest years of earnings, for individuals who shall have completed 30 years of service; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

By Mr. MYERS:

S. 1869. A bill for the relief of Marcantonio Doria d'Angri and his wife, Sonia Stampa Doria d'Angri; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCARRAN:

S. 1870. A bill prohibiting the sale in the District of Columbia of rockfish weighing more than 15 pounds; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

(Mr. FULBRIGHT introduced Senate bill 1871, to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act to prohibit the employment of certain personnel of the Corporation by organizations receiving loans or other financial assistance therefrom, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado:

S. J. Res. 92. Joint resolution to authorize and direct the Civil Aeronautics Board to investigate and report upon the payments made and to be made by the United States to certain certificated air carriers by way of subsidy and upon the efficiency and economy of such carriers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PROHIBITION OF EMPLOYMENT OF CERTAIN PERSONNEL OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to prohibit the employment of certain personnel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by organizations receiving loans or other financial assistance therefrom, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement of the bill by me may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriatedly referred, and, without objection, the explanatory statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1871) to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act to prohibit the employment of certain personnel of the Corporation by organizations receiving loans or other financial assistance therefrom, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. FULBRIGHT is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR J. W. FULBRIGHT

I am today introducing a bill to prohibit the employment of certain personnel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by organizations receiving loans or other financial assistance from it.

Recently there have been accounts in the newspapers of cases where employees of RFC have taken positions with business concerns soon after those concerns have received loans from RFC. I have no knowledge of the true facts in these cases, and I have no desire to impute any motive to the individual, the RFC, or the business firm involved.

However, I do not think that it is in the public interest that these cases arise in the future. The practice tends to destroy public confidence in Government officials, regardless of any intent on the part of the persons involved. Furthermore, the character and function of the RFC in our Government require that it be above reproach. This bill will protect it against criticism, justified or unjustified, which might arise out of such cases in the future.

NOTICE OF HEARING ON NOMINATION OF HERMAN P. EBERHARTER TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE, WESTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, I desire to give notice that a public hearing has been scheduled for Thursday, May 19, 1949, at 10 a. m., in the District of Columbia Committee room in the Capitol, upon the nomination of HERMAN P. EBERHARTER, of Pennsylvania, to be United States district judge for the western district of Pennsylvania, vice Hon. Robert M. Gibson, retired. The subcommittee consists of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], chairman, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER].

COMMITTEE MEETING DURING SENATE SESSION

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy be permitted to sit at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon, in a very important meeting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

IS BIG BUSINESS TOO BIG?—ARTICLE BY SENATOR O'MAHONEY

THE POSITION OF THE AMERICAN NEGRO IN EVENT OF WAR—LETTER FROM J. E. HENDERSON TO SENATOR REED

[Mr. REED asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter received by him from J. E. Henderson, of Independence, Kans., which appears in the Appendix.]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], for himself and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], was agreed to.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I should like to say one or two things about the motion to reconsider. Senators who were present Friday will recall that a number of Senators voted for the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina in the clear belief that he had so modified and corrected his amendment as to eliminate from the amendment that portion of it which would strike out the provision for a sales tax in the District, and that the provision for a sales tax was still in the bill and would be subject to consideration later.

After his amendment had been accepted by the Senate we found that, through some oversight or an incorrect modification of his amendment, the proposal to eliminate the sales tax had been left in his amendment, and the adoption of his amendment had therefore removed the sales-tax provision from the bill.

I think the Senator from South Carolina was of the opinion that his amendment did not have that effect. A number of Senators were of the opinion that it did not have that effect. Nevertheless, when we began to examine the amendment, we found that it did. Therefore I made a motion to reconsider the vote by which his amendment was adopted.

In all sincerity, and in the interest of a better approach to this legislation, I feel that the vote should be reconsidered, and that his amendment should then be clearly restated so that Senators may understand just what is in it. I felt restless on Friday at the rather unsatisfactory method of attempting to legislate on the floor of the Senate on important matters such as this. I hope that the Senate will reconsider the vote, so that we may then fully understand the amendment and vote on it on its merits after it has been clarified.

Mr. MCGRATH. Mr. President, as has been stated by the Chair, the question before the Senate is the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was amended on Friday by the substitution of an increased income tax provision and the elimination from the bill of the provision for a sales tax.

I feel that there has been ample discussion of the merits of the various proposals, that is, the sales tax versus increased income tax or sales tax versus other forms of taxation for the District. In the interest of brevity and clarity I shall try to address myself not to the arguments favoring or opposing one method as against another, but rather to the effect of what we did on Friday afternoon with relation to the figures. After all, we have now reached the point where figures are what count.

First of all, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks two editorials, one from the Washington Star and the other from the Washington Post, dealing with this question.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Sunday Star of May 15, 1949]

CONFUSION WORSE CONFOUNDED

Reading the Senate debate of Friday on the District tax bill is to experience some of the confusion and chaos of a horrible nightmare. The Star trusts that the restful peace of a quiet Sabbath day will restore some of our distinguished Senators to a rational state of mind by tomorrow.

Senator JOHNSTON of South Carolina was responsible for most of the confusion. His whole plan for substituting a higher and tighter income tax for the proposed sales tax is misleading because his estimates are wrong. At one time on Friday he told the Senate it would produce $7,999,000 additional revenue. At another time he said it would produce $10,000,000 additional revenue. At another time, that it would yield $9,900,000 additional. At another, $15,000,000, minus. Then there was his estimate of $11,990,000, which is an increase of $7,990,000 over present revenue.

The estimate of the additional yield by the experts is $6,690,000, as compared with about $15,000,000 anticipated from the sales tax.

Senator JOHNSTON was confused on other things. He thought the real estate tax rate was $1.85, when it is $2. He told the Senate that by increasing it to $2.25 the additional yield would be $8,000,000. Such an increase would produce $5,000,000.

He told the Senate that if it passed his income tax, his higher realty tax and his higher liquor taxes, a sales tax would be unnecessary. His various proposals were voted up or down in such fashion as to leave the Senators uncertain about what they were doing. At one time the majority leader, Mr. LUCAS, was under the impression that the Senate had just voted local taxes which raised $11,000,000 more than the Senate started out to raise. Senator HUNT corrected him by explaining the District was still short $7,000,000 of the needed revenue.

The Senate was told by Senator JOHNSTON that in approving the income tax, it still had the sales tax. That, of course, was a mistake. The Senate had killed the sales tax when it approved the income tax. Whereupon Senator JOHNSTON said that, as he wanted to be perfectly frank, he did not think enough revenue had been raised to meet the District's needs. Later he said he thought those needs had been met by the income tax.

The Star does not think that Senator JOHNSTON at any time deliberately attempted to mislead the Senate. He is a very much confused man. His heart bleeds for the "little man," threatened by the sales tax. Yet, Senator JOHNSTON has proposed a program of local taxation, based on highly erroneous estimates of yield, that would hit the "little man" worse than the sales tax. It would not produce the money to pay the teachers, the firemen, the policemen, and the municipal employees the salary increase which Senator JOHNSTON alone prevented them from getting last year.

The situation as it stands now should be clear enough.

If the Senate defeats the sales tax, the District will obtain no new revenue this year. The same income tax voted by the Senate Friday has been killed two times by the House this year, four or five times in other years. It would be killed again. And the District would be left again with a large deficit that will hit the schools, the hospitals, and the welfare institutions hardest of all.

A tax bill cannot be written on the floor of the Senate. Unless it is willing to approve the bill brought in by the Senate District Committee, the Senate should send the whole business back to the committee. Friday's performance was disgraceful.

[From the Washington Post of May 16, 1949]

COMEDY OF ERRORS

An attempt to write a revenue bill for the District on the Senate floor ended in unutterable confusion. Opponents of the sales tax, led by its most redoubtable and loquacious foe, Senator JOHNSTON of South Carolina, tried to make good their boast that the needed revenue could be obtained by increasing the Federal contribution and raising real estate, income and liquor taxes. The proposal to boost the Federal contribution to more than twice the present figure was defeated as well as another amendment offered by Senator JOHNSTON to increase the realty tax 25 cents per $100 valuation instead of 15 cents as recommended. The Senate then proceeded to approve his proposal to double liquor gallonage taxes in lieu of the 50-percent increase recommended by the Senate District Committee. And finally it accepted the Johnston amendment to extend the District income tax with present exemptions, a broadened coverage, and nearly doubled tax rates.

Nobody, least of all Senator JOHNSTON, knows just how much additional revenue would be produced by the substitute proposals. The Senator from South Carolina said he had been informed that his income tax amendment would bring in close to $12,000,000 and increase returns from this source by nearly eight million. Other estimates put the additional revenue at fifteen million, and Mr. JOHNSTON himself changed his estimates from time to time, finally confessing that nobody knew what the revenue return would be. Senator HUMPHREY brought the debate over these estimates to a bewildering climax by asserting that the Johnston amendments, together with the tax increases left in the mangled committee bill, would yield over twenty-one million—more than three million in excess of the amount needed to balance the budget and increase District employees' salaries.

The scatterbrained way in which the Senate has acted to destroy the carefully worked out committee measure tailored to fit the District's financial needs would be a diverting exhibition if the situation were not so serious. The Senators could not even agree as to whether a vote for the Johnston income-tax proposal had or had not killed the sales tax. Finally they called it a day, and recessed with a motion to reconsider the income tax amendment pending. If that motion—the first order of business on today's calendar—carries, the way will be open for a test vote determining the fate of the sales tax.

It would be futile at this juncture to repeat familiar arguments for and against a District sales tax. The Post has explained many times why it favors this levy as an alternative to other forms of taxation under present conditions. Moreover, the House has approved it, and would not take kindly to the alternative proposals voted last week by the Senate. As Senator MCGRATH said, the revenue bill has been written in committee after expert study and due consideration of the complicated problems involved. By trying to write amendments from the floor the Senate destroyed this carefully designed pattern and produced only a comedy of errors. Its performance is a sharp reminder, if any were needed, of the inability of Congress properly to handle complicated local issues.

Mr. MCGRATH. Mr. President, over the week end members of the District Committee and its staff worked very closely with the District Commissioners and the fiscal officers of the District of Columbia, together with the corporation counsel. We have tried to draft a rather simple statement. It is our purpose to point out to Senators the effect, in terms of dollars, of the bill as it presently stands.

The last year for which complete figures are available in the District of Columbia was the fiscal year 1947.

Mr. President, I wish to point out that some confusion may be caused by the fact that the budget is made up on the basis of a fiscal year beginning July 1 and ending June 30; but the income taxes for the District of Columbia, like the Federal income taxes, are paid on a calendar-year basis. I should also like to point out at this time that the income taxes payable to the District of Columbia, unlike the income taxes payable to the Federal Government, are not payable on a pay-as-you-go basis, but are paid to the District of Columbia almost a year after the year for which they were due. In other words, the income taxes which will be due the District of Columbia for the year 1949 will not be paid to the District of Columbia in the year 1949; but the taxpayers' returns indicating the amounts due on their taxes will not be made until April, 1950, at which time the taxpayers will pay, on the filing of their returns, 50 percent of the amount due. The other 50 percent will not become due until October of that year. In other words, there is a lapse of 6 months.

Therefore, the situation with respect to income taxes, the situation is that the taxes which are due and payable by reason of earned income in the calendar year 1949 become payable in April and October of 1950. So, only 50 percent of that tax actually comes into the District of Columbia's treasury within the fiscal year with which we are now concerned. The problem before the Congress is to provide sufficient revenue to operate the District of Columbia in the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1949 and concluding June 30, 1950. By reason of the explanation I have made, it is obvious that within that period of time, only 50 percent of the money which is actually provided by the way of the income-tax route can possibly reach the District of Columbia's treasury.

In the year 1947 there were approximately 100,000 income-tax payers in the District of Columbia, and they were in the following categories:

Returns with taxable incomes of less than $5,000 accounted for 75,100, or a little more than three-quarters of the total income-tax returns. I wish to emphasize that figure, because to me it is important with respect to the low income-tax groups: Over three-fourths of those who paid income taxes within the District of Columbia were in the class of taxpayers with taxable incomes of less than $5,000.

Returns from taxable incomes of between $5,000 and $10,000 amounted to 18,400.

Returns from taxable incomes of over $10,000 amounted to 6,500—making the total of approximately 100,000 tax returns.

The revenue from the personal income tax in the District of Columbia for the year 1947 amounted to approximately $4,200,000. In addition, $800,000 was derived from the franchise tax on unincorporated businesses. Thus, the total revenue from the tax on individuals and the tax on unincorporated businesses for that year was approximately $5,000,000.

The present District of Columbia individual income tax is imposed upon every resident of the District of Columbia. The law defines a resident of the District of Columbia as—

> Every individual domiciled within the District on the last day of the taxable year, and every other individual who maintains a place of abode within the District for more than 7 months of the taxable year, whether domiciled in the District or not.

However, the law specifically provides—and I now quote directly from the law:

> In the case of any resident who is an elective or appointive officer or an employee of the Government of the United States, and who is domiciled outside the District during the whole of the taxable year, there shall be excluded from the gross income of such resident salaries or wages received from the Government of the United States for services rendered as such officer or employee, and income derived from sources without the District. For the purposes of this act the domicile of such officer or employee for any taxable year shall be in the State which he expressly declares to be the State of his domicile: Provided, That he shall have had a domicile in such State under the laws of such State immediately prior to the beginning of the taxable year for which the tax is claimed. Such declaration must be made in writing, under oath, to the Assessor and the time for filing such declaration shall expire 60 days after written demand to file an income-tax return shall have been received by such officer or employee. As used in this subsection the term "State" means the several States, Territories, and possessions of the United States, and the term "Government of the United States" includes any agency or instrumentality thereof, but does not include the government of the District of Columbia.

The last-quoted provision of law, Mr. President, is commonly referred to and spoken of as the "O'Hara amendment." It has the effect of exempting many Federal officers and employees from liability for the District of Columbia income tax. It is estimated by the District of Columbia fiscal officers that if the O'Hara restrictive amendment, hereinbefore referred to, were to be stricken from the law and if the prevailing exemptions and credits for dependents were retained, 90,000 additional returns probably would be filed. In other words, in that case, the number of returns would be increased by approximately 100 percent.

As the O'Hara amendment relates only to employees and officers of the Federal Government, and since under existing law most others who are not exempt under that amendment are already included under the law, practically all the 90,000 additional returns estimated to be filed would be filed by officers or employees of the Federal Government. Thus, if the O'Hara amendment were stricken out, it is estimated that the number of taxable returns would amount to approximately 190,000.

Under the proposal of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], as adopted by the Senate on Friday, the tax rate for those 190,000 taxpayers would be as follows:

Two percent on the first $2,000 of taxable income, 3 percent on the next $3,000 of taxable income, 4 percent on the next $5,000 of taxable income, and 5 percent on the taxable income in excess of $10,000.

With the present exemptions and credits for dependents retained, with all officers and employees of the Federal Government—except the comparatively few specifically excluded as proposed—and with the rates increased as proposed, it is estimated that the number of taxable returns in the various brackets of tax would be in line with the figures I am about to state.

These figures are what could reasonably be expected as the maximum under the Johnston amendment, even going so far as to exclude the provisions of the O'Hara amendment; and I cannot say in detail to what extent his proposal excludes all those restrictions. It broadens the field, but whether it goes the full distance is very difficult at this point to say. Nonetheless, giving all due credit and resolving all doubts in favor of the amendment, the best estimate the fiscal officers of the District can make is that the income-tax payments by the 190,000 persons making returns would divide themselves thus:

	Estimated tax
165,100 returns with incomes of $2,000 or less taxable at 2 percent and returns with increase of $2,000 to $5,000 taxable at 3 percent	$4,777,000
18,400 returns with incomes of from $5,000 to $10,000 taxable at 4 percent	3,796,000
6,500 returns with incomes in excess of $10,000	3,500,000
Estimated total tax shown on total of 190,000 returns	11,992,000

For easy figuring and to keep it in our minds, we therefore arrive at the conclusion that the most accurate figure the experts in fiscal affairs for the District can give for the Johnston amendment is that it will produce, in a full taxable year, approximately $12,000,000. There were various estimates made on the floor of the Senate Friday, ranging anywhere from $7,000,000 to $22,000,000. The correct figure seems to be $12,000,000.

However, let me remind the Senate what I said in the beginning, that this money, though it is the amount that could be realized under the amendment within a whole taxable year, would not all come into the District treasury within the taxable year, and the maximum benefit under the proposal could not be secured by the District before the fiscal year 1951; which would be no help at all to the immediate problem before us, which is to provide adequate revenue for the fiscal operations of the District in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1949, and ending June 30, 1950.

There is now in the existing law a provision allowing an individual taxpayer in the District to claim as a credit against his District income tax the amount paid by him as income or intangible personal property taxes, or both, for the taxable year, to any State, territory, or political subdivision thereof in which he may be domiciled. This provision of existing law will not be changed by the Johnston amendment since, as hereinbefore stated, every one of the additional taxpayers who would be brought into the coverage of the act by the amendment before the Senate would be an officer or employee of the Federal Government, and since, as is common knowledge to most, if not all of us, the such officers and employees must claim retention of domicile in their home States for purposes of retaining their franchises, for their domiciles in their States are sometimes fully as important to them in the retention of their jobs as any other possible consideration could be. So, as nearly as we can estimate, the deductions which would normally be made by reason of claiming domicile elsewhere and taking a deduction for the amount paid in the home State in order to retain domicile there, when subtracted from the $12,000,000 figure hereinbefore mentioned, would approximate $1,000,000. A recapitulation of the estimate of additional revenue which would be derived from the District personal income tax, with the amendment now adopted by the Senate retained, would be as follows:

Total income tax from Johnston amendment		$11,990,000
Less present income tax (individuals)	$4,200,000
Less present franchise tax (unincorporated business)	800,000
		5,000,000
Total additional revenue from income tax under Johnston amendment		6,990,000

In other words, Mr. President, the estimate which was made on the floor of the Senate by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], who was sponsoring the bill and who was chairman of the committee which drafted it, when he told us that his quick estimate, made in the confusion on the floor, Friday, was that the additional income would be $7,000,000, comes out almost to the penny.

The total $7,000,000 additional revenue from individual income taxes which would be derived from the Johnston amendment would not be available during the fiscal year 1950. This becomes a little repetitious, but it is worthy of repetition, because it is one of the major points in the consideration of obtaining revenue for the next fiscal year out of income taxes. The changes under the Johnston amendment are made effective for taxable years or portions thereof beginning on and after December 31, 1948. Under existing law, which would not be changed by the Johnston amendment, individual income-tax returns must be filed on or before April 15, succeeding the taxable year. The first returns under the amendment would therefore be due April 15, 1950, and one-half of the tax would be due on the same date the return was made. The balance would not be due until October 15, 1950, which is in the following fiscal year, with which we are not immediately concerned. Thus, from income taxes in the fiscal year which we are considering, only $3,500,000 in additional revenue could possibly be received, if the Johnston amendment remained in the law. We are aiming, not at $3,500,000; we are aiming to raise for the District of Columbia the bare minimum which everybody agrees is its need of $18,000,000.

Mr. President, it seems to me these figures should be accepted by the Senate. They are drafted as honestly as they can possibly be, as disinterestedly as they can possibly be, in trying to present the figures actually and factually to the Senate. They have been drafted by the fiscal experts of the District of Columbia. They have been checked by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

There may be other Senators who want to dispute these figures and say they do not represent the true facts, but, Mr. President, they represent the only facts on which it is possible to lay our hands. If these men do not know, then I do not think we here in the Senate are capable of judging beyond and above their judgment.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McGRATH. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. What was the amount of the additional contribution to the District by the Congress as requested by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina and voted down by the Senate?

Mr. McGRATH. The Senator from South Carolina requested an appropriation or contribution of 25 percent of the District budget. Since the District budget is approximately $100,000,000, his request would represent a payment by the Federal Government to the District of approximately $25,000,000.

Mr. ROBERTSON. How much would that be above the amount Congress now appropriates?

Mr. McGRATH. In the last fiscal year—and it is anticipated that the Congress will appropriate at least as much this year—the appropriation was $12,000,000, being $11,000,000 to the general fund and $1,000,000 to the water fund.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If the Senate had been willing last Friday to add as much to the bill from the general treasury as the distinguished Senator from South Carolina requested, the amount would still be $2,500,000 below the amount which the Senator from Rhode Island says is the minimum budget need of the District. The Senator said $3,500,000 additional would be received from the income tax in the coming fiscal year. If the budget is $18,000,000, that leaves $14,500,000.

Mr. McGRATH. There would be $13,000,000 exempted from the formula. But that is not all the story. There are other provisions in the bill, which the Senator from South Carolina is not attacking, which will provide additional revenue. There are increased liquor taxes, which have been agreed to, and a 1-cent tax on cigarettes, which will produce considerable revenue. I am sure it is only fair to say that if the Congress makes a contribution of 25 percent of the District's budget, plus increasing the income taxes to the amount advocated and accepted, together with the other recommendations which are not seriously challenged, we would probably receive in excess of the $18,000,000 required.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is it the opinion of the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island that we must do one of two things: Contribute money to the general fund from the Federal Treasury or impose a sales tax?

Mr. McGRATH. I see no possible alternative, unless we want to place an undue burden upon one segment of the population, upon one class of taxpayer. As pointed out, by the rates which are proposed the amount of money which the Senator from South Carolina himself says could be raised by income taxes, assuming it would amount to $12,000,000 in a year, would be more than 12 percent of the total amount of revenue required for the operation of the District of Columbia. I think the figures will bear me out that this is far in excess of the percentage which any State takes, by way of the income-tax route, in its total tax picture.

Mr. ROBERTSON. An editorial in the Washington Post this morning states, as I recall, that the amendment tentatively adopted last Friday would raise the income tax in the District 50 percent. Is that correct?

Mr. McGRATH. It would increase it 100 percent. I take it that is what the Senator means. The rates are doubled. In addition to the rates being doubled, a great many more persons would be brought under coverage than are covered under the present law. So the increase would be in excess of 100 percent. The figures will bear out that statement. The District received $4,200,000 in the year 1947, under the present law, and admittedly under the amendment it would receive $12,000,000.

Mr. ROBERTSON. So, as the Senator pointed out last Friday, we would depend upon the income tax to bear 20 percent or more of the cost of the District government.

Mr. McGRATH. The figures which were being thrown around indicated $20,000,000 could be raised by the income-tax proposal. That figure has now been toned down, and we find it would raise $12,000,000. The total budget for the District is $100,000,000. However, the District does not raise the entire $100,000,000. The Federal Government makes a payment of $12,000,000. So the percentage would be whatever percentage $12,000,000 would be of $88,000,000. Roughly speaking, I think it would be approximately 15 or 16 percent.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McGRATH. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senator stated the figures for 1947. He stated that 75,100 of the income-tax payers received incomes of less than $5,000. As I understand, the committee amendment increases the exemption. My question is, Would not the change in the law eliminate from the District income-tax roll a substantial number of the 75,100 taxpayers, or give relief to them?

Mr. McGRATH. It would take off the present tax rolls approximately 45,000 persons. Other changes made in the committee bill would make that up, so that approximately $1,000,000 would be recaptured. By that process we would lose some revenue, but we would also pick up in other categories, and from these sources of taxation would come out, I think, in the neighborhood of $800,000 ahead of the amount which is now received. At the same time, we would have accomplished the result of taking off the tax roll 45,000 taxpayers in the lower-income-tax brackets.

Senators may reasonably argue that we have set the exemption too high.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Perhaps the exemption should be $3,000 rather than $4,000. That is a matter which could be discussed seriously in conference, but it is not of such grave importance that we should attempt on the floor of the Senate to upset the figures on which the whole formula has been worked out, because the difference, I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts, between the amount of revenue which would be secured if we placed the ceiling at $3,000 rather than at $4,000 probably would not amount to more than three or four hundred thousand dollars. It can be amply taken care of in conference. I think that is where we should discuss it, rather than to try to do it here.

It was the feeling of the committee, since the House had written this provision and had been very strict and determined about it—it will be recalled that the bill was before the House twice and had to go back to the committee twice, and this is probably the best solution of our problem—that we did not want to challenge the House on that point. We are perfectly willing to argue it in conference. Since we were going to favor a sales tax, and since we realized that everyone has to pay the sales tax, it was probably a measure of equity and fairness that this great number of persons should be relieved of another form of tax in order to make up for what they would have to pay under the sales tax.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McGRATH. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GILLETTE. I should like to ask the able Senator this question: In addition to the matter to which the Senator from Massachusetts just called attention, that by increasing the exemption, approximately 45,000 persons would be taken from the tax roll, is it not a fact that approximately 55,000 persons would have their exemptions increased and their income tax lowered proportionately?

Mr. McGRATH. I think that is probably correct. There would be some relief in the categories above $4,000. I believe that would be true.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McGRATH. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In view of the fact that the income tax, for which I intend to vote, will carry a larger exemption than we have had in the income-tax law for many years, amounting, I believe, to $4,000 for a single person and $4,000 for a married man, plus $500 for his wife——

Mr. McGRATH. That is correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And $500 for each dependent?

Mr. McGRATH. That is correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The exemption, then, for a family of four, would be $5,500, would it not?

Mr. McGRATH. It would be $6,000, would it not?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes, it would be $6,000. I think the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island will realize that we are making the exemptions completely out of line with the exemptions in every State and under the Federal law. To me that is a little embarrassing. While I agree that it is not easy to rewrite the bill on the floor of the Senate, I certainly hope that if the bill is passed in its present form and goes to conference, the conferees will not insist that it is the firm conviction of the Senate that we should allow a $6,000-income exemption to a family of four, because if we do that, we will certainly set a bad precedent.

Mr. McGRATH. The exemption would be $5,500 for a family of four, a $4,000 exemption for the head of the family and $1,500 exemptions for his wife and two children.

Mr. ROBERTSON. My original hasty figures were correct, then.

Mr. McGRATH. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield?

Mr. McGRATH. I yield for a question.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. According to the figures the Treasury Department Division of Tax Research brings to our attention, does the Senator find that any State in the Union allows exemptions such as he has suggested?

Mr. McGRATH. I cannot answer that, because I have not seen the tables.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Is it not true that in a great many States exemptions are as low as $700, ranging up to $750, $1,000, $1,500, and $2,000? The State exemptions are very low, so that they can collect taxes. The Senator is getting it clear out of line when in the case of the District he provides an exemption of $4,000. That is what I think is wrong about what is being suggested. I think the income tax for the District should be based on somewhat the same principles followed in the States. There are taxes imposed by the States, the counties, and the cities, combined, and we should follow somewhat along the State line when we come to the District income tax. Does not the Senator think that is correct?

Mr. McGRATH. I could go quite a way in agreeing with the Senator. The Senate committee was not entirely satisfied, but we knew the legislative history of this matter in the House of Representatives. There was a great desire to get away from the provisions of the O'Hara amendment, which worked very inequitably, and allowed a great many people to escape taxation, while others in the same class continued to bear taxation. While the exemption may be high under the proposal now made, it is high for all people within the class. As I have said, we have removed a great many of the inequities which were in the law by reason of the provisions of the O'Hara amendment.

Perhaps it may be said that is the price we must pay in order to make progress in this field in the House. Probably the Senate committee should make the attempt, and I am very glad to assure the Senator that when the bill goes to conference, if it does, I shall make a determined effort to see if we cannot get the House to take a more realistic view of the income-tax ceiling.

However, I repeat, it probably will not make a great deal of difference in terms of dollars in the next fiscal year. Whether we lower the ceiling from $4,000 to $3,000, or put it back to $2,500 or $2,000, probably it would not make a difference of much more than four or five hundred thousand dollars in the fiscal year with which we are concerned, namely, the fiscal year 1949–50.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to call to the Senator's attention another thing which I think is vitally important. As to the percentage he has used in figuring the tax, namely, 1½ percent on the first $5,000 over the exemptions. I call his attention to the fact that in many States it is 6 percent, in some 4 percent, in some 5 percent, in some 3 percent, in some 4½ percent, but the committee has it 1½ percent in the District of Columbia. I just want to show where the taxes can be collected.

Consider a comparatively small State like South Carolina. We hear talk about it being poor. We pay our Federal taxes, and we are paying an increased State income tax. In Alabama, the first State on the list, the rate is 4½ percent, whereas the committee fixes 1½ percent for the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, this is the kind of thing to which I call attention. This is a source from which money could be procured, if the tax were properly imposed.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I should like to present in digest form the results which will be produced, or which reasonably could be expected, from the committee bill, on the one hand, and the bill containing the Johnston amendments, on the other. It would be somewhat as follows:

Comparison of additional revenue which would be produced for fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, under committee bill and the same bill with Senate amendments now adopted

	Committee bill
TITLES I, II, AND III
Estimated revenue from sales, use, and excise tax on automobiles for full year, less decrease resulting from exemptions, including cigarettes ($13,370,000) and less one-sixth for months of July 1949 and June 1950, the tax for latter month being paid in following fiscal year	$11,142,000
TITLE IV
Increase from unincorporated business	$800,000
(No decrease due to increased exemptions in income tax under committee bill, since this provision applies only to income received after Dec. 31, 1949.)
INCREASE IN INCOME TAX UNDER JOHNSTON AMENDMENT
Total income tax from amendment	$11,990,000
Less present income tax	4,200,000
Less unincorporated business tax repealed by amendment	800,000
	5,000,000
	6,990,000
Less one-half not due until following fiscal year	3,495,000

So that the Johnston proposals would result in a net payment to the District in the coming fiscal year of $3,495,000.

Under title V the results would be as follows:

	Committee bill	Bill with Johnston amendments
TITLE V
Alcoholic beverage license fees	$400,000	$400,000
Taxes on spiritous liquors	1,000,000	2,000,000
Beer	300,000	300,000
TITLE VI
Cigarette tax	$800,000	$800,000
TITLE VII
Real-estate tax	$2,400,000	$2,400,000

The recapitulation is that under the committee proposals the District would receive $16,842,000, and under the Johnston proposal, with the bill in its present state, the District would receive $9,395,000, or approximately from eight to nine million dollars short of the requirements for the next fiscal year.

Mr. President, I say in conclusion that I have presented the picture as simply as it can be drawn, and I think the only realistic and sensible thing for the Senate to do is to reconsider the vote taken on Friday by which the amendment was agreed to, pass the bill as recommended by the committee, and send it to conference, and let us see if we cannot start the District on the road to a sound fiscal policy, which it badly needs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] that the vote by which the Johnston amendment was agreed to on Friday be reconsidered.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, to expedite matters in regard to the reconsideration, I have not objected to a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to. I fear that there were some Senators who were misled and voted for my amendment believing that it did not strike from the bill the sales tax feature. If Senators will look at the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for last Friday, on page 6196, the first column, they will find that I addressed the Chair as follows:

> Mr. President, I should like to modify my amendment by striking out, on page 1, lines 1 and 2, which deal with the sales tax. That would leave the amendment to deal with the income tax.

I made that statement in the RECORD——

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Let me explain. At about that time a Senator called to my attention the fact that the amendment I had called up was a different amendment, and that I did not strike from the amendment the sales-tax feature. So we went ahead, I thinking that I had made the motion to strike out that feature, the sales tax, and that we were voting only on the income tax. I did talk with some two or three Senators who asked me, if it included the sales-tax feature. I told them it was stricken out. Therefore I could not vote against reconsideration of the amendment under those circumstances. But at the same time I would be in favor of striking out the sales-tax and inserting the income-tax feature I have offered. For that reason, to expedite matters, I should like to have the vote by which the amendment was adopted reconsidered and then I shall offer an amendment striking all that pertains to the sales tax, and then we can have a vote upon the question of the income tax. I think that would be the best way to work it out under the circumstances in which we find ourselves at the present time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I wish to thank the Senator from South Carolina for the statement he has just made in which he said he desired reconsideration of the vote to be had. Merely to make the record clear at this point, I wish to quote from the RECORD, in addition to the matter inserted by the Senator from South Carolina. I call attention to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Friday last, on the same page the Senator from South Carolina referred to, also in the first column, to the question asked by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], which is as follows:

> Mr. HUNT. Does the proposed amendment delete the sales-tax feature from the bill?
>
> Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. This particular amendment does not.

And then the Senator from South Carolina further corrected that.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. And then I proceeded to modify the amendment.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I thank the Senator from South Carolina. I think he has been very fair in this matter.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I do not want to mislead any Senator. I think the proper thing to do is to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

Mr. McGRATH. I suggest that the vote be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] for himself and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina for himself and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President I should like to strike from the pending amendment that part which pertains to the sales tax, in order that the amendment would not include anything but the increase in the income-tax proposal I have offered. That can be done by striking out the language beginning with line 5, page 1, and on down, as I have indicated, inserting in lieu thereof the remaining language of my amendment. I think it will be found that the rest of it pertains to nothing but the income tax.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the Senator offered an amendment to his own amendment?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am offering to modify my own amendment by striking from it everything that deals with the sales tax.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will have to point out some part of the amendment and designate it as being eliminated.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It will be noted that in the caption there is all that deals with the sales tax. After the word "purposes", strike out everything down through "following", and there will be stricken from the bill all that deals with——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Parliamentarian advises the Chair that the reference to the sales tax starts at the beginning of the bill and goes down to page 33. Is that what the Senator is moving to——

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think it will be found that the language of the bill relating to the sales tax continues through to page 33. The Chair is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Through line 11 on page 33.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is correct. My purpose is not to strike that provision from the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that there are two other titles which indirectly relate to the sales tax—the use tax and the motor-vehicle tax. Is the Senator seeking to strike them out?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. No; I am not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's amendment, then, does not propose to strike out the language of the bill beginning in line 8, on page 1, down through line 11, on page 33?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the clerk state the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. To get before the body the type of amendment it is, I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that title II, on page 33, which is the "compensating-use tax," aims to protect the District against purchases made outside the District.

Mr. McGRATH. Title 2 is unnecessary if the sales tax provision is stricken out. If we are not going to have a sales tax that title should also be stricken out.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina proposes to modify his amendment so as to strike out all of the bill beginning with line 3, page 47, to and including line 4 on page 58—being title IV—and to insert a substitute.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The amendment is dated May 9, 1949, and lettered "B." That is inserted at its proper place according to the amendment. I think the amendment is at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Beginning with line 3, page 47, it is proposed to strike out all of the bill down to and including line 4, page 58, and to insert in lieu thereof a substitute:

Title IV—amendments to article 1 of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1947.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] as modified.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think it will be found that the sales tax and the use tax are tied in together. At present I am not proposing to strike out the sales tax.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator may modify his own amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. As I understand the Senator's purpose is to remove entirely from the bill all reference to sales tax.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. No, I am not doing that. My amendment deals only with the income tax, and I am deleting from my amendment anything that has to do with the sales tax provision.

Mr. McGRATH. In other words, if the Senator's amendment as modified is adopted we will have the sales tax left in the bill, we will have the use tax left in the bill, we will have the automobile tax left in the bill, and the increase that his amendment, as modified, provides by reason of income taxes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is true. My particular amendment does nothing more than to increase the income tax. So the net result——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The modification of the amendment had better be stated at the desk so that the Senate will understand it.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Beginning with line 3, page 47, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 4, page 58, and insert in lieu thereof the printed amendment dated May 9, 1949, lettered "B."

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. At the expense of being repetitious, in order to get the figures before the Senate—and I think the figures are important in this discussion—am I to understand that the Senator now desires, without any consideration of the sales tax or any other provision of the bill, simply to add to the bill an amendment which would increase the income tax rates and the number of those who would pay an income tax?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I wish to do that; and later I shall offer an amendment striking the sales tax, if I am successful in having adopted the amendments which I desire.

Mr. McGRATH. Am I not correct in the statement that in the event the pending amendment should prevail, at that point we would have a bill providing for a sales tax and all the other taxes, and providing for additional income tax? The figures which I have indicate that the additional income tax would be approximately $7,000,000. So when we arrive at the point of adopting the Senator's amendment, we shall then have a bill which would raise $7,000,000 more than is required for the fiscal operations of the District of Columbia for the next fiscal year. Of course, I understand that the Senator will then offer another amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes. I am following this procedure in order to give the Senate an opportunity to vote for the kind of taxes it wishes to impose. If the Senate does not want a sales tax after my amendment is adopted, it can vote for or against a sales tax. That is the way the Senate thought it was voting when it voted on Friday. That is the reason why I am offering the amendment in this form.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. Does the Senator realize that the net result, when he gets through with his program, would be that he would add $7,000,000 to the bill by this amendment, beyond what is needed? Then he proposes to offer another amendment which would take off approximately $13,000,000. So in the first instance he leaves us with a bill providing $7,000,000 in excess of the needed revenue; and in the second instance he leaves us with a bill providing $8,000,000 below the needed revenue.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I have other amendments to offer.

I want it plainly understood in the beginning that the amount of revenue to be derived from my amendment has been misquoted. The figures given by the other side on the floor of the Senate on Friday were entirely out of line.

Mr. President, when this amendment goes into full effect for a year, it will produce approximately $15,000,000. The first year it will produce only $8,000,000 for this reason: It will be found that during the fiscal year two payments are made. The first payment in the year constitutes more than half the total amount of the income tax. The records will bear me out. Many taxpayers pay the entire tax at one time. That is the reason why the statement which I have prepared, and which has been placed on every Senator's desk, shows $8,000,000 the first year and $15,000,000 for succeeding years.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I should like to get some information about this matter. What is the source of the information with reference to the estimated amount of yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I can answer that question by saying that the figures will be found in the House proceedings when the House was debating this very same amendment. The subject was thoroughly studied at that time. It will be found that the figures which I am giving were cited time and time again in the House. The figures were prepared by Mr. Bates and the staff in the House at that time.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Do these figures represent estimates made by the House committee staff?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. They were estimates made by Mr. Bates. I notice that he has agreed with some of the statements which have been made.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am merely seeking information. Last Friday afternoon when we were considering the bill a great many figures were cited, and there was a great deal of uncertainty about the accuracy of the figures, and just how much revenue the various amendments would produce. What I wish to determine is whether or not the figures which the Senator is giving are based upon one of the best available estimates.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes. I should like to give some of the figures for the various States. To take an illustration, I turned to my home State to find out what was being collected in taxes in that State. I found that from income taxes approximately $28,000,000 was collected in that State during the past year. I should also like to read into the RECORD figures showing what the Federal Government collected in South Carolina.

In South Carolina the number of Federal income tax returns filed in 1945 was 400,838. The number of State income tax returns filed in 1945 was 139,007. The Federal income tax liability in 1945 was $78,998,000. To show how the State income taxes have increased in recent years, the total State income tax liability in 1945 was $14,799,497.74. In 1948 the number of State income tax returns filed was 193,783 and the State income tax liability was $25,871,083.61. I am also informed that there is approximately $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 still outstanding by reason of extensions of time and other factors.

Let us see what the District of Columbia was paying. Does the Senator know that in 1945 the District paid only $3,488,000 in income taxes, while South Carolina was paying $14,799,497.74? It will be noted that the Federal income taxes collected in the District were $158,284,000, while in South Carolina $78,998,000 was collected, showing how much out of line the collections are. Twice as much Federal taxes were collected in the District as in South Carolina. On the other hand, almost four times as much was collected in State income taxes in the State of South Carolina as was collected in the District through the District income tax. I am trying to show how much out of line the collection of taxes is.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator refers to South Carolina. I do not know whether that is a safe guide for us to follow, unless the rates are comparable.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I shall read the rates. I have the rates for all the States, which I obtained from the Treasury Department. Mr. President, I am not on a wild goose chase. I have data showing that residents of the District of Columbia are taxed about one-fourth as much as the residents of the majority of States. I shall read the figures for the States, including the exemptions.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I did not mean to imply that the Senator was on a wild-goose chase. I am very sympathetic toward the Senators' amendment. I voted for it last Friday. However, I became confused, and I think many other Senators were confused. I am now trying to obtain factual information which will enable me to make an intelligent decision on the pending amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Let me read some of the tax brackets and the exemptions.

I notice that in the District of Columbia there is an exemption of $1,000 for a single person. The pending bill would allow an exemption of $4,000, plus $1,000, or a total of $5,000. I find that that is entirely out of line with the exemptions in most of the States.

In Arkansas the exemption is $2,500 for a single person; in Colorado, $750; Delaware, $1,000; Georgia, $1,000; Idaho, $700; Kansas, $750; Kentucky, $1,000; Louisiana, $1,000; Maryland, $1,000; Massachusetts, $2,000; Minnesota, $1,000; Mississippi, $1,000; Missouri, $1,200; Montana, $1,000; New Hampshire, $200.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. In connection with the statement the Senator from South Carolina has made regarding the States which have low income-tax exemptions, will the Senator also state whether those States have sales taxes, as well? That is an important point.

The committee stated that its reason for excluding a proposal for a considerable increase in income tax was because there would be a sales tax. Of course, an increase in income tax might be more justified if there were no sales tax. However, if we subject everyone in the District to liability for the payment of a sales tax, I do not believe we should also increase the income tax.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Of course, in Arkansas we have both a sales tax and an income tax.

Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator from South Carolina whether the figures which have just been placed on our desks are submitted by the Senator from South Carolina in support of his amendment. I refer to the last table of figures which has been passed around.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Those are committee figures, not mine. The committee's figures do not correspond exactly with the figures I have presented. Of course, no two statisticians will agree entirely upon anything.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I refer to the last table of figures which has been placed on our desks, giving estimates of the amount of taxes which will be raised by means of the various amendments. The Senator says that these are different figures. Does he mean that these figures have been submitted by the Senate committee?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I suppose they have come from the staff of the committee.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, these figures come from the fiscal experts of the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCLELLAN. They come from the District of Columbia experts, and not from the committee staff; do they?

Mr. McGRATH. Yes. Senators will find that they are the same figures which were given to the House committee. We checked with them over the weekend, and then checked in our committee.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, I should like to refer to the figures which were placed on our desks a while ago by the Senator from South Carolina. I understood him to say that they come from the staff of the House committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It will be found that those figures were used in the debate on the floor of the House.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, the figures the Senator has were used on the floor of the House by a minority, just as they are being used here by those who are advocating a program different from the one recommended by the committee. Certainly those who disagree with the committee on this matter use a different set of figures, but their figures are not backed by any of the experts of the District of Columbia. The figures are simply produced by the opponents of the sales tax. Where they got the figures, I do not know.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I simply wish to say to both the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from South Carolina that inasmuch as two sets of figures have been placed on our desks in connection with the consideration of an important bill, and inasmuch as the figures and estimates are considerably at variance, naturally I wish to ascertain the source of the figures and their authenticity and reliability. I wonder whether the Treasury Department has submitted any figures in this connection.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I do not think so.

Mr. McGRATH. The only figures we can get are the ones which are prepared by those who deal with this problem day in and day out, year in and year out. The figures they produce are taken from the books, based on the experience which has been had in the District of Columbia. They are the highest source to which we can go; and that situation is the best argument in the world as to why the figures and estimates produced by the committee should be accepted, rather than the figures and estimates coming from a group which does not have access to such information.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The minority group which has presented these figures has referred to studies made by a group of persons in regard to the taxes in various States. As I stated a while ago, in 1945 the total Federal income-tax liability in the State of South Carolina was $78,998,000, while in the District of Columbia it was $158,284,000. The fact that in 1945 the total Federal income-tax liability in the District of Columbia was twice the total Federal income-tax liability in South Carolina, certainly shows the sound basis for the figures we present. Since the rate of taxation in the various brackets is approximately the same in South Carolina as in the District of Columbia, except in the lower brackets, and since the total liability for the State income tax in South Carolina was in excess of $25,000,000 last year, it certainly would seem that the proposed increased income taxes which I would have imposed in the District of Columbia would result in the collection of approximately $20,000,000. Is it not reasonable to assume that at least that much would be collected?

No doubt those who prepared the figures I have presented took a great many factors into consideration, but at the present time I am considering the figures solely on the basis I have just stated. I think Senators can see that the increased income tax which I propose probably will result in the payment of more money than will be needed from the income tax if the sales tax is also adopted.

Of course, Mr. President, my proposal is made on a trial basis. After it has been tried 1 year, the results will be known. But certainly the increased income tax which I propose will bring in a great deal of revenue. Even those who advocate the committee's proposal will have to acknowledge that fact.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, let me inquire whether he recognizes the great distinction between the character of the economic life of his own State and the economic life of the District of Columbia. Certainly I recognize that there is considerable difference between the economic life of my State and the economic life of the District of Columbia. The city of Washington is largely a city of salaried people. In the District of Columbia there are no great farms and there are no big incomes produced from manufacturing operations, although in the State of South Carolina considerable tax funds are obtained from such sources. I dare say that in the State of South Carolina there are thousands of persons earning over $100,000 a year, and large business corporations with tremendous incomes. The cotton industry alone in South Carolina is one of the greatest industries in the world, and in the State of South Carolina there are tremendous sources of income which do not exist in the District of Columbia. Aside from a few merchants who do business in downtown Washington, there are no large commercial operations in the city of Washington and there are no large salaries paid to executives, except in a very few instances. So the income in the District of Columbia is largely income paid to salaried people. The result is that if a certain tax is applied in the District of Columbia, it is bound to produce less than it will in the State of South Carolina or in the State of Rhode Island, for instance, where many heads of industries are paid hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, and where there are thousands of persons who receive salaries ranging from $20,000 to $500,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that in South Carolina the Federal Government collects only half as much as is collected in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. In order to expedite the consideration of the bill, I am wondering whether we could not possibly rearrange matters, so to enable the Senate in the first instance to vote upon the question of eliminating the sales tax, which the Senator from South Carolina seeks to do. In other words, at the present time we must first vote upon an amendment, which, if adopted, and if the sales tax remains in the bill, would raise more money than would be necessary. The real issue before the Senate I understand is whether we shall have a sales tax for the District of Columbia. It seems to me we are, so to speak, making a backdoor approach in order to reach the issue which the Senator from South Carolina hopes ultimately to have decided by the Senate. I am wondering whether the Senator could not withdraw the pending amendment, offer his amendment to strike out the sales tax, and let the Senate vote upon that. We shall then perhaps know definitely where we are with respect to the other amendments.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to agree with the Senator from Illinois, but I fear it is probable that some Senators will say "We are not going to vote to strike out the sales tax, because that might result in our not having sufficient revenue." That may be the view some Senators may take unless they feel both proposals can be taken to a free conference for decision.

Mr. LUCAS. I of course understand that. That is another thing I was going to suggest to the Senator. I hope we can get a vote on the question.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Why not agree to my amendment, and then take it to a free conference?

Mr. LUCAS. That of course is up to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I do not want to take to conference a bill that would produce $7,000,000 more revenue than is needed.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. But according to the bill, there would be an increase in the whisky tax. That was in the bill before we began to amend it. The Senator said nothing more was needed in that respect. That is already provided in the bill. That is true, is it not?

Mr. McGRATH. Yes, that is true. We accepted the amendment. We said we would take it to conference.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Let us do the same thing with this question, if the Senator desires to expedite matters.

Mr. McGRATH. The variation of a million dollars one way or another in a $100,000,000 budget is not a serious matter. But certainly taking a bill to conference with $7,000,000 in it more than is needed, I think is a very serious matter. We should have an expression by the Senate as to whether a sales tax is or is not wanted. It is as simple as that. We can settle this in 5 minutes, if we can get a decision on that point.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. If the Senate agrees to the pending amendment, then the question of a sales tax will come up.

Mr. McGRATH. If we are not to have a sales tax, then the whole matter has got to be reconsidered, the whole tax bill rewritten, and a new approach made to the entire financial problem of the District. If Senators get a chance to express themselves and vote to provide a sales tax in the District of Columbia, then our problem is simple.

I heartily agree with the distinguished majority leader, the Senator from Illinois, whose suggestion is entirely reasonable. Let us put the issue before the Senate. The arguments have been made. Every Senator knows what he wants to do. Many have conscientious objections to a sales tax, and I honor and respect their opinion. Others of us are accepting it because we feel after serious study it is the only avenue left open to the District, whether we like it or whether we do not. Can we not have a vote on it? Can we not present the issue squarely to the Senate, have a yea-and-nay vote, and have the matter decided?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina will yield further, I really believe that the Senator from Rhode Island, in expressing himself as he has, is correct, in attempting to get the issue before the Senate. The Senator from South Carolina is moving, it seems to me, in a sort of roundabout way, before we finally get to the really important issue so far as Senators are concerned. The sales tax, as the Senator well knows, is the real issue. That is the subject upon which Senators have debated pro and con. It is before the Senate. It seems to me the Senator from South Carolina could very well withdraw the pending amendment and present the sales tax amendment immediately, and allow the Senate to take a vote on it. That would determine the matter one way or the other.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. As I stated a few moments ago, I should like to agree with the Senator from Illinois, but the Senate, in a way, has already voted upon the amendment which I have pending. It voted favorably upon it once on Friday. Senators at that time thought they were voting on nothing but the income tax amendment. I think that was true of a good many of them. By a majority of seven, the Senate voted to increase the income tax. A motion was made to reconsider the vote, and I agreed to a reconsideration, feeling that probably some of the Senators had voted under a misapprehension. I stated at that time that I would submit an amendment to strike out everything in connection with the sales tax. I want to give the Senate an opportunity to vote upon the question.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. I am sure the Senator does not want us to understand that in his opinion the Senate deliberately added to the revenue bill $7,000,000 beyond the requirements of the District.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think the matter had been discussed thoroughly. Reference was made to an increase in the whisky tax which had been inserted in the bill. It was stated that the bill was sufficient. Senators must have known that my amendment would certainly provide additional revenue. I feel certain Senators knew that at the time the vote was taken on Friday.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to ask the Senator's permission to propound a question to the Senator from Rhode Island in regard to the procedure.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield, provided it does not interfere with my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Massachusetts may proceed.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. My question is, If the sales tax is, let us assume, voted down, would it be necessary to recommit the bill in order to have a proper calculation made on the various propositions affecting the revenue of the District?

Mr. McGRATH. In answer to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, I may say that the whole heart of the tax bill is the sales tax. Destroy that, and, comparatively speaking, there is nothing left, and it becomes necessary to start all over again.

Of course, it must either go back to the committee or be rewritten on the floor. I hope the Senate will not take the latter course. The committee has done the best that can be done. It has submitted a report. It has tried to justify its position. We have, after long and laborious months, reached a reasonable agreement with the House of Representatives. I at least hope the Senate will pass the bill and send it to conference.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. If the Senator will yield further, my question was based on what was said by the distinguished Senator from Illinois. It seems to me that if we could determine the issue of the sales tax we could then decide whether to send the bill back to committee or rewrite it on the floor, or whether we should adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina and leave it to the conference committee either to include it or eliminate it, in fashioning a bill which will produce the necessary amount of revenue for the District.

I am merely following the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois. It seems to me if we could get that question decided first we could then decide where we were going, and whether to recommit the bill, try to rewrite it on the floor, or leave it to the conference committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to answer the question by saying it would be a matter for the entire Senate to decide what is to be done with it, at any point in the procedure. I could not answer that question, any more than could the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. FREAR. As the Senator from Rhode Island has just stated, there seems to be a difference of opinion as to whether the revenue shall be raised by way of a sales tax or by way of an income tax. In reference to the statement made by the Senator from Rhode Island, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina regarding the $15,000,000 revenue which would be derived from the income tax amendment for the fiscal year 1951. Last Thursday, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] placed in the RECORD a statement by Representative BATES, who I believe is a proponent of the sales tax, and who admitted—and I note from the majority report it is admitted—that $5,600,000 was received from the personal income tax. If the base is doubled, that certainly means $11,000,000; and if the rate is increased, that also doubles it, and it certainly would go beyond $20,000,000. Then, if we deduct the $5,000,000 now being received according to my mathematics, that certainly will provide a revenue of $15,000,000.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. The Senator from Delaware is quoting incorrect figures. The $5,600,000 represents taxes received from tangible personal property; they are not income tax figures at all.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That would make it even better.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. FREAR. I refer to page 6100 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In the third column on that page the following appears:

> The estimated $5,000,000 yield which would be obtained from the broadened income tax does not exhaust its revenue potentialities.

From that I take it that the District is already receiving $5,000,000 from income taxes.

Mr. McGRATH. According to the last figures available, which were for 1947, the figure was $4,200,000. The reference is probably to the income tax in round figures, approximately $5,000,000. The actual experience was in 1947, when the figures were $4,200,000, not the figure of $5,600,000 to which the Senator from Delaware referred, that figure representing the tangible personal-property tax.

Mr. FREAR. Even taking the Senator's figures, if we double them and then take the $4,200,000, we would still——

Mr. McGRATH. That is fine. I think a better way to do it would be to go to a pyramid club downtown and come up with $100,000,000.

Mr. FREAR. Maybe the Senator has something there.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, looking at the table of the Treasury Department, I notice that the people of the State of Minnesota, on the same amount of taxable income, would be paying at the present time 5 percent, while the District of Columbia would be paying 1½ percent. I am inviting the attention of the committee to the fact that we have a source which we have not tapped. Until we have tapped one of the best sources of revenue, the finest in the world, I do not believe we should go on a sales-tax expedition and guess at how much money will be brought in. At this time no one knows how much it will bring in.

In the State of North Dakota the people pay a tax of as much as 15 percent. In the District of Columbia it is 3 percent.

That shows how the States really tax their citizens. In some States the rate is as high as 7 percent. The State of Georgia has a rate of 7 percent. Georgia, and the South in general are being criticized because it is said that they do not tax the people enough. But in the State of Georgia they are taxed 7 percent.

The rate in Wisconsin is 7 percent.

I am bringing to the attention of the Senate the fact that we have a source of taxation which we have not yet tapped. We can secure the revenue from those persons who are able to pay the tax, after giving them proper exemptions for taking care of a house full of children.

A while ago I spoke of Minnesota. In the highest bracket in Minnesota the tax is 10 percent on taxable incomes.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that tables Nos. 2 and 3, appearing in the Treasury Department's tax study, made by the United States Treasury Department, Division of Tax Research, be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks. I want the Senate to see the amounts.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Tax credit deductible from amount of tax rather than from net income. Sum in parentheses expresses tax credit as income exemption on assumption that latter is always deducted from lowest income bracket.

[2] Tax credit deductible from amount of tax rather than from net income. Sum in parentheses is the amount by which the first dependent raises the level at which a married person or head of family will first become taxable.

[3] Exemptions shown are applicable to taxable years beginning after Dec. 31, 1944, and before Jan. 1, 1948. Permanent exemptions are $2,000 and $3,500.

[4] Exemptions shown are applicable to the period May 1, 1947, to Dec. 31, 1948. Permanent exemptions are $1,000 and $2,500 and the credit for dependents is $400.

[5] In the case of a dependent father, mother, or grandparent, the taxpayer may take a deduction of $300 in lieu of $5 tax credit.

[6] The exemptions and credits for dependents are deductible from the lowest income bracket and are equivalent to tax credits of $20, $50, and $8, respectively.

[7] The exemptions shown consist of a specific exemption of $2,000 on earned income, in addition to a personal exemption on earned income of $500 for husband or wife and a credit for each dependent of $250. A person whose total income from all sources does not exceed $1,000 and whose income together with his spouse's does not exceed $1,500 may have an exemption of $1,000 on his property income.

[8] Tax applies only to interest and dividends.

[9] An additional exemption of $1,000 is provided for a married woman with a separate income.

[10] For taxable years beginning on or after Jan. 1, 1947, the exemptions will be increased or decreased depending upon the approval or rejection of the sales tax by a referendum vote on Oct. 7, 1947. If the sales tax is approved, the exemptions will be $900 and $1,800 and the credit for dependents $400; if rejected, the exemptions will be $500 and $1,000 and the credit for dependents will remain at $300.

[11] An additional $500 exemption is allowed to taxpayers over 65 years of age.

[12] For purposes of the surtax, an additional tax credit of $37.50 is allowed.

[1] California, Colorado, Kentucky, Oklahoma, Oregon, and Vermont provide an optional simplified tax table for individuals with an adjusted gross income (defined the same as for Federal income-tax purposes) of $5,000 or less. In computing the table, Colorado, Kentucky, and Oklahoma allow a standard deduction of 10 percent while California and Oregon allow 6 percent. In addition, Colorado, Oklahoma, and Oregon allow deduction of Federal income-tax liability as determined by the supplement T table. Maryland provides an optional simplified tax return for individuals whose gross income is $5,000 or less and consists only of salary, wages, or compensation for personal services; or dividends, interest, and annuities not in excess of $100. The return allows a 10 percent standard deduction.

[2] The rates shown apply to the taxable years beginning after Dec. 31, 1942, and before Jan. 1, 1948. The permanent rates are: $1 to $5,000, 1 percent; $5,001 to $10,000, 2 percent; $10,001 to $15,000, 3 percent; $15,001 to $20,000, 4 percent; $20,001 to $25,000, 5 percent; over $25,000, 6 percent.

[3] Gross income in excess of $200 derived from dividends, royalties, and interest is subject to a 2-percent surtax. For the period May 1, 1947, to Dec. 31, 1948, the following temporary rates are applicable: $1 to $1,000, 1 percent; $1,000 to $2,000, 1½ percent; $2,000 to $3,000, 2 percent; $3,000 to $4,000, 2½ percent; $4,000 to $5,000, 3 percent; $5,000 to $6,000, 4 percent; $6,000 to $7,000, 5 percent; $7,000 to $8,000, 6 percent; $8,000 to $9,000, 7 percent; $9,000 to $10,000, 8 percent; $10,000 to $11,000, 9 percent; over $11,000, 10 percent.

[4] The amount of tax payable under these rates was reduced by 50 percent for the taxable years 1942–46.

[5] Effective Jan. 1, 1948, the rate on ordinary income will be 2.5 percent.

[6] Ordinary income, 2 percent; investment income, 5 percent.

[7] A temporary additional tax equal to 10 percent of the tax is applicable to the years 1936 through 1948. A second additional tax equal to 3 percent of the tax is applicable to 1942 and succeeding years.

[8] Earned income, business income, and annuities, 1.5 percent; capital gains, 3 percent; interest and dividends, 6 percent.

[9] The rates are 8 percent on the bracket $9,001 to $12,500 and 9 percent on the bracket $12,501 to $20,000.

[10] The rates apply to total income, not merely to the portion of net incomes falling within a given bracket, but as a result of the following tax credits, the schedule in effect is a bracket-rate schedule: $1,001 to $2,000, $5; $2,001 to $3,000, $15; $3,001 to $5,000, $50; $5,001 to $7,000, $55; $7,001 to $9,000, $90; over $9,000, $135.

[11] Income from intangibles, average property-tax rate.

[12] The tax payable under these rates was reduced by 25 percent for the taxable years 1941–44 and by 50 percent for 1945 and 1946. Capital gains are taxed at one-half the regular rates. Income from unincorporated business is taxed at 3 percent.

[13] The rates are: $1 to $1,500, 1 percent; $1,501 to $3,000, 2 percent; $3,001 to $4,500, 3 percent; $4,501 to $6,000, 4 percent; $6,001 to $7,500, 5 percent; over $7,500, 6 percent.

[14] The first $500 is taxed at 2 percent.

[15] The rate applicable to dividends from corporations having at least 75 percent of their property subject to the Tennessee ad valorem tax is 4 percent.

[16] Interest and dividends, 6 percent.

[17] Surtax: Normal tax less $37.50 divided by 6.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. As I understand the Senator from South Carolina, in the State of North Dakota the people pay a rate as high as 15 percent, in certain brackets, and in the District of Columbia the rate is up to 3 percent?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is correct.

Mr. LANGER. In other words, we are paying five times as much.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is correct.

Mr. LANGER. The Senator's position is that before we levy a sales tax on poor people, taxing them on their food and clothing, we should tax the incomes somewhere in the neighborhood of 10 or 15 percent, as some of the States are now doing; is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is correct.

Mr. LANGER. In other words, the sole question is whether we should tax those persons who can afford to pay, or tax those who cannot afford to pay.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is the issue, as I see it.

Mr. President, on page 7, line 19, of the bill it will be found that I have increased the tax on taxable incomes on the first $2,000, to 2 percent. It is 3 percent on the next bracket of $3,000 of taxable income; 4 percent on the next $5,000 of taxable income; 5 percent on taxable income of excess of $10,000.

In North Dakota the taxpayer pays, in the $10,000 bracket, 10 percent, which is exactly twice as much as is suggested the people of the District of Columbia should pay on taxable incomes in excess of $10,000. In North Carolina the rate is 6 percent; in New York the rate is 7 percent; in Arkansas the rate is 4½ percent.

I am offering the amendment in order to try to get the necessary revenue for the District of Columbia.

It will be noticed, also, that we have reduced exemptions. Under the committee bill there is an exemption of $4,000, with $500 for each dependent. My amendment provides for an exemption of $1,000 for a single person, $2,000 for a married couple, and $500 for each dependent.

Let us see what the exemptions are in the States.

I notice that in Alabama the exemption is $300 for dependents; in Arkansas it is $400; in California it is $400.

My amendment provides for an exemption of $500. I notice that in my State the exemptions are only $200 for dependents. In Oregon they are $300. In North Carolina they are $200. In the great State of New York, after the taxation to which I referred a few moments ago, the exemption is $400. In New Mexico it is $200. In Montana it is $300. These figures show that the exemptions for dependents are low.

Mr. LANGER. What about North Dakota?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It will be found that in North Dakota the exemption is $500 for a single man, $1,500 for a married person the head of of family, and $500 for each dependent.

Mr. President, I think I have discussed this matter as fully as any one could have discussed it. I am sorry that it has not always been to a full Senate, but, as Senators know, we sometimes do not talk to a full body, and I am glad to see as many Senators present as there are here at this time.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. LANGER. Does not the Senator think he did a remarkably fine job, in view of the fact that after he talked here Friday, by a majority of seven the Senate adopted his amendment providing that revenue should be raised by the collection of income taxes, instead of by the imposition of a sales tax?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am well pleased with that vote, and I thank each and every Senator for voting as he did. I hope that when we have a vote again on the particular amendment I am now discussing providing for a higher tax on incomes, the Senate will again go on record as in favor of the amendment. Then let it go to a free conference, and at that free conference I think it can be worked out.

Personally I think that if we scrutinize the appropriations and the expenditures, we might be able to cut just a little, and that would eliminate the need for some revenue. I call attention to the fact that a tax on cigarettes is provided, which will result in a return of a million dollars. It will be observed that we will not collect until 6 months late under the pending bill, but in the first year we will be behind only $4,000,000. If the District runs a deficit, it will be found that the next year, under my amendment, there will be $4,000,000 in addition to the needs of the District. What would hinder giving the District the right to borrow three or four million dollars for 1 year?

Mr. President, the big headlines I see in the newspapers amuse me. I see one here, "Higher United States Payments to District Only Solution, McGRATH Says." What would hinder giving them just a little bit more? He introduced a bill to contribute $30,000,000 to the District. My amendment would give them $15,000,000, instead of $12,000,000.

I understand word has been circulated that if we inserted the income-tax provision the House might not approve it, and there would not be any bill.

I notice in the newspaper I hold in my hand a big headline on the front page, "Representative KENNEDY Says House Would Take Senate's Bill for Broader District of Columbia Income Tax." I notice that in his statement he says that is true.

Mr. President, there are several courses we might follow. Remember that when the District's appropriation bill comes to us we will scrutinize it and see how much revenue there is. Then we will decide on how much the appropriation is to be.

Mr. President, I am not surprised to see the District Commissioners and others sitting around in the lobby while the Senate is discussing the sales tax. "Oh," they say, "it is an easy tax. It would just roll the money in." But when it is rolled in, will they not spend it easily, too?

There are many ways we might adopt. Just follow our District leader, the chairman of the committee, not up to the $30,000,000 his bill calls for, but just go about halfway with him above the present figure, and adopt the income-tax amendment, and there will be enough money to run the District government. There is no question about that.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Anderson	Holland	Neely
Brewster	Johnson, Colo.	O'Conor
Butler	Johnson, Tex.	O'Mahoney
Byrd	Johnston, S. C.	Reed
Cain	Kem	Robertson

By order of the Senate, the following announcement is made after each quorum call:

The members of the Committee on Foreign Relations have been granted permission to be absent from the sessions of the Senate while the Committee on Foreign Relations is conducting hearings on the North Atlantic Pact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

REPORT OF ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 179)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I am transmitting herewith the third report of the Economic Cooperation Administration created by the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948, Public Law 472 of the Eightieth Congress, approved April 3, 1948.

The report covers activities under the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948 (title I of Public Law 472) and the China Aid Act of 1948 (title IV of Public Law 472). There is also included a summary of the status of the United States foreign relief program (Public Law 84, 80th Cong.) and the United States foreign aid program (Public Law 389, 80th Cong.).

This report is for the quarter ended December 31, 1948.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 16, 1949.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] for himself and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I venture to invite the attention of the Senate to a relevant self-explanatory telegram, just received, which is in the following language:

MAY 16, 1949.

Hon. MATTHEW M. NEELY,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.:

The Railway Labor Executives' Association, which consists of 20 standard railway labor organizations, is opposed to the sales-tax provisions in H. R. 3704 now pending in the United States Senate. The enactment of such tax legislation would impose upon the masses of the people in the District of Columbia an additional unwarranted tax burden. Therefore, on behalf of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, I earnestly appeal to the Members of the United States Senate to defeat the sales-tax provisions.

H. W. FRASER,
Chairman,
Railway Labor Executives' Association.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I correct in my understanding that the parliamentary situation is that the Senate agreed to the motion which was made on Friday last by the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina was agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion was agreed to.

Mr. LUCAS. And we are now about to vote upon the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The amendment relates to the income tax. The amendment was modified today by the Senator from South Carolina. It is that amendment upon which the Senate is about to vote.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, the first four titles in the bill remain as they are at the present time. On Friday the amendment which the Senator from South Carolina offered struck out those titles.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] for himself and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I wish to make it perfectly clear that the situation seems to be this: If the amendment now offered by the Senator from South Carolina prevails, we shall have written into the bill $7,000,000 more than is needed for the next fiscal year. There are some Senators who say, "We should like to express ourselves in favor of a lower ceiling on income taxes, and we also favor retention of the sales tax."

The situation in the conference will be as follows: The Senate will have passed a bill with $7,000,000 more than is needed.

Presumably we can trade with the House in respect to our views on income taxes. But if in connection with the next amendment, which will be to strike out all reference to the sales tax, we decide to keep the sales tax in the bill, then the sales tax issue will be settled as between the House and Senate. It will not be subject to consideration in conference. So there will be nothing left for us to do except to report back to the Senate the fact that since we could not trade on the sales-tax issue, and since it produces the amount of money which is needed, and since we do not want $7,000,000 in excess of that amount, all we could do was to yield and give up the Johnston amendment. We should then find ourselves back where we are at this very moment.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Am I correct in my understanding that the amendment now to be voted upon would simply strike title IV from the bill and substitute that portion of the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina which deals solely with income taxation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] for himself and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The amendment was, beginning with line 3 on page 47, to strike out down to and including line 4 on page 52, as amended, and insert the following:

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO ARTICLE 1 OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE ACT OF 1947

Article I of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1947, as amended, is further amended as follows:

Paragraph lettered (s) of section 4 of title I of article 1 of said act is amended to read as follows:

"(s) The word 'resident' means every individual domiciled within the District on the last day of the taxable year, and every other individual who maintains a place of abode within the District for more than 7 months of the taxable year, whether domiciled in the District or not. The word 'resident' shall not include any elective officer of the Government of the United States or any employee on the staff of an elected officer in the legislative branch of the Government of the United States if such employee is a bona fide resident of the State of residence of such elected officer, or any officer of the executive branch of such Government whose appointment to the office held by him was by the President of the United States and subject to confirmation by the Senate of the United States and whose tenure of office is at the pleasure of the President of the United States, unless such officers are domiciled within the District on the last day of the taxable year."

SEC. 2. Section 2 of title III of article I of said act is amended by adding thereto the following new subsection:

"(c) Adjusted gross income: The words 'adjusted gross income' as used in this article means gross income less deductions allowed under section 3 (a) of this title: Provided, however, That such deductions were directly incurred in carrying on a trade or business: And provided further, That in determining adjusted gross income, no deductions shall be allowed for charitable contributions, alimony payments, medical and dental expenses, an optional standard deduction, losses of property not connected with trade or business, or for an allowance for salaries or compensation for personal services of the persons liable for the tax."

SEC. 3. Section 3 (a) (1) of title III of article I of said act is amended to read as follows:

"(1) Expenses: All the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business (except as otherwise provided herein), traveling expenses (including the entire amount expended for meals and lodging) while away from home in the pursuit of a trade or business; and rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession, for purposes of the trade or business, of property to which the taxpayer has not taken or is not taking title or in which he has no equity."

SEC. 4. Section (3) (a) (4) (C) of title III of article I of said act is amended to read as follows:

"(C) of property not connected with a trade or business, if such losses arise from fires, storms, shipwrecks, thefts, or other casualty: Provided, however, That no such loss shall be allowed as a deduction under this subsection if such loss is claimed as a deduction for inheritance—or estate—tax purposes: And provided further, That this subsection shall not be construed to permit the deduction of a loss of any capital asset as defined in this article."

SEC. 5. Section 3 (a) (8) of title III of article I of said act is amended to read as follows:

"(8) Charitable contributions: Contributions or gifts, actually paid within the taxable year to or for the use of any religious, charitable, scientific, literary, military, or educational institution, the activities of which are carried on to a substantial extent in the District, and no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual: Provided, That such deduction shall be allowed only in an amount which in the aggregate of all such deductions does not exceed 15 percent of the adjusted gross income."

SEC. 6. Section 3 (a) (9) of title III of article I of said act is amended to read as follows:

"(9) Medical, dental, and so forth, expenses of individuals: Expenses in the case of residents, paid by the taxpayer during the taxable year, not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, for the medical care of the taxpayer, his spouse, or dependents as defined in this article. The term 'medical care,' as used in this subsection, shall include amounts paid for the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of diseases, or for the purpose of effecting healthier function of the body (including amounts paid for accident or health insurance): Provided, however, That a taxpayer may deduct only such expenses as exceed 5 percent of his adjusted gross income: And provided further, That the maximum deduction for the taxable year shall not exceed $1,250."

SEC. 7. Section 3 (a) (13) of title III of article 1, of said act is amended to read as follows:

"(13) In lieu of the foregoing deductions, any resident may irrevocably elect to deduct for the taxable year an optional standard deduction of 10 percent of the adjusted gross income of $500, whichever is lesser: Provided, however, That the option provided in this subsection shall not be permitted on any return filed for any period less than a full calendar or fiscal year."

SEC. 8. Section 3 (a) of title III of article 1 of said act is amended by adding thereto a new subsection to read as follows:

"(15) Reasonable allowance for salaries: A reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered: Provided, however, That in the case of an unincorporated business the aggregate deduction for services rendered by the individual owners or members actively engaged in the conduct of the unincorporated business shall in no event exceed 20 percent of the new income of such business computed without benefit of this deduction: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to exempt any salary or other compensation for personal services from taxation as a part of the taxable income of the person receiving the same."

SEC. 9. Section 4 of title IV of article 1 of said act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. Installment sales: If a person reports any portion of his income from installment sales for Federal income-tax purposes under section 44 of the Federal Internal Revenue Code and as the same may hereafter be amended, and if such income is subject to tax under this article, he may report such income under this article in the same manner and upon the same basis as the same was reported by him for Federal income-tax purposes, if such method of reporting is accepted and approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

SEC. 10. Subsections (a) of section 2 of title V of article I of said act are amended to read as follows:

"(a) Residents and nonresidents: Every nonresident of the District receiving income subject to tax under this article and every resident of the District, except fiduciaries, when—

"(1) his gross income for the taxable year exceeds $1,000, if single, or if married and not living with husband or wife; or

"(2) his gross income for the taxable year exceeds $2,000, if married and living with husband of wife; or

"(3) his gross sales or gross receipts from any trade or business exceeds $5,000, regardless of the amount of his gross income; or

"(4) the combined gross income for the taxable year of husband and wife living together exceeds $2,000 in the aggregate or the combined gross sales or gross receipts from any trade or business exceeds $5,000 regardless of the amount of their gross income."

SEC. 11. Section 3 of title VI of article I of said act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. Imposition and rate of tax: There is hereby annually levied and imposed for each taxable year upon the taxable income of every resident a tax at the following rates:

"Two percent on the first $2,000 of taxable income.

"Three percent on the next $3,000 of taxable income.

"Four percent of the next $5,000 of taxable income.

"Five percent on the taxable income in excess of $10,000."

SEC. 12. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to make such changes in section 4 of title VI of article I of said act as are consistent with the provisions of sections 1 through 11 above.

SEC. 13. Title VIII of article I of said act is repealed.

SEC. 14. Section 10 (a) (4) of title XII of article I of said act is amended to read as follows:

"(4) For the purposes of subsections (a) (1), (a) (2), and (a) (3), a return filed before the last day prescribed by law for the filing thereof shall be considered as filed on such last day."

SEC. 15. The proviso to section 11 of title XII of article I of said act is amended to read as follows: "Provided, That if it shall be determined by the Assessor, the Board of Tax Appeals for the District of Columbia, or any court that any part of any tax which was assessed as a deficiency under the provisions of section 5 of this title was an overpayment, interest shall be allowed and paid upon such overpayment of tax at the rate of 4 percent per annum from the date such overpayment was paid until the date of refund, and in addition thereto any interest upon such overpayment which was paid by the taxpayer shall be refunded."

SEC. 19. Section 2 (b) of title III of article I of said act is amended by adding thereto the following new paragraph:

"(14) Dues and initiation fees in the case of any club organized and operated exclusively for pleasure and recreation, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private individual or shareholder. As used in this subsection the word 'dues' means only sums paid or incurred by members on a monthly, quarterly, annual, or other periodic basis for the privilege of being members of such club and any pro rata assessment made against the members as such; the word 'dues' does not include any sums paid or incurred by members or their guests for food, beverages, or other tangible personal property purchased or for the use of the club's social, athletic, sporting, and other facilities; and the term 'initiation fees' includes any payment, contribution, or loan required as a condition precedent to membership, whether or not any such payment, contribution, or loan is evidenced by a certificate of interest or indebtedness."

SEC. 21. The provisions of this title shall be applicable to taxable years beginning after the 31st day of December 1948.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT]. If he were present and voting, he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCGRATH. On this vote the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER]. If the Senator from Washington were present and voting, he would vote "yea." If the Senator from Tennessee were present and voting, he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Florida would vote "yea" and the Senator from Ohio would vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] are absent on public business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON] is presiding at a hearing being conducted by the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and is therefore necessarily absent.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

On this vote the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. If present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia would vote "yea," and the Senator from Tennessee would vote "nay."

If present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] would vote "yea."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], and the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are absent on official business.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], who is absent on official business, is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] would vote "nay," and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] would vote "yea."

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] is absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] would vote "yea."

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON] is absent by leave of the Senate, and is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who is absent on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON] would vote "yea," and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Montana [Mr. ECTON], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] are detailed on official business.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] is absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting, the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 39, as follows:

So the amendment, as modified, offered by Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, for himself and Mr. NEELY, was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, beginning with line 8, it is proposed to strike out down to and including line 2 on page 47.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, the effect of the amendment is to strike from the bill everything having to do with a sales tax. The sales tax which would be put into effect if the provision of the committee bill were approved, would be a 2-percent sales tax in the District of Columbia. I am asking at this time that that be stricken. I propose to eliminate the feature which would inaugurate a sales tax within the District.

I shall not take up much of the Senate's time. I wish to give an example of what would happen under the bill reported by the committee. If a man with a wife and one child is drawing a salary of $2,000, $2,500, $3,000, or even as much as $5,000, he is required to pay, with certain exceptions, a sales tax on everything he buys. A man working alongside him, drawing the same salary, may provide for only one dependent. In the last analysis, neither of those men would pay an income tax. A single man making $2,000 would not pay a cent under the present law. Under the bill, neither of those men would pay anything by way of income tax. But if the provision for a sales tax is included, a single man would pay a tax merely on what he bought for himself, while the man earning $2,000 with perhaps as many as eight children, would be required to pay a sales tax on everything he bought for those children. That is illustrative of the way a sales tax would operate. I can see no fairness in that.

Under the amendment to the income-tax law, an initial exemption of $4,000 would be allowed, with an added exemption of $500 for each dependent. That is the way the bill would work out if passed as it now stands.

Striking out the sales tax would automatically send the bill back to the committee. That would probably be the next move. That is what I predict would be done. It would be necessary to do that. If my amendment is rejected, Senators will then vote upon the passage of the bill as it now is. Do Senators want to vote for a sales-tax provision, written as it is written at the present time? I do not.

For that reason I have offered an amendment to eliminate the sales-tax feature. I hope the Senate will not wander into this unknown field in the District, speculating upon how much revenue will be raised by means of a sales tax, when there is such a fertile field from which to collect the tax—the income-tax law. The man with many children is given many exemptions. But there are no exemptions under the sales tax, so far as the man who goes to a store to make purchases is concerned. The only exemption he has is so much for a meal. It is the same for everybody. In the field of medicine, it is the same for the rich and the poor. There is no tax on medicine, as I understand.

I shall never agree personally to a sales tax. In offering the amendment, I hope to get a record on how Senators feel regarding a sales tax. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Am I correct in understanding that the Senator's amendment proposes to eliminate the sales-tax provision from the bill?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It would strike out the sales tax, and only that.

Mr. HILL. I voted in favor of the Senator's amendment to increase the rates under the income-tax provision. The Senate in its wisdom rejected the amendment. I know that certain revenue is required for the District of Columbia in order to maintain its schools, hospitals, health services, and many other public services. Now that the Senate has rejected the income-tax provision, if we should agree to the Senator's amendment striking out the sales tax, where will the necessary revenue for the District come from?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. As I stated a few moments ago, if my amendment is adopted, the committee will then understand that the Senate does not want a sales tax, the bill will be recommitted, and the committee will write an equitable income tax, which I regard as the really fertile field. That is what I believe will happen.

Mr. HILL. It seems to me, since the Senate, in its wisdom, has rejected the increase in the income tax, we have no choice at this time, recognizing the compelling need for additional revenue, knowing that there must be additional funds for schools, hospitals, health services, welfare services, and many other services, but to provide the needed revenue by rejecting the Senator's amendment and imposing a sales tax.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] on which the yeas and nays have been requested. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT]. If he were present and voting, he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McGRATH. On this vote the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Washington would vote "yea," and the Senator from Tennessee would vote "nay."

On this vote the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] has a pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER]. If the Senator from Florida were present and voting, he would vote "yea"; if the Senator from Ohio were present and voting, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senators from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN and Mr. WITHERS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR and Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] are absent on public business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON] would vote "yea" and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] are detained on official business.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] is absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting, the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] would vote "yea."

So the amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I might wish to offer an amendment. I desire first to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question. I understand that the Senator made some statement on the floor of the Senate a few days ago in regard to the definition of semipublic institutions, and I wondered if his comment covered the subject of some telegrams I have received. I should like to read them, because if the matter is covered, I shall not offer an amendment. The first message I wish to read comes from Howard A. Meyerhoff, administrative secretary of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and reads:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 10, 1949.

WAYNE MORSE,
Senator From Oregon,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Reference is made to the pending district sales-tax measure, H. R. 3704, section 18 which in defining semipublic institutions narrowly restricts educational institutions to those with teacher-student relationships.

The century-old American Association for the Advancement of Science, with its 206 affiliated educational and scientific societies, views this wording with great concern, since it might establish a precedent for innumerable tax levies. There is no sound basis for distinguishing between academic institutions and the nonprofit scientific and educational organizations that make Washington their headquarters. If there is no such intent there should be no objection to inserting "scientific" in the first sentence of section 18 and in deleting entirely the last sentence of this section. Consistently section 28 (g) should have added "and publications of semipublic institutions as defined."

We hope that you will introduce an amendment to this effect. With appreciation.

HOWARD A. MEYERHOFF,
Administrative Secretary,
American Association for the Advancement of Science.

I also have a similar message from Ralph E. Himstead, general secretary of the American Association of University Professors, which reads:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 11, 1949.

HON. WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Reference pending District of Columbia sales-tax bill, H. R. 3704. Section 18 this bill defines educational institutions as those with student-teacher relationships. American Association of University Professors, which publishes a quarterly magazine of higher education which is sent to its 33,000 members, urges that section 18 and related sections, H. R. 3704, be amended to include as exempt from sales tax the publications of nonprofit educational associations. Such nonprofit educational associations with central offices in Washington, D. C., are the Association of American Colleges, the American Association of Junior Colleges, and the American Council of Education, of which latter organization the American Association of University Professors is a constituent member.

RALPH E. HIMSTEAD,
General Secretary,
American Association of University Professors.

I ask two questions, first, has the Senator from Rhode Island offered an amendment which covers the subject referred to in these telegrams, and if not, would he agree to take one to conference?

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, the subject has been covered by an amendment already adopted. I may state, so that the RECORD will be perfectly clear, that it was never the intention of the committee to change or affect the tax-exempt status of any charitable, educational or religious institution. We had neglected to insert the word "scientific," but now that word has been inserted by amendment. Such organizations are not affected, so long as they are operated in such a manner that no part of the net earnings they may receive inure to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual. I think the desires of those who have communicated with the Senator have been adequately covered.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and other Senators asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT]. If he were present and voting he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote I would vote "nay."

Mr. McGRATH. On this vote the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] has a pair with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON]. If present and voting the Senator from Tennessee would vote "yea." If present and voting the Senator from Washington would vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] are absent on public business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] who is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, would vote "yea" if present.

If present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] is absent on official business and is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] who is detained on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] would vote "yea" and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON] is absent by leave of the Senate and is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] who is absent on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON] would vote "nay" and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] would vote "yea."

The Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] is absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] would vote "nay."

So the bill (H. R. 3704) was passed.

Mr. McGRATH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. HUNT, Mr. McGRATH, Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, Mr. McCARTHY, and Mr. SCHOEPPEL conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORGANIZATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF STATE DEPARTMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1704) to strengthen and improve the organization and administration of the Department of State, and for other purposes, which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That there shall be in the Department of State in addition to the Secretary of State an Under Secretary of State and 10 Assistant Secretaries of State.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of State and the officers referred to in section 1 of this act shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Counselor of the Department of State and the Legal Adviser, who are required to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall rank equally with the Assistant Secretaries of State. Any such officer holding office at the time the provisions of this act become effective shall not be required to be reappointed by reason of the enactment of this act. The Secretary may designate two of the Assistant Secretaries as Deputy Under Secretaries.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of State, or such person or persons designated by him, notwithstanding the provisions of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 999) or any other law, except where authority is inherent in or vested in the President of the United States, shall administer, coordinate, and direct the Foreign Service of the United States and the personnel of the State Department. Any provisions in the Foreign Service Act of 1946, or in any other law, vesting authority in the "Assistant Secretary of State for Administration," the "Assistant Secretary of State in Charge of the Administration of the Department," the "Director General," or any other reference with respect thereto, are hereby amended to vest such authority in the Secretary of State.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of State may promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the functions now or hereafter vested in the Secretary of State or the Department of State, and he may delegate authority to perform any of such functions to officers and employees under his direction and supervision.

SEC. 5. The following statutes or parts of statutes are hereby repealed:

Section 200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended and amplified by the acts authorizing the establishment of additional Assistant Secretaries of State, including section 22 of the act of May 24, 1924 (ch. 182, and the act of December 8, 1944, R. S. 200; 43 Stat. 146; 58 Stat. 798; 5 U. S. C. 152, as amended by Public Law 767, 80th Cong.).

Section 202 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 1000) and any other reference in such act to the "Deputy Director General."

Section 1041 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 1032).

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

REORGANIZATION OF GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 526, to provide for the reorganization of Government agencies, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Calendar No. 213, a bill (S. 526) to provide for the reorganization of Government agencies, and for other purposes.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I have heard it stated that Senate bill 526 may be displaced shortly by the agricultural appropriation bill. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois, the majority leader, if that is a fact; or, if it is not a fact, if he expects to take up the appropriation bill early tomorrow afternoon?

Mr. LUCAS. The bill will not be displaced during this afternoon by the agricultural appropriation bill. Just when the agricultural appropriation bill will be considered I am not able at this moment to say, but it will perhaps be some time during the week.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. But it will not be on short notice tomorrow?

Mr. LUCAS. I do not believe so, because we have another matter on which we must act tomorrow, which is the motion made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] to reconsider the vote by which the Senate recommitted the Labor-Federal Security appropriation bill. That motion will be taken up at 12 o'clock tomorrow immediately after the Senate convenes.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I thank the Senator from Illinois.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 526) to provide for the reorganization of Government agencies, and for other purposes, which has been reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments with amendments.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Perhaps it was stated while I was not on the floor, but has there been any announcement made as to when the calendar will be called?

Mr. LUCAS. Let me say to the Senator from Florida that there has been no announcement as to when the calendar will be called, but it will be called sometime during the present week.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments held considerable hearings and gave very careful study to Senate bill 526 before reporting it favorably to the Senate with certain amendments.

Mr. President, the need for reorganization of the executive branch of the Federal Government, in the interest of economy and efficiency of operation, is recognized and acknowledged by the President, by the Congress, and by the citizens of this Nation. It is essential that the Congress, in the public interest, enact legislation to effectuate the necessary reforms to bring the executive structure into a cohesive and workable organization in attune with modern times.

The pending bill, S. 526, continues a practice previously initiated by the Congress to expedite reorganizations within the executive branch of the Government. The original effort toward reorganization by delegation of authority to the President, and proposed to be continued in the pending bill, was first incorporated in the Economy Act of June 30, 1932. Under that authorization, President Herbert Hoover submitted 11 reorganization plans, which were subject to disapproval by either House of Congress within 60 days after submission. Due to the impending change in administrations, all 11 plans submitted after the general elections in 1932 were rejected by the House of Representatives, then under Democratic control, on the ground that the incoming administration should be permitted to review these proposals and submit its own reorganization program to the Congress.

Amendments to the Economy Act in 1933 granted additional reorganization authority to the President, under broadened powers providing that reorganizations could be effected by Executive order effective after 60 days unless Congress set aside such plan by the enactment of a new statute. Under this act, 8 pincipal and 15 subsidiary Executive orders were issued by President Franklin D. Roosevelt, none of which was set aside by statute within the 60-day period.

In 1939 the Congress passed the first Reorganization Act under which Executive initiation of reorganization plans was authorized, to become effective after 60 days unless disapproved by concurrent resolution of both Houses. Under this act five reorganization plans were submitted by President Roosevelt, none of which was rejected by either House. These plans included the creation of the Federal Security Agency, the Federal Works Agency, the Federal Loan Agency, and the Executive Office of the President. Other transfers and consolidations effected under Plans I and II, submitted by the President and effectuated on July 1, 1939, included the Farm Credit Corporation, the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, the Commodity Credit Corporation, and the Rural Electrification Administration to the Department of Agriculture; the Foreign Commerce Service, Foreign Agricultural Service, and the Foreign Service Buildings Commission to the Department of State; the Federal Prison Industry and the National Training School for Boys to the Department of Justice; and the Inland Waterways Corporation to the Department of Commerce.

During the war, Congress made further extensive temporary delegations of legislative authority to the President under the War Powers Act, which reorganizations were subject to further direct legislative action by Congress prior to or after such authority had expired, if they were to be made permanent.

The last Reorganization Act approved by Congress was in 1945, providing for the same procedure as under the 1939 act, that reorganization plans would become effective after 60 days unless disapproved by concurrent resolution by both the House and the Senate. Under this act President Truman submitted seven plans to Congress, three of which were rejected by both Houses and failed to become effective; three were rejected by one House but became law; one was not opposed by either House. This act expired April 1, 1948.

I point out at this time that in both the 1939 and the 1945 acts, which provided that reorganization plans should go into effect within 60 days unless disapproved by concurrent resolutions of both the House and Senate, there were specific exemptions as to a number of agencies of the Government. As I recall, the 1939 act contained 21 specific exemptions, and the 1945 act contained 11 exemptions. The pending bill contains no exemptions.

In July 1947 the Congress approved the bill creating the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, to be composed of 12 members, with appointments to be made on a bipartisan basis by the Speaker of the House, by the President pro tempore of the Senate, and by the President. In creating the Commission, the Congress recognized the urgent need for reorganization studies with a view to effectuating extensive consolidations and unification of overlapping and duplicating agencies throughout the entire executive branch. The Commission was composed of Members of Congress, representatives from the executive branch of the Government, and from the public in general.

We hope that you will introduce an amendment to this effect. With appreciation.

HOWARD A. MEYERHOFF,
Administrative Secretary,
American Association for the Advancement of Science.

I also have a similar message from Ralph E. Himstead, general secretary of the American Association of University Professors, which reads:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 11, 1949.

Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Reference pending District of Columbia sales-tax bill, H. R. 3704. Section 18 this bill defines educational institutions as those with student-teacher relationships. American Association of University Professors, which publishes a quarterly magazine of higher education which is sent to its 33,000 members, urges that section 18 and related sections, H. R. 3704, be amended to include as exempt from sales tax the publications of nonprofit educational associations. Such nonprofit educational associations with central offices in Washington, D. C., are the Association of American Colleges, the American Association of Junior Colleges, and the American Council of Education, of which latter organization the American Association of University Professors is a constituent member.

RALPH E. HIMSTEAD,
General Secretary,
American Association of University Professors.

I ask two questions, first, has the Senator from Rhode Island offered an amendment which covers the subject referred to in these telegrams, and if not, would he agree to take one to conference?

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, the subject has been covered by an amendment already adopted. I may state, so that the RECORD will be perfectly clear, that it was never the intention of the committee to change or affect the tax-exempt status of any charitable, educational or religious institution. We had neglected to insert the word "scientific," but now that word has been inserted by amendment. Such organizations are not affected, so long as they are operated in such a manner that no part of the net earnings they may receive inure to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual. I think the desires of those who have communicated with the Senator have been adequately covered.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and other Senators asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT]. If he were present and voting he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote I would vote "nay."

Mr. McGRATH. On this vote the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] has a pair with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON]. If present and voting the Senator from Tennessee would vote "yea." If present and voting the Senator from Washington would vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] are absent on public business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] who is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, would vote "yea" if present.

If present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] is absent on official business and is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] who is detained on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] would vote "yea" and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] would vote "nay."

The Commission was composed of Members of Congress, representatives from the executive branch of the Government, and from the public in general.

Former President Hoover was made Chairman. The Commission, with the aid of a large technical staff, made numerous studies extending over a period of 18 months into all phases of the executive branch of the Government activities. The Commission divided its work into functional and departmental segments, and created 24 task forces composed of about 300 outstanding experts with authority to make complete studies and extensive recommendations. The Commission has submitted 18 separate reports to the Congress, in the following order:

First. General Management of the Executive Branch.

Second. Personnel Management.

Third. Office of General Services—supply activities.

Fourth. The Post Office.

Fifth. Foreign Affairs.

Sixth. Department of Agriculture.

Seventh. Budgeting and Accounting.

Eighth. National Security Organization.

Ninth. Veterans' Affairs.

Tenth. Department of Commerce.

Eleventh. Department of the Treasury.

Twelfth. Regulatory Commissions.

Thirteenth. Department of Labor.

Fourteenth. Department of the Interior.

Fifteenth. Social Security, Education, and Indian Affairs.

Sixteenth. Medical Activities.

Seventeenth. Business Enterprises.

Eighteenth. Part 1, Overseas Administration; Part 2, Federal-State Relations; Part 3, General Research.

All these reports are available to Members of Congress, and contain the recommendations of the Commission on the Reorganization of the Executive Branch of the Government.

On January 13, 1949, the Commission submitted a request to the Congress that reorganization authority be granted to the President, in line with previous reorganization acts, to expedite putting into effect the Commission's recommendations. Emphasis was placed on the importance of limiting exemptions. It was the opinion of the Commission that past experience had clearly shown that unrestricted authority should be given to the President in order to insure the prompt submission of reorganizations recommended by the Commission. It was further pointed out that this procedure, where it could be employed, had proved to be preferable to the ordinary legislative processes requiring initiation of legislation by Congress, committee action, and approval by both Houses of Congress and by the President.

On January 17, the President requested the enactment of a law granting to him unlimited authority to submit reorganization plans to take effect after 60 days, unless disapproved by consurrent resolution of the Congress.

Following the President's message, as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments I introduced the pending bill, Senate bill 526, providing for the reorganization authority requested by the President. The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to which the bill was referred, held full hearings in a sincere effort to report a bill that would give the President substantially the authority he requested. The pending bill was reported favorably to the Senate on April 7, 1949.

In considering a program for effectuating required reorganizations, it was the consensus of the committee that three primary procedures should be followed:

First. That internal reorganizations affecting administrative procedures could be accomplished either by administrative action or by Executive order within the scope of existing law;

Second. That reorganizations relating to abolishing unnecessary or duplicating agencies, or the transfer or consolidation of existing components or related functions, subject to limitations prescribed by Congress, could be effected under authority granted in the pending bill by reorganization plans, with congressional approval. It is the second procedure that the pending bill undertakes to authorize.

Third. That the Congress should initiate substantive legislation required to effectuate broad reorganization programs involving the transfer and consolidation of agencies or components, and the coordination of existing policies and functions.

Mr. President, a study was made by the Bureau of the Budget of the various reports submitted by the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government to determine the action necessary to put into effect the 277 recommendations of the Commission by administrative action, reorganization plan, or legislation, on this general premise. The Bureau of the Budget indicates that 114 specific recommendations or suggested reorganizations by the Commission may be effectuated by administrative action, without any further authority from Congress; that 124 separate recommendations by the Commission could be effectuated either by substantive legislation or direct appropriations to already existing components of the Government; and that 80 such reorganizations could be effectuated by reorganization plan, as proposed in the pending bill. There were a total of 288 Bureau of the Budget determinations as to changes required to conform to the 277 specific recommendations made by the Commission, and a total of 318 specified actions indicated as necessary to implement all the Commission recommendations.

Mr. President, I point out the study which has been made by the Bureau of the Budget, not because all the actions recommended as a result of that study are proposed to be undertaken through the passage of the pending measure, for under this bill only approximately 80 of the reorganizations in accordance with the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget can be effected. As for many others, specific legislation enacted by the Congress will be required in order to place into effect the changes recommended by the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LODGE. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, if he prefers to yield later on. However, I wish to ask him whether the text of Senate bill 526 is the same as the text of the corresponding House bill, and whether the new matter inserted is additional to the House bill, or whether the entire bill now before us is new language.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The words in italics are new language, being amendments proposed by the Senate committee. The House also has made some amendments or changes in the bill originally introduced in the House. Both the House bill and this bill vary somewhat from the original bills introduced in the respective Houses.

Mr. LODGE. The measure now before the Senate is not the House bill with certain changes proposed by the Senate committee but is the original Senate bill as modified by the committee; is that correct?

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is correct.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, a moment ago I stated that a total of 288 Bureau of the Budget determinations as to changes were required in order to conform to the 277 specific recommendations made by the Commission, and that a total of 318 specified actions were indicated as necessary in order to implement all the Commission's recommendations. This is due to an expansion or consolidation of Commission recommendations into two or more necessary actions required to effectuate the entire reorganization proposed. This would mean that existing laws will permit the implementation of almost 40 percent of the Commission recommendations by administrative action, and about 25 percent can be effectuated by reorganization plan, under the pending legislation. Under this determination, from a minimum of 30 percent to a maximum of 40 percent of all the Commission recommendations will require direct legislative action by Congress.

Action has already been taken by the Committee on Expenditures in reporting the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, which is Senate bill 1809, in line with the Commission recommendations in Report No. 3 on the Office of General Services, and involving eight substantive legislation recommendations, according to the Budget Bureau Digest.

Reports from other committees indicate that some legislative action will be taken on other recommendations of the Commission before the end of the present session of Congress. I understand that other committees, to whom have been referred some of the Commission's reports or some of the bills proposed for the purpose of carrying out the recommendations contained in the Commission's reports, have already held hearings, and that some of those measures have already been reported and are on the calendar. Others are in process of being handled by certain of the committees, I understand, just as others are in process of being handled by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

There is no purpose or desire on the part of the membership of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments in any way to delay or obstruct or impede the processing of proposed legislation which the committee feels is desirable, and much of which is recommended for the purpose of carrying out this reorganization plan. I desire to state—and I am sure that all my colleagues will agree—that in undertaking to enact specific legislation with regard to reorganization proposals, it is often a very technical and complicated matter to decide upon the exact language which should be included in the bill in order to have it accomplish the desired result. I know that other members of the committee share that feeling. Certainly we cannot consider this matter simply on a basis of saying whether we favor or oppose it. Meticulous work is required in order that we may present to the Senate a bill which will do in an intelligent way what has been recommended in the Commission's reports.

So I assure my colleagues that the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman is most anxious to consider as expeditiously as we can and report to the Senate a number of legislative proposals which will be required in connection with the Commission's recommendations on subjects over which our committee has jurisdiction; and reports from other committees indicate that some legislative action will be taken on other recommendations. Making no allowance for recommendations which may not meet with the approval of the committees, nor for any reorganization plans that may be disapproved by Congress, and estimating that the President may initiate 25 percent of the Commission's recommendations by reorganization plans if the proposed legislation is adopted without further delay, it will permit the consideration of up to 40 percent of the Commission's recommendations before the adjournment of Congress. Of course, on that point we cannot be accurate; we do not know what may intervene; but it is possible, at least reasonable hope is afforded, that a large part of the reorganization program may receive consideration before this session of the Congress adjourns. With the 35 percent to 40 percent which may be effectuated by administrative action, the over-all percentage might run up to 65 percent or more by the end of the calendar year.

At this point I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a chart headed "Condensed summary of the Hoover Commission's reports and action to be taken." It is a chart prepared by the Bureau of the Budget, pointing out the number of recommendations of the Hoover Commission, and classifying them, those which can be put into effect without new legislation, the number which it is hoped may be achieved by the authority granted under the pending bill, and initiation by the President of reorganization plans, and the number which will possibly require specific legislation. I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the chart was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. McCLELLAN. A comparison of the pending bill with the Reorganization Act of 1945 has been incorporated in the committee report, starting on page 6. For the information of the Senate, I shall endeavor to point out very briefly some of the major differences between the pending bill and the Reorganization Act of 1945.

The 1945 act provided for the disapproval of any reorganization plan submitted to the Congress by concurrent resolution, requiring concurrence by both the House and Senate before such plans became law; while the present bill permits the disapproval of any plan submitted to the Congress by the President by a simple resolution of either House.

Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to bear in mind another important difference, when I reach it. That is, that the bill reported by the committee, which is now before the Senate, is what may be called a clean bill. There is no exemption in it, there is not an exception. Every agency, every branch, every function of the executive branch of the Government is treated alike, and the President is granted full authority to submit reorganization plans that might affect any agency or any function of the executive branch of the Government.

The pending bill includes provisions which are broader than the 1945 act, through authority granted to top officials of Federal agencies to delegate routine functions vested in them by law, now prohibited from delegation under the present statute.

The Hoover Commission, in its studies of the executive agencies of the Government, found many instances of the law requiring the performance by the head of the agency of a specific act which was not of any vital importance or consequence and which might well be delegated by the head of the agency to some competent subordinate or requiring the performance of a duty which in many instances simply placed an undue burden, was time-consuming on the part of the agency, was unnecessary, and therefore the authority could be delegated. The pending bill provides for such delegation of authority. At the same time, of course, we still hold the head of the agency responsible for the performance of the duties entrusted to him. The bill does not remove the responsibility of officials from reviewing actions taken, but permits them to transfer or delegate details and functions vested in them by specific provisions of law, which may be more expeditiously handled by minor officials. The pending bill broadens and simplifies language relating to reorganizations and the creation of offices as compared to the 1945 act.

With reference to that, Mr. President, I may say that after experience and observation it was easily found that the language granting general authority could be simplified very much in comparison to the 1945 act, detracting nothing from the powers therein delegated, but extending and embracing all the powers delegated in it. The changes are largely improvements of expression, a matter of language, changes that do not go to the substance of the bill.

The bill also permits the President more latitude in the creation of new agencies, even to the extent of establishing executive departments of Cabinet rank. The President did not have that authority under the 1945 act; he did not have it under the pending bill as originally introduced; but we have broadened his power to the extent that the President may create an agency or declare the head of an existing agency to have Cabinet rank. The provision in the 1945 act which prohibits consolidation of two or more executive departments by a reorganization plan has been retained, however, in accordance with the President's recommendation that the elimination of executive departments shall only be effectuated by statute. While the President is given power to create a new department of Cabinet status, he is not under the act authorized to abolish an existing Cabinet department.

The bill, as reported by the committee, has eliminated the restrictive provisions relating to quasi-judicial and quasi-legislative functions of independent agencies, and also of certain independent agencies that have been named and that were excluded from the authority delegated in previous reorganization acts. I here make reference again to the fact that in the act passed in 1945, 11 specific exemptions were contained, whereas there are none in the pending bill; and in the 1939 act, my recollection is, there were 21 specific exemptions.

The pending bill also includes the reorganization of the government of the District of Columbia, which has heretofore been excluded from reorganization plans.

Mr. President, I am not an authority on the District of Columbia as to the particular establishment of the District government, but I should assume that in comparison, with respect to size, functions, and expenditures, it is one of the major departments of the Government. If we are to have a bill which absolutely exempts no agency in the executive branch, I think the District of Columbia should be included within the purview of the bill. The committee has so recommended.

The bill passed by the House of Representatives does not grant authority to the President to create a new executive department. The House bill also contains a so-called single-package provision, namely, it provides that a reorganization plan affecting seven named agencies shall not also provide for a reorganization which does not affect such agencies, but permits the transfer to such agencies of the whole or any part of any agency not so named.

At the conclusion of my remarks I shall have something to say in briefly expressing my own views regarding these two basic principles in the bill.

Many amendments were submitted to the committee which would have extended the same treatment to other agencies not named in the House bill. In other words, when our committee undertook to consider the legislation which the House had already passed, having acted hurriedly—I do not mean to say that it had acted with too much speed, but it acted with more speed than we found convenient in the Senate—it had named seven agencies, quasi-judicial legislative commissions, and so forth, and provided that any reorganization which affected either or all should be contained in a separate plan, and no other agency of Government could be included within it, except with respect to the transfer of a function of another agency of Government to the restricted agency.

When the committee considered that question there were a number of amendments submitted, and it was recommended that the committee stop where the House had stopped, at seven. If the committee had adopted the policy of writing in exemptions, I think probably more than those named in the House bill would have been written.

Former President Hoover was questioned when he appeared before the committee relative to this provision, and specifically regarding the proposal to remove the National Military Establishment from restrictions imposed by this section. He was unalterably opposed to such treatment of single segments of the Government under a general reorganization plan.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to his colleague?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I am not quite clear as to the nature of those seven instances. Are they considered exemptions from the operation of the bill? I should like the Senator to clarify that point. I did not quite catch the significance.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I would not classify them as outright exemptions. Those who opposed any restrictions or limitations in the bill have called them exemptions. Properly, I think they are not actual exemptions, but are restrictive to the extent that the President could not act as freely as he could with reference to all other agencies. I say to my colleague that had the Senate committee not decided to report a clean bill, I would have supported a one-package exemption. But I shall come to that a little later. I want to make some comments with reference to it, and I desire to make clear to the Senate why we have reported the bill in this form. It was in the hope that it might be understood that, as in all legislative processes, it is sometimes necessary to give a little and take a little in order to find a happy medium where everyone's rights are protected and their views generally respected. I think we have that kind of a bill before us.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. O'CONOR. May I ask the very able chairman of the committee, Is it not true that in line with the question just asked by the junior Senator from Arkansas, in the event the House provisions should prevail and remain in the bill, it would be necessary for the President to send down separate messages in regard to those particular agencies, so that if there were any over-all plans desired for a number of agencies that effort would be thwarted?

Mr. McCLELLAN. The President would have to send down separate plans, under the provisions as I interpret them. I think the Senator is eminently correct. Frankly, I would favor outright exemption procedure rather than a one-package provision, as it has been called, because, I believe, if the House does not want a certain agency disturbed, it should say so, and not give the President any authority to reorganize it. If we are not to go that far, then I should prefer a clean bill with what I regard as ample protection for every agency and everyone's particular theory that this agency ought not to be disturbed, and that agency should be reorganized, because I believe we have reported a bill whose provisions will preserve the integrity of the legislative process. I believe this provision in the bill will help to insure that a better quality of reorganization plans will be submitted to the Congress. That is what we all desire. There is no disagreement, no dissension, regarding the over-all objective which we are seeking. I am sure there would not be a dissenting vote with regard to increasing economy and efficiency.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONOR. Does not the Senator feel, having in mind the interrelationship between and among the various departments, that it is much better to have a clean bill than to have certain so-called exemptions or certain designated agencies which are not treated in the same manner as are a great number of other agencies?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I think the able Senator from Maryland will recall my views as expressed in committee, in our executive session in connection with this bill. I have always favored the exemption of one or two agencies. I still feel that I would rather see them unmolested and not disturbed. But since we have reported this bill, which was, in some measure, a compromise of our views, as to which, with possibly one exception, the full committee agreed, and since there has been an opportunity for more mature reflection, I am convinced that the bill does afford a free opportunity to the President to submit any kind of a reorganization plan which, in his judgment, he thinks the Congress should accept. I am equally convinced that if good plans are submitted, neither House of the Congress will oppose them.

I believe there is a fundamental principle involved in the process of permitting either House to reject a plan, because otherwise we delegate power. That has been done before, but I call attention again to the fact that it has not been done heretofore where there was a clean bill, because in enacting the legislation Congress stepped in and said, "We will give you authority over these agencies, to reorganize, subject to the disapproval of both Houses, but here are 11 or here are 21 which you must not touch." So I say that the more I have considered the provision in the pending bill, with no restrictions and no limitations, the more impressed I have been that this is the fair way, the equitable way, and the proper and effective way, to get the best reorganization plan submitted to the Congress.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. If I understand correctly, it takes affirmative action of a majority of either House to disapprove one of the plans.

Mr. McCLELLAN. My colleague is correct, it takes affirmative action on a vote to disapprove. Neither House is compelled to act on a plan. They can assent to it, they can acquiesce in the plan by negative action, by doing nothing. They must act affirmatively on a resolution of disapproval, and if they act affirmatively, that action must be taken within 60 days. If not taken within 60 days, then the plan will be effective.

I wish to point out to my colleague that that is why I have found it difficult in the past, in connection with the other acts, to go along with the provision which would require a concurrent resolution of the two Houses to disapprove. I know it is sometimes said, "If we are going to get reorganization, we must give the President power to reorganize." But reorganization of itself may not be a worth-while objective. It is the character and the quality of reorganization we get which will determine whether the effort we are making and the program we are undertaking will actually effectuate wholesome and efficient and economical reorganization of the executive branch of the Government.

Let me say to my colleague and to the Senate that I think there are those who know that there are one or two agencies of Government which I should dislike very much to see disturbed, but notwithstanding that, I am going to defend the pending bill as is, I am going to vote against any amendments placing exemptions in the bill, and unless the Senate starts placing exemptions in the bill, so long as it leaves this provision for a one House veto, which I think preserves the integrity of the legislative process, I am going down the line for the bill and vote against any exemptions and let the President have a clean bill and a free hand. At the same time, I say I have had trouble going along with the requirement that two Houses must disapprove to keep a reorganization plan from becoming law, because if we retain that provision, if we retain that procedure for disapproval, we are in effect abdicating the legislative power and duty of at least one House of the legislative branch of the Government, because the action of the President, with the approval, or no action at all, negative approval, of either House of the Congress, could put into effect a reorganization plan which the other House unanimously opposed, and that plan, once in effect, would be tantamount to the enactment of a law.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. As a very junior member of the Senator's committee, but one who has participated in the general plan which the able Senator from Arkansas has been approving today, I wish cordially to join myself to the philosophy of action which he is recommending in the bill. Furthermore, I wish to pay him the compliment which he deserves, because I know how deeply he is attached to the exemption of at least one or two very important departments or agencies of the Government. I know he considers it of primary importance to him and his area that they should be exempted, and when he is willing to surrender the right of exemption at that point in order to have a clean bill, without exemptions, it seems to me that he not only is behaving in a statesmanlike way himself, but that he is setting an example to the rest of us which we will do well to follow.

If the Senator will permit, I should like to add that I am one of those who would very seriously object to the wrong kind of reorganization for one particular instrumentality in which I have had 10 years' interest, namely, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. I am willing to take my chances on a clean bill if we can have a clean bill. I am willing to take my chances on the forum of the House and Senate for the ultimate trial of the justication of a Presidential plan. But if we are not to have a clean bill, I shall find it irresistably necessary to urge the exemption of the agency in which I am interested, and I strongly suspect that there will be 94 other Senators besides the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Michigan who will have the same point of view.

The net result will be a reorganization bill which so totally ties the hands of the President of the United States that he will have, if he desires it, a perfect excuse to do absolutely nothing under the reorganization law. I am not willing to give him that excuse. I do not want to leave the matter in that negative form. On the contrary, I want to give the President every opportunity to make recommendations which can submit themselves to the judgment of the House and Senate.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the recommendation made by the committee is the best possible formula to give reorganization its maximum chance, at long last, to make some progress in demobilizing the executive bureaucracy of the Federal Government.

If the Senator will permit me further to intrude upon his time, I should like to contribute this testimony. The able chairman of the committee knows that before the decision was made by the committee, I took special pains to consult that group on the outside of Congress which is organizing itself in the interest of getting maximum results from the Hoover reports. I submitted to the spokesmen for that group the very frank question, "Which would you rather have, a reorganization bill permitting a veto by each House of Congress, a clean bill with no exemptions under those circumstances, or would you rather have the two-House veto as originally contemplated by the House bill, and a list of exemptions?" I said, "I don't want any snap answer, either. I want you to spend a day to bring me an answer on which I can rely." At the end of the day the answer was that they felt it was infinitely preferable to have a clean bill, as it has been reported by the committee. I do not mean by that testimony to certify that they are satisfied with this arrangement, because of course they would like to have both of these protections. But since it is perfectly obvious that both protections cannot be provided, I think they are right when they choose the protection which has been recommended by the bill, and which is ably supported by the chairman of the committee, in spite of his personal reluctance in connection with some phases of it. I think the Senate will have made the greatest possible contribution to the progress of reorganization under the Hoover reports if it agrees with the able Senator from Arkansas and proceeds to take the bill as he has presented it to the Senate.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I wish to thank the distinguished Senator from Michigan, who is now a member of the committee. He became a member of the committee only this year. I express my personal appreciation to him for the valuable contribution he made in helping us prepare the bill. As I stated earlier this afternoon, legislation of this character is not easy to agree upon. The Senator from Michigan made a very valuable contribution all the way through in the consideration of the measure. I agree with what the Senator from Michigan has said. If we put enough exemptions and restrictions in the bill we can give the President a reorganization bill but leave him nothing to reorganize. If the Senator from Michigan and I should insist that this agency or that agency, in which we are interested, should be exempted from the provisions of the bill, and, as the able Senator from Michigan suggested, if the 94 other Senators should insist on exempting agencies in which they are interested, as they probably would if they have the same feeling about other agencies that I have about one or two I have in mind, and concessions were made respecting them, the result would be we might pass a so-called reorganization bill, but have nothing to reorganize.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to compliment the Senator for the manly way in which he has approached this matter, because I realize that there are agencies of the Government in which he is profoundly interested. I agree with him and I agree with the Senator from Michigan that it is a great step forward if we can put this bill onto the statute books. I think the Senator knows of my strong interest in the whole subject.

The thing which preoccupies me is what is going to be the fate of this legislation when it goes to conference. How optimistic is the Senator from Arkansas on that point, and can he give us a few words of assurance as to his general approach to that topic?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I will say to the able Senator from Massachusetts that, of course, I cannot predict whether the House conferees are going to agree with us or not. But to the Senator from Massachusetts and to the whole membership of the Senate I say that when the bill is passed I shall have no intention, as a conferee, if I am one of the conferees on the part of the Senate, of yielding on either of these basic points. We might just as well settle that question, and I want the Members of the Senate to know now that I, as a conferee on the part of the Senate, am not going to yield on either of these basic points. I think that needs to be known, and I believe the Senate should vote on the bill with that understanding. I think it would be manifestly unfair for me not to take that position. I do not say that, of course, with any disregard for the views the other House may entertain, but we are endeavoring to pass through the Senate a clean bill, and if we cannot keep it clean, then we will have, so far as I am concerned, to try to pass another bill.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is a very forthright statement. It is the kind I would expect the Senator from Arkansas to make. I think it is most helpful and reassuring to have those good words in the RECORD.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is very much the way I feel about it. There are other members of the committee present, and I know some of them share those views.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. In previous reorganization bills different agencies of Government have always been exempted, both by the House and by the Senate. Is that not correct?

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I correct in saying that this is the first time that either branch of the Congress has ever come forth with a clean bill wherein no agency of the Government is exempted, and giving the President full power to reorganize?

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is correct with respect to the three major reorganization bills of this character which have been enacted into law in the past. Of course, in the War Powers Act and in the Economy Act there were probably no exemptions. That, however, I do not recall.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. In reading the committee report I find that the House has exempted from the bill the National Military Establishment, the Board of Governors, Federal Reserve System, the Interstate Commerce Commission and Securities and Exchange Commission.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That was what the committee reported to the floor of the House. Three other agencies were added on the floor of the House. The bill was further amended, as the Senator will see if he reads further along in the report.

Mr. LUCAS. That is what I was coming to next. In addition to the agencies the committee exempted when submitting the report to the floor of the House, three other agencies were exempted on the floor, making in all seven agencies which the House exempted. With respect to the query propounded by the Senator from Massachusetts about what may happen in conference, I do not know what will happen there, and neither does the Senator from Arkansas, of course; but, assuming that the conferees on the part of the House might recede with respect to these agencies and agree with the Senate that no agencies shall be exempt, would that make any difference with respect to the other point the Senator is now stressing with respect to the veto by each branch of the Congress?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Very much so, because I want to keep faith with myself and with every Member of this body. I could not vote for the bill with some exemptions in it if the two-House veto should be retained. I want the Senate to know and understand just how I personally feel about the matter. I say again with reference to the remarks made by the able Senator from Michigan that I feel in bringing forth the bill in the form in which it now is, I have made as much sacrifice as I am asking any other Senator to make in voting for the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. I am sure I understand the able Senator, but I desire to make the matter perfectly clear. In other words, if the House were to recede from the provisions that are now in the House bill with respect to the exemptions contained in it, and have no exemptions whatever in the bill, and if the House should agree to the provisions of the Senate bill, would the Senator from Arkansas under those conditions still insist on a separate veto by each House?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes. I would insist because I could not support the bill with exemptions out of it, if it required action on the part of both Houses to disapprove by concurrent resolutions.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me so that I may ask a question of the Senator from Michigan, whose comment I heard a short while ago?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONOR. Does not the Senator from Michigan feel that with the bill modified as it is our committee has virtually accomplished all that reasonably could be expected, and that looking at the situation realistically it is the best way in which to effect an over-all reorganization program? Does not the Senator so feel?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is my opinion. I want to make it very plain that I think we are not free agents to write this reorganization formula without any limitations whatever. It is simply not in the cards to write that sort of a bill. We confront this choice of a bill which is a clean bill without agency exemptions, and a one-House veto, or a bill with a two-House veto and a list of exemptions as long as one's arm. Now, if the reorganization plans cannot justify themselves when submitted by the President in both Houses of Congress, then the presumption is, I should say, under the American legislative precedent and system, that the reorganization recommendations are not worthy of approval. That is the basis upon which we write laws. I have never heard of a system under which the House alone could enact a law. That is precisely what would be undertaken in reverse, except as the single-House veto as provided in the Senate recommendation were to be followed.

As a matter of elementary justice, let us see what is involved. The Senator from Arkansas says that when he submits a clean bill he is giving up the right to demand an exemption which is of extreme importance to him and the people of his State. Could we possibly ask the Senator from Arkansas to give up an exemption which is of extreme importance to him and to the people of his State if, on the other hand, we leave the bill in a form in which the Senator from Arkansas might never even have an opportunity to vote upon a recommendation which he considers of such importance? I think that not only is this a sound choice from the standpoint of choosing the better of the relative opportunities which we confront, but, regardless of that relationship, I think fundamentally it is sound for the precise reason which I have indicated.

I wish to make it as clear as I can that I share with the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] all his hopes and aspirations for this undertaking, for which he was originally responsible in part through his authorship of the original resolution. I want the Hoover reports to have their maximum opportunity for effective consideration and effective application. Under the economic pressure of the times, when the great Federal bureaucracy has grown, like Topsy, into a thing of utter economic menace to the taxpayers of the United States, I believe the time has come when we must take advantage of this opportunity to undertake to streamline the executive branch of the Government. I think every rational mind in the Senate is dedicated to that objective. I think 95 percent of the American people are dedicated to that objective. I want the Senate to answer those objectives and aspirations to the maximum. In my opinion, we answer them to the maximum when we accept the committee report, because we have given the President carte blanche, without reservation or exemption, to make any recommendations he desires. We simply stand upon our ultimate legislative right to pass judgment in both Houses of Congress on the wisdom of what he proposes. That is the American system. That is the best way to get results from reorganization.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I appreciate very much the sentiments of the Senator from Michigan. I fully agree with them.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, since the committee reported the bill I have said that I am more impressed with the bill now than I was before. Notwithstanding the fact that there are some agencies which I would not want to see disturbed, if a reorganization plan is submitted which does disturb them, if both Houses agree that they should be disturbed, perhaps I am mistaken. We all must submit to the will of the majority in connection with questions which do not actually reach down into and undertake to uproot a fundamental principle of liberty or of constitutional processes. Certainly this is not such a question. It is a matter of opinion whether a particular function can be better performed by one agency than by another. That question does not involve a basic fundamental of government. If it did, I would have no hesitancy, as many Senators know, in resorting to what might be termed "dilatory tactics" to delay a vote on something which I thought struck at one of the fundamental principles of democracy and liberty. But if a majority of both the House and Senate agrees with what the President has recommended in a reorganization plan, I think it should go into effect. However, I do not believe that any reorganization plan which is, in effect, tantamount to law, should ever go into operation with the approval of one House of the Congress and the disapproval of the other. That would be striking at one of the basic fundamentals of legislative integrity. Fortunately, nothing has happened under the other two acts to cause alarm, but we are passing this bill in the hope that there may be the greatest, most concerted effort toward reorganizing the executive branch of the Government, and that a thorough job will be done.

Mr. President, I am not too optimistic about immediate economies being effected. The economies to be effected will be the result of a better and more orderly arrangement, better management arrangements, and better housekeeping arrangements of the executive branch of the Government. I entertain high hopes for such results. In such a reorganization related functions will be brought together. There will be a better arrangement of the various interrelated functions, and they will be integrated in their operating effect. In that way I believe that economies can be effected in the future.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. THYE. As a former member of the committee, I commend the able Senator from Arkansas, chairman of the committee, and the other members of the committee for reporting such a fine bill to the Senate. A Reorganization Act is a most important and necessary step in our Government.

A year ago when the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] presented his ideas for reorganization, which developed into the creation of the Hoover Commission, I was most encouraged. I am even more encouraged now, as a former member of the committee, by the fine presentation which the Senator from Arkansas has made as chairman of the committee.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. President, I am about to conclude. I do not wish to ask for undue haste, but I am hopeful that we can conclude consideration of the bill this afternoon.

I believe that it is unnecessary for me to proceed with the remainder of my prepared remarks. If I may have unanimous consent that the remainder of my prepared address be inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks, I shall not take further time in discussing the measure.

There being no objection, the additional statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The House bill continues reorganization authority indefinitely, without time limitation. Specific expiration dates were included in previous acts. An amendment was approved by the committee which continues authority under the pending bill until April 1, 1953. It was the opinion of the committee that Congress should retain some control by which periodical examinations could be made relative to the effectiveness of the reorganization authority and accomplishments attained under its operation, with a view to extending or revising the act as may be found desirable, based on performance and experience. The bill as now proposed would extend more than 2 months into the incoming term of the next administration, permitting the submission of reorganization plans to Congress during the 60-day period following April 1, 1953, and plans submitted under the act to become effective within that period if not disapproved by the House or the Senate.

In adopting the amendment providing for a simple resolution of disapproval by either House, the committee's main objective was to provide the President with as broad reorganization authority as he would require in making any desirable reorganizations without regard to the agencies affected. The committee was sympathetic to suggested amendments submitted by Senators, some of which were included in the bill as passed by the House, relating to special treatment of certain regulatory, quasi-judicial, and quasi-legislative agencies, as recommended by the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch, if the original provision requiring disapproval by both Houses of Congress by concurrent resolution had been retained in the bill. Realizing these exemptions would open the door to the inclusion of at least a dozen or more such agencies, the committee, in the interest of promoting more expeditious action, and with a view to permitting the President to exercise full reorganization powers, granted him authority to submit any reorganization plan he deems advisable.

In order to permit clear determinations by Congress on specific reorganization proposals, however, an amendment was included in the bill which declares it to be the intent of Congress that it is in the public interest and in accordance with the most effective reorganization procedure that each reorganization plan transmitted by the President shall contain only related reorganizations. The purpose of this amendment is to enable the Congress to act on the merits of reorganization proposals of related agencies without the interjection of some proposal with little or no relation to the major plan involved.

During the hearings it became apparent that if any exemptions or special treatment in the way of so-called one package reorganization-plan restriction were included, many agencies might finally be placed in this category. It was the opinion of the committee that, under these circumstances, it would be far preferable to extend full authority to the President to recommend any desirable reorganization regardless of the agency or function affected, and reserved to both the House and the Senate the right of disapproval by simple resolution.

Some who favor disapproval by the concurrent resolution procedure contend that this is no improvement over the existing legislative process. This is not in accord with the facts. Under the pending bill the President has a free hand to initiate any reorganization plan affecting agencies with related functions and within statutory limitations, extending even to the creation of a new executive department with Cabinet status. This is a clear delegation of authority by the Congress to the President over the initiation of legislative actions exclusively reserved to the legislative branch under the Constitution. The bill also provides that when such plans are submitted to Congress, a resolution of disapproval must be passed by either the House or the Senate within 60 days after its submission, or it automatically becomes law.

The President on May 9 again requested prompt Senate action on the Reorganization Act, and, as a member of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch, I join in urging Senate approval of the pending bill in the interest of effecting necessary reorganizations in the Government with the least possible delay.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, in conclusion I wish to say that if this proposed legislation is to be enacted in time for the President to submit to the Congress reorganization plans which can be acted upon at this session, the passage of this bill should not be delayed, for consideration of the bill in conference will take at least some time. So I am very hopeful that this afternoon we shall be able to pass the bill, together with the amendments which have been discussed, and which the committee has recommended; that then the conferees may be able speedily to agree; and that the bill will become law in time to give the President an opportunity to send to the Congress reorganization plans which can be considered and acted upon at this session.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, am I correct in my belief that the first question is on the adoption of the committee amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). That is correct; and the clerk will state the first amendment of the committee.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 3, in line 3, after the word "legislation", to insert: "The Congress further declares that it is in the public interest and in accordance with the most effective reorganization procedure that each reorganization plan transmitted by the President under section 3 contain only related reorganizations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Other contents of plans," on page 5, in line 18, after the word "Senate", to insert "except that, in the case of any officer of the municipal government of the District of Columbia, it may be by the Board of Commissioners or other body or officer of such government designated in the plan."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, in line 12, after the word "for", to strike out "winding up" and insert "terminating."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Limitations on powers with respect to reorganizations," on page 6, at the beginning of line 16, after the section number, to insert "(a)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 14, to insert:

(b) No provision contained in a reorganization plan shall take effect unless the plan is transmitted to the Congress before April 1, 1953.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendments were, under the subhead "Taking effect of reorganizations," on page 8, in line 1, after the word "by", to insert "either of"; in the same line, after the word "a", to strike out "concurrent"; and in line 2, after the word "that", to strike out "the Congress" and insert "that House."

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, in line 11, after the word "certain", to strike out the semicolon and "except that if a resolution (as defined in section 202) with respect to such reorganization plan has been passed by one House and sent to the other, no exclusion under this paragraph shall be made by reason of adjournments of the first House taken thereafter."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II," on page 11, after line 18, to strike out section 202, as follows:

SEC. 202. As used in this title, the term "resolution" means only a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress, the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "That the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan numbered —— transmitted to Congress by the President on ——, 19—," the blank spaces therein being appropriately filled; and does not include a concurrent resolution which specifies more than one reorganization plan.

And in lieu thereof to insert a new section 202, as follows:

SEC. 202. As used in this title, the term "resolution" means only a resolution of either of the two Houses of Congress, the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "That the —— does not favor the reorganization plan numbered —— transmitted to Congress by the President on ——, 19—," the first blank space therein being filled with the name of the resolving House and the other blank spaces therein being appropriately filled; and does not include a resolution which specifies more than one reorganization plan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, in line 21, after the word "introduction", to strike out "(or, in the case of a resolution received from the other House, 10 calendar days after its receipt)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 20, to strike out:

SEC. 207. If, prior to the passage by one House of a resolution of that House with respect to a reorganization plan, such House receives from the other House a resolution with respect to the same plan, then—

(a) If no resolution of the first House with respect to such plan has been referred to committee, no other resolution with respect to the same plan may be reported or (despite the provisions of section 204 (a)) be made the subject of a motion to discharge.

(b) If a resolution of the first House with respect to such plan has been referred to committee—

(1) the procedure with respect to that or other resolutions of such House with respect to such plan which have been referred to committee shall be the same as if no resolution from the other House with respect to such plan had been received; but

(2) on any vote on final passage of a resolution of the first House with respect to such plan the resolution from the other House with respect to such plan shall be automatically substituted for the resolution of the first House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That concludes the committee amendments.

The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk, and I offer it and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, in line 18, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a comma and the following: "and shall specify the reduction of expenditures (itemized so far as practicable) which it is probable will be brought about by the taking effect of the reorganizations included in the plan."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to require the President to submit to the Congress estimates of the savings which it is anticipated will result from the reorganization plan he sends to Congress; and the amendment would have such estimates of savings submitted by the President to the Congress at the time when the plan is sent to Congress.

I cannot imagine that there will be any objection to the amendment, for one of the main purposes of the bill is to reduce governmental expenditures. I think the Congress should have the information referred to in the amendment presented to it at the time when the plans come to the Congress for action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I cannot speak for the entire committee, for I do not believe this amendment was presented to the committee. However, I wish to say that, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the amendment. Frankly, I shall be very glad to have furnished, along with each reorganization plan, some statement or some figures in regard to the economies which will result from the proposed plan.

Unless there is some objection by some other Member of the Senate, certainly I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments to be proposed?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, inasmuch as we progressed this far in the consideration of the bill, it seems to me that before a final vote is taken on it, a quorum call should be had, in case other Senators have amendments which they wish to propose. Some Senators have gone to their offices, thinking that the consideration of this bill would take some time. Of course I wish to be fair to all Senators, and therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hill	Miller
Butler	Hoey	Millikin
Byrd	Holland	Morse
Cain	Humphrey	Mundt
Capehart	Ives	Murray
Chavez	Johnson, Colo.	Myers
Connally	Johnson, Tex.	Neely
Cordon	Johnston, S. C.	O'Conor
Donnell	Kerr	Reed
Douglas	Kilgore	Robertson
Ecton	Lodge	Russell
Ellender	Lucas	Saltonstall
Frear	McCarthy	Schoeppel
Fulbright	McClellan	Smith, Maine
George	McFarland	Sparkman
Graham	McGrath	Thye
Green	McKellar	Vandenberg
Gurney	Malone	Williams
Hayden	Martin

By order of the Senate, the following announcement is made after each quorum call:

The members of the Committee on Foreign Relations have been granted permission to be absent from the sessions of the Senate while the Committee on Foreign Relations is conducting hearings on the North Atlantic Pact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Mr. FERGUSON subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD following the last quorum call a statement that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], and the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] were attending an open hearing of the Judiciary Committee at the time of the quorum call, and therefore were not able to answer to their names, when called, because it was necessary for us to conclude hearing a witness who had to leave town immediately upon the conclusion of his testimony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be placed at the point indicated in the RECORD.

The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I believe this is the first over-all reorganization of the Government ever presented to the Congress. I believe that this reorganization of the executive branch can be the most far-reaching effort at Government economy ever attempted. I invite attention to the fact that the salient reason for the downfall of popular government in the Old World is that government there was no longer able to translate into action the aims and aspirations of the people because it had become so inefficient. I believe, if we are to keep our system of popular government, that we must keep it an efficient government so that the people will have confidence in it. This bill represents compromises on the part of everyone concerned, but it does make possible real progress toward economical and efficient government and I hope it shall pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I wish to subscribe wholeheartedly to the statement just made by the Senator from Massachusetts. As has been said by the chairman of the committee, this far-reaching measure will do more, possibly, than will any other bill passed by the Congress to effectuate governmental reorganization. Every safeguard has been thrown about the bill to insure proper congressional consideration. I am firmly of the belief that it is a step toward the greatest efficiency in government, and I trust the bill will have the overwhelming support of the membership of the Senate.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I move that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, considering House bill 2361, to provide for the reorganization of Government agencies and for other purposes, which is a companion bill to the bill now pending in the Senate, be discharged from further consideration of that bill.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I inquire, is that the reorganization bill?

Mr. McCLELLAN. It is the House version of the reorganization bill. The purpose of proceeding in this way is to get it into conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill 2361.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2361) to provide for the reorganization of Government agencies, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I move that all after the enacting clause of the House bill be stricken out and that Senate bill 526, as amended, be substituted therefor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I should like to have 2 minutes in which to perform a very pleasant duty, namely, to express, as the ranking Republican member of the committee—and I think I speak for the entire membership of the committee—the admiration I have for the excellent work which the chairman of the committee has done on this bill. He deserves the gratitude not only of the Members of the Senate, but of the entire Nation, for doing such an outstanding job.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I also wish to compliment the Senator from Arkansas. I know of no bill since I have been majority leader which has received such prompt action as has the reorganization bill. I assure the Senators of my deep appreciation of the efforts in connection with this extremely important bill and the unanimity of thought which has prevailed with reference to it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader and also the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of House bill 2361.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McCLELLAN, Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. HOEY, Mr. McCARTHY, and Mr. IVES conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 526 is indefinitely postponed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills of the Senate:

S. 460. An act to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to reconvey to the Helena Chamber of Commerce certain described parcels of land situated in the city of Helena, Mont.;

S. 461. An act to clarify the provisions of section 602 (u) of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended;

S. 812. An act to protect scenic values along Oak Creek Canyon and certain tributaries thereof within the Coconino National Forest, Ariz.; and

S. 1185. An act to provide that all employees of the Veterans' Canteen Service shall be paid from funds of the Service, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 900) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Act, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SPENCE, Mr. BROWN of Georgia, Mr. PATMAN, Mr. MONRONEY, Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. GAMBLE, and Mr. KUNKEL were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3762) to amend title 18, entitled "Crimes and Criminal Procedure," and title 28, entitled "Judiciary and Judicial Procedure," of the United States Code, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2632) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 21, 27, 36, 47, and 66 to the bill, and concurred therein.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS, 1949—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on House bill 2632, the first deficiency appropriation bill, 1949, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the report.

The Chief Clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of today's RECORD on pp. 6291–6293.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to consideration of the conference report at this time?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, may I ask whether it is a unanimous report of the conference committee?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Is the chairman of the committee entirely in favor of it?

Mr. McKELLAR. Indeed he is, or he would not present it.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee to give us a general idea of the basis of the report.

Mr. McKELLAR. As the Senator will recall, there were three controversies involved. One was whether the White House should be rebuilt or repaired. Another controversy was in connection with the Boke-Straus matter, and the third was with reference to the Navajo Indian school item. There was unanimous agreement on the part of the conferees of both Houses.

The White House matter is stricken from the bill and will be up for consideration in the second deficiency bill.

With reference to the Boke-Straus question, the House conferees receded with reference to that, as the Senator will recall.

The House also receded on the Navajo school item.

Mr. CORDON. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, on March 11 the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee reported a bill to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 1211, which is known as the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1211) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I inquire if it is the intention of the majority leader to ask that the reciprocal trade agreements bill be laid aside temporarily in order that the Senate may proceed tomorrow with the motion for reconsideration made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN]?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Massachusetts is correct in his assumption. We have an agreement that tomorrow, immediately following the convening of the Senate, the motion made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] to reconsider the vote by which the Labor-Federal Security appropriation bill was recommitted shall be taken up.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. May I ask also whether the Senator can tell us what the intention is concerning the agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator from Illinois will permit me, I may say that I have discussed that matter with my colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia, and, if it conforms with the wishes and plans of the majority leader, I should like to have the Senate proceed with the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill at the conclusion of the action of the Senate on the motion to reconsider the recommittal of the Labor-Federal Security appropriation bill.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I thank the Senator. May I ask whether that is the understanding of the majority leader?

Mr. RUSSELL. If it meets with the plans of the majority leader, I hope to have the agricultural bill taken up at that time.

Mr. LUCAS. The suggestion made by the able Senator from Georgia meets with my approval, and following disposal of the motion to reconsider made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriations bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Are there any other measures which might be brought up before the Senate begins the active consideration of the reciprocal trade agreements bill?

Mr. LUCAS. There is a possibility that the civil functions appropriations bill may be considered. It will depend on the attitude of the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia, chairman of the Committee on Finance, who will be in charge of the reciprocal trade agreements bill.

SHIPPING STRIKE IN HAWAII

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to discuss very briefly two matters for the RECORD. I desire to call attention to the fact that at the present time there is a very serious shipping strike occurring in Hawaii. I do not purport to speak with any authority in regard to the merits of the positions taken by the two parties to the strike. But I do wish to point out that this strike is another example showing the need for the Eighty-first Congress, in this session, passing some labor legislation which will be fair to all parties concerned, including the public. We need legislation which will provide workable machinery in the field of emergency disputes, and which will help at least to avoid or quickly settle the type of dispute now raging in Hawaii.

Mr. President, approximately 2,000 longshoremen, members of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, have been on strike in Hawaii ports since May 1. The strike resulted, I understand, from the collapse of negotiations for a wage increase demanded by the longshoremen. These negotiations for an increase in the hourly rate paid the longshoremen took place under the wage-review section of the current collective-bargaining agreement, which has another year to run. Although the date of the wage review was April 15, the strike was postponed for 2 weeks to permit continued negotiations. The demand of the Hawaiian longshoremen was to increase the current rate of $1.40 an hour by 32 cents, to $1.72 an hour.

The demand for a 32-cent increase is based on the desire to achieve the parity that formerly existed between the hourly rate of longshoremen on the west coast of the United States and in Hawaii. In 1945 the differential between the west coast longshoremen shore rate and the Hawaiian longshore rate was 10 cents an hour. At the present time the west coast longshore rate is $1.82 an hour, and the differential has been increased to 42 cents. The last offer of the employers, I have been advised, was an increase of 12 cents an hour. I understand further, Mr. President, that the union has offered to arbitrate the dispute, and that the shipowners up to date are refusing to arbitrate the dispute. We all know that in disputes of such major importance as this both sides sometimes resort to propaganda that is not always consistent either with facts or with sound public policy.

I wish to put into the RECORD at this time an editorial which appeared in the Honolulu Advertiser for May 13, 1949, entitled "The Real Low-Down," which, in my judgment, conforms neither to the facts or to sound public policy.

I ask permission to have the editorial inserted at this place in my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE REAL LOW-DOWN

You want to know the real low-down on why we want arbitration, Joe? I'll give it to you—straight.

First of all, it sounds fair. That's very important. You know, getting a neutral guy or committee to come in and decide what's in the public interest?

Next it places us unions in the position of gaining everything—and losing nothing.

If we don't like the arbitrator's decision—that is, if he don't favor us—all we got to do is disagree with him.

You don't believe it, Joe?

Arbitration has been used in Frisco since 1934. In spite of it we've been able to pull 5 major strikes, and would you believe it, Joe, over 1,400 illegal work stoppages.

The strikes were—

Our guys have hit the bricks 303 days—nearly a year off the job in 14 years in official strikes, and the Lord only knows how many days by work stoppages (just like we're pulling on the plantations now, only worse).

So you see, Joe, it not only sounds good, but it is good the way we play it. If you get a bum decision, there's many ways to beat it. We have proved that.

Another advantage to arbitration, Joe, is that it makes a total joke out of collective bargaining. You sit around a table and beef—just so it will look good to the public—then after you've wasted enough time, you holler "We want arbitration. These rich guys won't play ball. They're trying to starve us out."

Then some so-called neutral guy gets called in to arbitrate. He makes his decision and if it's for us, O. K.; if it ain't—well, Joe, you do just like we done in Frisco—and it wins for you.

Keeps trouble stirred up; keeps the boys mad; gives us the opportunity to keep collecting their dues.

We get a kick over the fact that arbitrator after arbitrator has resigned in disgust, starting with Judge M. C. Sloss; then Wayne Morse, Daggett, Rathbun, Miller, and others. They all said it was because of the complete disregard by the union of the so-called peace machinery set up in 1934—by arbitration. Of course we said they were lying! Can't see why the employers don't trust us!

Another great advantage of arbitration to us is that if we pull a bum strike, that even the rank and file boys don't like, and the public don't like, then the leaders just got to holler for arbitration; if the arbitrator decides against us, that gets us leaders "off the hook."

They pass the buck to him and scream that they got a dirty deal again. We've used that lots.

Yes, Joe, we've just about busted Frisco as a shipping port. The miles of empty piers that used to be filled with the ships of the world are not used today.

When we get all the sugar mills and pineapple canneries in the islands closed (and it won't be long now), and many of them busted—you'll see what a swell job we've done.

We are on the way, Joe. Arbitration is our best answer—no kidding. The public is for it—the suckers—'cause they don't know how we work it to our great advantage.

It don't, has not, and won't bring labor peace, that's why we like it. But don't tell the public.

That's the real inside, Joe.

Mr. MORSE. Mr President, as I have said I know very little about the local situation in Hawaii. I am aware of the fact that in the controversy there have been charges and countercharges in regard to "left wingism," some industry officials taking the position that part of the trouble is that, as they see it, they are dealing with what amounts to "commie" tactics on the part of the union.

Mr. President, it is very interesting to read this editorial entitled "The Real Low-Down," and observe the tactics which are being used by this newspaper. Certainly I would not hold any brief for any left-wingism or Communist tactics, but I am a little shocked to read an editorial in a newspaper which seems to be aimed at giving its readers the impression that a proposal to arbitrate a wage dispute is communistic tactics. As I read the editorial, that is the impression I get from it. Let me read just a paragraph or two. The writer of the editorial says:

You want to know the real low-down on why we want arbitration, Joe? I'll give it to you straight.

The editorial purports to present the point of view of the union concerning arbitration.

First of all, it sounds fair. That's very important. You know getting a neutral guy or committee to come in and decide what's in the public interest?

Next it places us unions in the position of gaining everything—and losing nothing. If we don't like the arbitrator's decision—that is, if he don't favor us—all we got to do is disagree with him.

You don't believe it, Joe?

Arbitration has been used in Frisco since 1934. In spite of it we've been able to pull five major strikes, and would you believe it, Joe, over 1,400 illegal work stoppages.

And then there follows a list of the stoppages.

Our guys have hit the bricks 303 days—nearly a year off the job in 14 years in official strikes, and the Lord only knows how many days of work stoppages (just like we're pulling on the plantations now, only worse).

So you see, Joe, it not only sounds good, but it is good the way we play it. If you get a bum decision, there's many ways to beat it. We have proved that.

Another advantage to arbitration, Joe, is that it makes a total joke out of collective bargaining. You sit around a table and beef—just so it will look good to the public—then after you've wasted enought time, you holler "We want arbitration. These rich guys won't play ball. They're trying to starve us cut."

Then some so-called neutral guy gets called in to arbitrate. He makes his decision and if its for us, O. K.; if it ain't—well, Joe, you do just like we done in Frisco—and it wins for you.

Keeps trouble stirred up; keeps the boys mad, gives us the opportunity to keep collecting their dues.

Mr. President, it can be seen that there is no question about what this editorial writer has in mind. He has in mind to discredit arbitration. That is a type of slanting in editorial writing in the field of employer-labor relations, which will not lead to the type of peaceful procedures for settling disputes such as voluntary arbitration for which many of us have been working in America. Many of us are satisfied that if we do not stop the growing class warfare, if we do not insist that men substitute the laws of reason for the laws of the jungle, we are headed straight for a type of class-conscious conflict that is going to threaten the economic and political rights and liberties of both management and labor.

It makes me sad, Mr. President, to read the type of attack on the principle of arbitration as contained in this editorial. Not that arbitrations do not sometimes result in miscarriages of justice, but I do not know what we are going to substitute for arbitration in these great industries which so involve the public interest. We cannot sit by and let economic force be the final arbiter of major disputes which involve the economic welfare of millions of people without at least making available to the parties an opportunity to settle their differences through fair procedure based upon rules of reason.

I want to say that I certainly hope that this editorial does not represent public opinion in Hawaii. I am confident that the responsible citizens of Hawaii see the need for substituting rules of reason for what seems to be in this editorial a squaring-off for a knock-down, drag-out fight by the use of economic weapons. I want to say that if this editorial represents the general feeling among the leaders of Hawaii concerning arbitration as a justifiable means of applying the rules of reason, even though it may be in the field of industrial relations, then Hawaii most certainly is not ready for statehood. I believe we have the right to expect the people of any Territory to demonstrate that they are ready to assume the responsibilities of statehood. If this editorial represents public opinion in Hawaii, then I am very frank to say that so far as my vote is concerned they have not reached the stage yet where they show that they are willing to assume what I think to be their responsibilities in the field of peaceful industrial relations.

Now there is a paragraph in the editorial with regard to which I shall speak only of myself and not of the other persons named in the paragraph:

We get a kick over the fact that arbitrator after arbitrator has resigned in disgust starting with Judge M. C. Sicss; then Wayne Morse; Daggett, Rathbun, Miller, and others. They all said it was because of the complete disregard by the union of the so-called peace machinery set up in 1934—by arbitration. Of course we said they were lying. Can't see why the employers don't trust us.

So there may be no misunderstanding, Mr. President, as to the basis of my resignation as Pacific coast arbitrator of long-shore disputes, I want to say in fairness to the editorial writer that if what he has in mind is my resignation back in the late thirties in connection with a specific case, because, for a period of some 36 hours, the union refused to abide by an award of mine, he is correct that in that particular instance I resigned over the union's failure to accept my award. But what happened? The public was so solidly behind that award that the union quickly recognized its mistake and provided to load the ships in accordance with the arbitration decision. The union and shipowners asked to have me reappointed as arbitrator, but I refused to accept the appointment until a new contract was negotiated. I took the position that the defiance of my award had resulted in the abrogating of the old contract. If that is the instance the editorial writer had in mind, it was proper for him to say that my resignation was caused by the refusal of the union to carry out my decision. But if he wanted to be fair he should have hastened to point out, Mr. President, that as a result of the action I took in that instance the union had to sit down and agree to an entirely new contract with a greatly strengthened arbitration section in it, and from that day until the date of my resignation from the position of Pacific coast arbitrator not one of my many decisions was ever defied or violated either by the union or by the employers.

I want the RECORD to show that my resignation as Pacific coast arbitrator, and the subsequent appointment of Mr. Paul Eliel to take my place, occurred in December 1941, when I resigned as arbitrator in order to accept appointment to a position on the War Labor Board in January 1942.

Mr. President, the shipping companies that serve Hawaii are the same shipping companies that serve the mainland on the west coast. Is it not interesting, Mr. President, that the west coast agreement was recently consummated between the parties, and, interestingly enough, consummated finally by collective bargaining. The agreement was reached after intervention on the part of Mr. Phil Murray, representing the CIO, and a group of industry and public representatives headed by Almon Roth of San Francisco. The agreement was reached after 95 days of costly strike and after the emergency dispute section of the Taft-Hartley law had completely failed, Mr. President, completely failed to settle the dispute. I say that, Mr. President, as a sort of reminder to Members of the Senate who think that so much of the Taft-Hartley law should be continued, including its proved unworkable emergency dispute section.

Following that costly strike a new collective bargaining agreement as I have just stated, was negotiated. Listen to the arbitration provision in regard to wage reviews, applicable on the mainland and negotiated by the shipping companies which serve Hawaii:

(a) Basic straight and overtime rates shall be subject to review on September 30, 1949, and September 30, 1950, at the request of either party. The party desiring wage review shall give notice of such desire not less than 30 days prior to the review date. If no agreement is reached through negotiation in 15 days, the issue shall be referred to the coast arbitrator, the award to be rendered by the review date and become effective 12:01 a. m. of the review date.

(b) The subject of welfare and pension plans for longshoremen may be a matter of negotiations in any wage review, but is not subject to arbitration or strike under the wage review provision of the agreement.

In this agreement, the Pacific coast longshore agreement of 1948–51, there are other sections dealing with arbitration. I think it is one of the finest and soundest agreements on arbitration of any collective-bargaining agreement which it has ever been my privilege to read; and I have read hundreds of collective-bargaining agreements.

If it be true—and I emphasize the word "if"—that the editorial which I have inserted in the RECORD, and which I think is an unfair criticism of the principle of arbitration, is at all representative of the views of the shipowners serving Hawaii, I am a little puzzled, in view of the fact that the same shipping lines have entered into such a fine arbitration agreement on the mainland. Until proof to the contrary is established, I shall assume that the shipowners believe in the principle of arbitration when all other peaceful methods fail in settling their disputes with labor. I shall continue to believe until the contrary is established, that the writer of the editorial in the Honolulu Advertiser for May 13, 1949, does not represent the shipowners' point of view in regard to arbitration in Hawaii. We must face the reality that a longshore dispute in Hawaii ending in a bottling up of ships there has serious detrimental effects on the mainland, just as when there is a strike on the mainland great demand comes from Hawaii for an early settlement of the dispute.

With these brief remarks on the subject, I raise my voice again, as I have for many years, in support of the application to disputes of the sound principle of arbitration, particularly disputes which have such a great effect on the economy of our country. That is why, during the recent longshore strike on the mainland, from this desk and out in the country last summer, time and time again I pleaded with the parties to submit their dispute to arbitration if they could not settle it by collective bargaining. That will always be my position in these great disputes because I know of no better way of applying the rules of reason than in the judicial atmosphere of an arbitration hearing room.

We are dealing with an industry in which the controversies between management and labor are exceedingly serious. Feelings run high and convictions of the parties are strong in such disputes. That is all the more reason for bringing men of such strong wills and temperments under the rules of voluntary arbitration, to which rules each side pledges its acceptance.

I support voluntary arbitration as one who has found it necessary time and time again to decide against this union, as well as against the shipping companies involved in this dispute. On the basis of that experience I know that when men are brought into an arbitration hearing room, when they are willing to lay the facts before an arbitrator, they can get a fair and judicial decision. I have seen arbitrator after arbitrator in the West render his decision on the basis of the record made before him. I have always prided myself on the fact that we have developed a great difference between arbitration in the West and arbitration in the East, in that we have consistently taken the position in our arbitration, that arbitration is a judicial function, not a mediation function. Arbitration is a judicial function, and not a compromising function. Therefore the notion planted by this editorial, that arbitrations are likely to result in compromises cannot be borne out by the facts.

Other than the information which I have been able to obtain today over the telephone from Government officials, I do not know, and do not pretend to know, the details of the dispute which is waging in Hawaii. However, I do know that if arbitration of wage issues is a sound principle on the mainland—and these shipping companies have agreed to it—it is just as sound a position in Hawaii.

I hope the parties to the dispute in Hawaii will not become parties to the philosophy of the editorial, but will pledge themselves—as have their representatives in San Francisco—to support arbitration as a rule of reason in finally settling their differences.

Mr. President, the last point I wish to make on this subject, by way of applying my views on arbitration to the problem of changing the Taft-Hartley law in respect to emergency disputes, is this: For a long time I have held to the view that in emergency disputes we need decisions. It is the decision that counts; and we need machinery which will guarantee to the American people that there will be decisions. That is why in the amendment which I shall submit in due course of time I shall propose that the emergency board to be set up by the President when an emergency dispute arises in this country shall have the power to render a decision. It can be called a recommendation, if that is desired; but such language will not fool anyone. No one is fooled as to what an emergency board under the Railway Labor Act does. It renders a decision. Of course, under the Taft-Hartley law we have the most ineffective procedure in this respect that I think can be provided. We have a board which can make findings of fact; but what good are findings of fact if the American people are not told, on the basis of the findings, what should be the solution of the problem? Findings of fact have not been any good in any of the emergency disputes we have had thus far, and they will not be any good in future cases unless the solution of the problem is also stated. The American people are still being led to believe in the myth that the emergency disputes section of the Taft-Hartley law has done some good. As a matter of fact, it has done inestimable harm. It has caused great delay and it has failed to settle cases.

So I say we should frankly face the fact that what we need in connection with the emergency board is legislation to give the board the power and the duty and the direction to render a decision. It should be expected to tell the country who is wrong, and why. It should say what should be done about it. The law should provide for the continuation of the board for a period of an additional 30 days after its decision, in the absence of a stoppage of work, to mediate a settlement, if necessary, in carrying out the application of its decision.

Many persons do not realize that, after there is a complicated decision in an emergency dispute, there is the task of putting that decision into effect by applying it to the working problems of the industry concerned. For the record, I simply wish to point out, as an example of that situation, that in 1941, when the President's Emergency Board had finally settled the threatened railroad strike and had given an award as to vacations, it took the Board a good many days to apply its decision to the complicated industry-labor relationships of the railroad industry. Unless someone representing the public had been in the middle, so to speak, when the two parties could not agree on the details of applying the award there would have been another threatened railroad strike.

I hope I can get the Senate to see that in difficult emergency cases we need a continuation of the public's hand in the case until the decision is finally put into effect in all its details in a collective-bargaining agreement.

So, Mr. President, I use the dispute now raging in Hawaii as a peg, so to speak, on which to hang these comments this afternoon, because the present dispute in Hawaii is but another illustration of what will happen in the months immediately ahead as the recession continues and increases in its intensity. There seems to be much evidence that the recession will increase in its intensity before the economic situation improves. As the recession increases in intensity, the responsibility of the Congress, it seems to me, will increase, insofar as seeing to it that before the Congress adjourns this summer, it shall pass some labor legislation which will work in fairness to all concerned.

Believe me, Mr. President, if the Congress walks out on the public by leaving the Taft-Hartley law unchanged or by adopting anything resembling the Woods bill or by taking a course of action which will only deepen the bitterness which already is growing, we as politicians will have no one but ourselves to blame if in 1950–52 a great deal of those campaigns will be taken up with recriminations over a labor issue which can be completely eliminated from the picture now if at this session of Congress we undertake the job of writing fair labor legislation. That is all I am pleading for. If we are to make such legislation fair, let me say, as one who has gone through the battles in many and many a case in which, with labor on one side and management on the other, the principles of voluntary arbitration should be made available to the parties in dispute through the aid and encouragement of the Government. Arbitrators have to be true to their judicial trust and sit down with their own consciences and decide what are the facts and render a decision based on those facts. What arbitrators have to do in arbitration I think is very comparable to what the Senate of the United States should do in the weeks immediately ahead. I think it is perfectly obvious that the House will not do anything in this field but wait and follow the Senate's lead.

We have listened to labor; we have listened to industry; we have their records. Now we should stop listening to both sides, until we study the record we have and make up our minds, as individual Senators, as to what are the facts. Then, on the basis of those facts—with politics entirely out of the picture—we should write some amendments, here on the floor of the Senate, if necessary, which will put into practice in labor relations the rules of reason.

What impresses me is that it is such a simple and easy thing to do, if we in the Congress will but do it. No great difficulty is involved in providing, by way of amendments to the Thomas bill, some fair procedures not only for settling controversies over emergency disputes but also for settling controversies over secondary boycotts, over jurisdictional disputes, over the free-speech issue, over welfare funds—over each and every one of those issues, which the Thomas bill does not adequately cover. I am satisfied that if the Eighty-first Congress fails the American people in regard to labor legislation, the American people should certainly take note of it the next time they have a chance to go to the ballot box.

I want to make just a brief comment, Mr. President, so I shall not have to take the floor another time, on this whole question of taxation, by saying that once again the Committee for Economic Development has come forward with a document of economic statesmanship. On two previous occasions I have pleaded on the floor of the Senate in support of their recommendations on taxation, and on both those occasions I did not get very far, if the results are to be judged by any legislative action on the part of the Senate, or to be judged even by succeeding in having the recommendations of the Committee for Economic Development submitted to hearings. But defeats never stop me from pressing forward on issues with regard to which I think I am right. I am satisfied that unless we pass a program of tax revision we are not even going to scratch the surface of the causes of the fiscal problems that are producing our present trend toward a recession in this country. The distinguished Senator from Illinois the other day very rightly said that to be a liberal one need not be a wastrel. But it is also true that if one is to be a liberal, he should not be arbitrary. We are not going to solve the economy problems of the Government by adoption of arbitrary rule-of-thumb methods. We are not going to solve the great problem of reducing Government expenditures, meeting the financial obligations of the Government, foreign and domestic, and of paying our national debt, by juggling percentages as far as tax rates are concerned or by following penny-wise and pound-foolish policies so far as cutting out of the budget appropriations needed for sound social legislation in this country. We are not going to do it by adopting arbitrary 5-percent cuts in every appropriation bill that comes before the Senate. I can think of no more wastrel policy than that.

Again, what we need is to have someone on the floor of the Senate point out to us the facts in regard to specific items that should be cut, the reasons why they should be cut, and the amounts in which they can be cut. That is why I have opposed, and shall continue to oppose, as my vote tomorrow will show, any attempt to lay down an arbitrary percentage-wise slashing policy on the recommendations of the Appropriations Committee. Until men can show me wherein the Appropriations Committee on specific items has not kept faith with the Senate for sound economy I am not going to vote to send appropriation bills back to committee with the nice political gesture of cutting them 5 percent or any other political amount. What is the magic of 5 percent, or 6 or 7 or 10? We are not going to solve the fiscal problems of the Government by trying to juggle on the floor of the Senate the amounts recommended after thorough consideration by the Appropriations Committee.

We need, it seems to me, to proceed to discuss in committee and, I hope, on the floor, if necessary, a tax-revision program. So, for the record, because I am satisfied it is sound, and I shall continue to await demonstrable proof as to any weakness in the recommendations, I offer again to the Senate the tax and economy recommendations of the Committee for Economic Development. I shall put those recommendations into the form of a bill within a very few days. I am perfectly aware of the parliamentary rule that tax bills originate in the House, but I know of no reason why we cannot set an example in the Senate by giving them something at least to consider. I hope some friend in the House will introduce a similar bill on the House side. I think the Committee on Economic Development is unanswerably right when it pointed out in its previous two reports, and again in its report this year, that our tax problem is not a problem of tax increases or tax reduction; it is a problem of eliminating gross inequities in our tax structure. Learned scholars in the field of tax economics have been trying to show the Congress that the job of the Congress in the field of taxation is the job of completely revising and overhauling the tax structure of the country if we are to have an equitable tax structure that will encourage incentive. Let us stop playing politics with the tax issue. Unless we solve it right, it will continue to upset our economy. To the extent, Mr. President, that one can say that one cause is greater than another, tax inequities will continue to be one of the greatest causes for producing the serious, dangerous threat of an oncoming recession. Unless we check the growing trend toward a serious recession, we shall suffer in the not too distant future untold hardships in this country which are likely to endanger our entire foreign program and the winning of the peace.

Now is the time to take the steps to stop it. Let us look and see, before it is too late. If the recession continues—and of course out in my section of the country unemployment today is three times greater than the national average—unemployment will soon threaten national prosperity. Must we wait until unemployment in the West is five times or six times or seven times greater than the national average? Must we wait until the unemployment pattern spreads all across the country? Mr. President, you know what the result will be. We are not going to change human nature, even though it is American human nature. The clamor will be to withdraw and withdraw and withdraw support from Europe, to cut down and cut down on economic aid to Europe. Where are those politicians in any great number who are going to dare go before their constituents and say, "Although decreasing foreign aid would seem to meet your immediate need, it will threaten the lives of your grandchildren, and it may threaten the whole democratic destiny of your Nation."

Mr. President, if we follow a course of economic withdrawal from Europe, you and I cannot escape the conclusion that we shall have lost all the gains which have been thus far made in Europe. I want to decrease our allotment to Europe as soon as we can, but we must not do it until we win the fight for developing a society among those people, which we call a society of free people, based upon economic freedom as well as upon political freedom. If we lose that fight we lose the peace. If we lose it, to what forces will we lose it? We will lose it to totalitarianism; I think, communistic totalitarianism, but not necessarily so. If we withdraw because of a depression in the United States, we not only will play into the hands of Joe Stalin but into the hands of every potential Fascist in Europe—and there are still a great many there. I hate both forms of totalitarianism, and I am convinced, Mr. President, that we can make our system of private property work to promote freedom not only here but abroad, but we cannot do it with an unsound fiscal program. We have an unsound fiscal program today. We have an unsound tax program. We have not come to grips with the tax problem, because we have played politics with it. Until someone can offer something better, I think we should try to take at least the best portions of the tax recommendations of the Committee for Economic Development and put them into legislative form in this session of Congress.

Therefore, Mr. President, for the record, and so that there may be easy reference to it, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my remarks the complete report on tax and expenditure policy for 1949, a statement on national policy, by the research and policy committee of the Committee for Economic Development.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAX AND EXPENDITURE POLICY FOR 1949

(Statement on national policy by the research and policy committee of the Committee for Economic Development)

I. INTRODUCTION

For the fiscal year 1950 the President has recommended cash expenditures of more than $46,000,000,000, an increase of $10,000,000,000 over fiscal 1948 and $6,000,000,000 over the current fiscal year. (Except as otherwise noted, this policy statement will present budgetary data in terms of the Federal fiscal year. This runs from July 1 of one calendar year through June 30 of the next and is designated by the second year. For example, the period from July 1, 1949, through June 30, 1950, is designated as the fiscal year 1950.) The taxpayer's vision of lower Federal budgets and of lower taxes to match has faded into an uncertain future. Instead, he faces the President's recommendations for a $2,000,000,000 pay-roll tax increase and an additional $4,000,000,000 general tax increase. Acceptance of these recommendations by Congress would raise cash receipts to more than $50,000,000,000 annually at a $230,000,000,000 level of national income.

A forty-five- or fifty-billion-dollar Government bears a heavy responsibility to the American people—a responsibility to spend and tax wisely. This obligation is especially serious since effective Government performance has become a major weapon in the current war of economics and ideologies.

Success in maintaining America's world leadership depends in part on demonstrating that our system of government is superior to authoritarian systems in meeting the economic and social problems common to both. In that demonstration, tax and budgetary policy plays a strategic role. A sound fiscal policy can exert a strong stabilizing influence on the economy. It can be our most important force making for efficiency in Government. And, unlike direct controls over prices, wages, and production, fiscal policy does its work in harmony with—not at the expense of—individual freedom of choice.

This policy statement deals with tax and budgetary policy for the fiscal year 1950. It examines the President's budget proposals and some issues they raise, suggests some means of making control of Government expenditures more effective, and spells out some of the implications of spending on the scale proposed.

II. THE 1950 BUDGET [1]

From a wartime peak of $94,300,000,000 in the fiscal year 1945, Federal expenditures declined to $36,500,000,000 in fiscal 1948. This decline was, of course, the natural consequence of the end of hostilities. Moreover, it was reasonable to hope that the decline would continue. The 1948 total included large expenditures of a clearly non-recurring or dwindling character—the cashing of veterans' terminal leave bonds, the costs of surplus property disposal, veterans' readjustment allowances, and so on.

The decline did not continue. Instead, as table I shows, expenditures are higher in 1949 than in 1948 and the President's budget calls for still higher expenditures in 1950. The recommendations itemized in the budget for 1950 total $45,700,000,000. In addition the President has announced, in his budget message and subsequently, that he will submit a request for military aid to the North Atlantic countries not included in the budget figures. If we tentatively add $600,000,000 for this item, the 1950 budget totals $46,300,000,000, or $9,600,000,000 more than actual expenditures in 1948.

The $9,800,000,000 rise in 2 years is the net result of decreases in a few major classes of expenditure and increases in a great many others. About $3,800,000,000 less will be spent in 1950 than in 1948 for terminal leave payments, veterans' readjustment benefits, the United States contribution to the capital of the International Bank and Monetary Fund, surplus property disposal, and the postal deficit. Therefore, to explain the $9,800,000,000 net increase in the total budget we must find the source of about $13,600,000,000 of increase in other programs.

The chief forces at work to raise Federal expenditures are—

1. A great increase of programs for national defense and foreign aid.

2. A large increase of domestic programs, mainly for social welfare and resource development.

3. The proposed payment of $2,000,000,000 for accumulated dividends on veterans' life insurance. (This is a contractual obligation and annual payments in the future will be much smaller.)

4. An increase of about $750,000,000 for farm price-support operations resulting from the lower level of farm prices.

5. Higher costs resulting from higher prices and Government wage rates.

The effects of higher prices and wage rates are spread throughout the budget and cannot be isolated. Moreover, the figure for each major category of expenditures is itself the sum of many individual items in which there may be both increases and decreases. With these reservations, table II identifies the sources of the $9,800,000,000 net increase in expenditures from 1948 to 1950.

TABLE I.—Cash payments to and receipts from public, fiscal years 1948, 1949, 1950, as shown in the United States budget for fiscal year 1950 [1]

Except for the sum of $600,000,000 estimated as the net additional cost for "Military aid to North Atlantic countries," all figures are as shown in the President's budget. Revenue estimates are based on a projected personal income of $215,000,000,000, corresponding to a national income of $230,000,000,000.

[2] Includes an estimated $2,000,000,000 for dividend payments on national service life insurance.

[3] President's proposed legislation accounts for the bulk of the increase of 1950 over 1949.

[4] Does not include the $4,000,000,000 general tax increase proposed by the President.

In 1948 Federal cash receipts were $45,400,000,000. The budget estimates show that if no new taxes are enacted receipts in fiscal 1950 would be slightly less—$45,000,000,000. This Treasury estimate is based on the assumption that total personal income will continue at about the $215,000,000,000 annual rate reached in July–December 1948, as compared with the $195,000,000,000 of calendar 1947. In other words, the higher level of national income, if continued, would nearly offset the effect of the 1948 tax-rate reduction upon Federal revenue.

Even at the national income level assumed by the Treasury, the yield of existing tax rates would fall $1,300,000,000 short of the proposed expenditures (including the unofficial $600,000,000 estimate for North Atlantic military aid). The President has proposed higher rates and broader coverage of pay-roll taxes as part of his program for expansion of social security. This tax increase, if enacted, would add $2,200,000,000 to cash receipts in fiscal 1950, according to the budget estimates. There would then be a cash surplus of $900,000,000, compared with $8,800,000,000 in fiscal 1948.

The President's budget message for 1950 leaves one with several inescapable impressions regarding Government expenditure policy:

First. The Federal Government is trying to do an unprecedented number of things at once. It is pushing its domestic programs for social and economic betterment—in social insurance, education, resource development, agriculture, and the like—well beyond their previous high-water marks. It is undertaking the greatest peacetime preparedness program our country has ever known, and it is recognizing its new international position with the most extensive program of foreign relief, reconstruction, and military aid the world has ever seen.

Second. The President visualizes the expenditures projected for 1950 as one step in a rising expenditure trend. He states: "It must be recognized that expenditures in the fiscal year 1951 are likely to be larger than those for 1950." He adds that "expenditures for national defense can be expected to rise substantially above the level estimated for 1950." And many of the commitments we are asked to undertake now, especially in the fields of resource development and social welfare, would involve steadily rising outlays for many years.

[1] This discussion will refer throughout to the cash-consolidated budget rather than the administrative budget in terms of which Federal expenditures and taxes are commonly stated. For fiscal 1950, the administrative budget figures corresponding to the cash-consolidated figures in table I would be $42,500,000,000 of expenditures and $41,000,000,000 of receipts.

Third. There seems to be no limit to the projects pressing for an expenditure of Federal funds. The President plainly indicates that many candidates for Federal expenditure are waiting to take up any slack which might develop through a reduction in costs of existing projects. Only because of heavy prior commitments and the presence of inflationary forces in our economy has he denied many requests for additional funds which would normally be desirable. His 1949 Economic Report to the Congress makes the point even more strongly:

"We must pursue affirmative programs for housing and health, for education and resource development. Yet the fight against inflation prevents us from undertaking these long-range programs with the speed and on a scale that would otherwise be desirable."

Quite apart from these developmental programs, it is evident that political pressure for larger direct payments to veterans, to farmers, and to the aged could add billions to the Federal budget.

These impressions are reinforced by looking at the expansion of specific expenditure programs from 1948 to 1950 and their projected costs for later years. Most striking, of course, is the $3,500,000,000 jump in defense outlays from $10,800,000,000 in 1948, excluding terminal-leave payments, to $14,300,000,000 for 1950. As wartime stocks are used up and various military programs grow to their authorized limits, the $14,300,000,000 figure could rise substantially. Unofficial estimates place the out-of-pocket cost of military aid to the North Atlantic countries in future years at a level well above the first-year cost of $600,000,000 included in table I. As veterans' readjustment costs shrink, they may be more than offset by the costs of pension plans such as are recurrently proposed in Congress. Cash payments of interest on the debt will rise sharply as war savings bonds mature.

In other areas only one major item—international affairs and finance—is now scheduled for substantial reduction in the next few years. Expanding economic and social programs at home could offset that reduction. Table III shows that the cost of social welfare and resource development programs will increase by 75 percent from 1948 to 1950 if the President's proposals become law. Social insurance and public assistance account for $2,000,000,000 of the $4,500,000,000 increase in this group of activities, and would, of course, grow steadily, though not so sharply, for decades to come. The increase of nearly half a billion dollars for highways, waterways, and airways is indicative of the growing amounts of Federal money we are devoting to public works. Agricultural programs, even apart from price subsidies, are expanding by a third of a billion dollars from 1948 to 1950 and may go on expanding.

Continuation of the 1948–50 rising trend of Federal expenditures need not be accepted as inevitable. Yet if unchecked by successful efforts at economy—or by unforeseen improvements in our relations with Russia—the new trend will carry us over the $50,000,000,000 mark in the next few years.

III. THE CONTROL OF EXPENDITURES

The budgetary facts and prospects just reviewed[2] bring us face to face with this basic issue of expenditure policy: Can we afford to expand Government activities so rapidly and on so many fronts at once? Or are we reaching the margin where the economic and social costs of certain activities outweigh their benefits? Closely allied to this issue are three further questions:

First, how can the Executive, the Congress, and the public control expenditure decisions more effectively? How can congressional procedure and public understanding be improved?

Second, how can Government do a more efficient and economical job in carrying out the functions assigned to it?

Third, in what areas should we seek savings through cut-backs or deferments of projected expenditures? Federal expenditures that represent one-fifth of total national income raise in compelling form the issue of balancing public against private spending.[3] If Government continues to expand so fast and in so many directions at once, we will suffer damaging consequences to private economic effort and individual freedom of action. The committee feels there is much evidence that we are in or near this danger zone.

Yet the pressure for larger and larger Government spending continues unabated. Plausible—often persuasive—new claims on public funds are constantly being made. At the same time, resources are limited. How are we to strike a balance between private and public use of available resources?

In the committee's opinion, the best insurance that we will achieve such a balance is a budget policy which puts taxes to work as a check on Government spending by requiring that taxes be increased if expenditures are increased. This requirement is a basic element in the stabilizing budget policy recommended by the committee in 1947 in its policy statement, Taxes and the Budget. Each new expenditure would be put squarely to this test: Is it worth the additional taxes needed to finance it? Does the gain from added expenditure exceed the loss from higher taxes?

In answering this question we must count as costs not only the direct reduction of private income through higher taxes but the adverse incentive effects as well. Are taxes already so high that new tax burdens will unduly hamper our economy in providing jobs and promoting economic progress? Will the higher marginal tax rates undermine the incentives to work, save, and invest, which are the mainsprings of increased production and innovation?

Apart from these predominantly economic considerations, the choice between public and private use of resources must be made with this very basic question in view: Are Government expenditures and the activities they finance beginning to impinge on the area of freedom we hold essential to our democratic and individualistic way of life? Is Government beginning to do things and make choices for the citizens for which he should be responsible himself?

It is, of course, clear that we will have to accept very large Federal budgets until true peace is achieved. The move for economy and savings in Government must proceed in harmony with, rather than at the expense of, our essential programs of military security and economic welfare. To the extent that the funds devoted to national defense, foreign aid, and basic economic and social services are efficiently spent and carry out the agreed goals of our national policy, they take priority over the private expenditures they replace.

In the committee's opinion, this general principle in no sense rules out reductions in projected Government expenditures. On the contrary, it underscores the urgent need to control expenditures more effectively and to search for savings more vigorously, both through greater economy and through postponement or curtailment of low-priority programs.

How to make control of expenditures effective

Effective control of Government expenditures requires the combined action of the Executive, the Congress, and the public. The Executive is largely responsible for the initiation and preliminary screening of expenditure proposals and for the administration of programs authorized by the Congress. As we point out in another section of this policy statement, there is a great need and opportunity for more efficient and economical administration of government functions. Moreover, despite improvements in recent years, executive budget procedures still stand in need of reform.

Congress is responsible for weighing the numerous demands for government expenditure against each other and against the general interest in lower taxes. It must also maintain constant scrutiny and exert constant pressure for efficiency and economy. No individual or private agency can do Congress' job for it. But Congress cannot serve its function without the advice and support of an informed public.

Congress is not now adequately organized to do its part of the job. Its machinery is not conducive to a balancing of all of the items on both sides of the budget against each other. Its present organization leads

[2] We have used the President's budget to represent current expenditure proposals. The representation is not precise or complete. For example, there is reason to believe that the social-security expansion program submitted by the administration will not cost as much in fiscal 1950 as the $1,500,000,000 included for that purpose in the budget. On the other hand, proposals for national defense and veterans' expenditures in excess of the President's recommendation have already made some progress through the Congress. Nonetheless, the budget is still the best available indication of the size of the over-all problem.

[3] Adding State and local expenditures to Federal expenditures, the Council of Economic Advisers in its latest Annual Economic Review concludes: "It is expected that total Government cash payments will rise to perhaps $61,000,000,000 for the calendar year 1949, more than $9,000,000,000 higher than in 1948." In other words, total public spending is running in excess of one-fourth of national income.

Congress inevitably to make particular decisions without relation to the whole picture of which they are parts. At the same time Congress is not staffed to exercise a continuing constructive influence on the day-by-day operation of the Government. Its moves for economy tend to be sporadic and spotty.

The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 attempted to establish the machinery for an over-all approach toward the budget and a realistic weighing of taxes against expenditures. The essential element in the act was the requirement that a legislative budget be voted by February 15 of each year, upon the recommendation of a joint committee representing the taxing and appropriations committees of both Houses. However, the date set was too early; no special staff was provided to do the necessary spadework; and a conviction that the procedure could accomplish anything seemed to be lacking. Some critics of the act have suggested that the procedure be abandoned.

In the opinion of the committee, the solution to the problem lies rather in perfecting and implementing the procedure implicit in the 1946 act. The action of the present (81st) Congress in setting a later date (May 1) for agreement on the legislative budget, fixing a maximum limit on expenditures, accomplished a necessary first step. A second is to provide an adequate staff for appropriations work on the pattern of the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. The third step would be to consolidate all appropriations bills into a single omnibus bill.

The improvement of machinery alone will not assure wise congressional action on expenditures. Congress is naturally and properly responsive to the desires of the citizens in budget matters.

How can we make citizens more effective in resisting unsound spending proposals and in promoting the best possible allocation of funds among the many legitimate functions of government?

To do this requires that budgetary processes lay the necessary facts on the table in a form that states clearly the costs against which benefits are to be weighed and also makes it possible to appraise the economic impact of Government budgets. Changes in budgetary practice designed to meet this need are examined in this section.

The improvements in budgetary procedure and presentation which must be made to facilitate more informed public participation in the control of Government expenditures can be grouped as follows: (1) use of the cash-consolidated budget; (2) clarifying policy issues by improved classifications; (3) issuing a shorter budget statement; (4) defining public choices.

Use of the cash-consolidated budget

The committee repeats its earlier recommendation that the cash-consolidated budget be adopted as the basic method of presenting budgetary fact to the public. This does not mean that the administrative budget, which now serves as the basis for public presentation, should be abandoned. It was devised—and still serves—as a necessary instrument of internal control and management. It gives a complete picture of what each agency is doing, without distinguishing between an agency's transactions with the public and its relation with other parts of the Government, or between expenditures made in cash and expenditures made by incurring Government liabilities.

The cash-consolidated budget, however, is superior in gaining an over-all view of Government operations and in judging the effects of Federal taxes and expenditures on the economy. Unlike the administrative budget, it shows the total income and outgo of Government, inclusive of trust account operations.[4] Moreover, it is based on actual cash inpayments and outpayments, excluding transactions in Government liabilities.[5] Thus, it shows the amounts being added to and subtracted from private incomes and holdings of public debt. The cash-consolidated budget makes total cash receipts and total cash expenditures the hub around which the decision-making process revolves.

The committee also recommends that the budget message state each year what projection of national income is used in estimating receipts and expenditures. Failure to include this figure has caused much needless confusion in the past concerning the soundness of revenue and expenditure estimates. The recent announcement by the Secretary of the Treasury that the 1950 estimates are based on a $215,000,000,000 personal income (corresponding to a national income of about $230,000,000,000) is a step in the right direction.

Clarifying issues by improved classifications

Effective budget presentation in a democracy should help the public to understand the choices that have to be made. Sensible choices can be made only in terms of government functions, not in terms of particular organization units. Further, public debate should center on broad programs such as agricultural subsidies, national defense, international reconstruction and relief, and the like. It follows, therefore, that budget presentation should (a) focus attention on functions by bringing together related activities and (b) summarize these activities in categories which aid citizens in making policy decisions.

The new functional classification adopted in 1947 is a commendable first step toward a performance budget. It groups expenditures into such categories as national defense, international affairs and finance, and veterans' services and benefits. To complete the process of giving Congress and the public a clear understanding of what spending is proposed for each activity of Government, the broad functions now used should be split up into activities and the activities into projects. This is what the Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government (the Hoover Commission) calls a performance budget.[6] The appropriations structure would likewise need to be altered with the objectives of such a performance budget in mind.

Issuing a shorter budget statement

Present budget documents are much too long and complex to be effective in getting budgetary facts and issues across to the public. The budget for 1950 is a 6-pound document running to 1,625 pages. Even the more widely available extract, Budget Message of the President and Summary Budget Statements, is over 300 pages long. A condensed statement of perhaps 50 pages is badly needed. It should contain key excerpts from the President's budget message, together with selected tables and charts. Skillful preparation and wide distribution of such a pamphlet would make a real contribution to public understanding of fiscal affairs.

Defining public choices

Putting the above-recommended changes into effect would help greatly in judging the economic effects of Government's activities and would provide a clearer picture of the costs of Government in a particular year. But that year must also be put in its proper perspective if the citizen is to make intelligent decisions on Government spending and taxing.

The public and Congress are told in January what the Government proposes to spend in the year starting just 6 months later. But they are not told how much of this amount is more or less "untouchable" because of past commitments. Nor can they tell what their choices will cost them not merely in the year just ahead but over the life span of the proposed programs.

The public must be given every opportunity to participate in the broad policy determinations of the Federal program. They naturally wish to address their attention to the area where choices are still open. More effective exercise of democratic control of Government and its expenditures would be possible if the budget would focus attention more sharply upon the new decisions which have to be made.

The committee recommends an addition to the customary budget presentation to give us a longer perspective on the choices before us:

For new programs, especially long-run undertakings, the budget should spell out not merely the costs in the coming year but insofar as possible the expected total and pattern of future costs. For long-run undertakings already in progress, the budget should facilitate continuous review and appraisal by showing their exact status in terms of past, present, and future expenditures.

The first part of this recommendation centers directly on the expanding frontiers of Government. It is the decisions on new programs, on proposed legislation, on today's commitments for future spending that determine in large part whether, and in what direction, Government is to expand.

New proposals should be the occasion for reappraisal of existing programs. Their costs should be assessed in relation to their relative benefits. Only if new proposals are fully explained can such a comparison be accomplished and the total program be adjusted to meet the public's preferences.

Yet, as matters now stand, choices which may be decisive for the whole program have to be made largely in terms of the cost for the first year. The statement of immediate costs should be supplemented by as complete a schedule of future costs as present information allows. If no satisfactory schedule can be given for a proposal, this alone may indicate that it is not yet ripe for submission and public decision. Such a requirement would facilitate control of Government expenditures where they originate and while they are still controllable.

Exclusive attention to new proposals will not, however, accomplish the requisite public control over the program as a whole. Long-run undertakings must be subjected to continuous review to make sure that their development is consistent with the public's wishes.

Here again, the budget presentation should make clear the range of choices. Under

---

[4] For example, it includes in the proposed expenditures for fiscal 1950 the $2,000,000,000 national service life insurance dividend which is not shown in the administrative budget. It also adds in the $2,200,000,000 of outpayments from the old-age and survivors insurance trust fund and the $4,100,000,000 of receipts of this trust fund from pay-roll taxes.

[5] For 1950, for example, the administrative budget shows an expenditure of $5,500,000,000 for interest. The actual cash outlay for interest included in the cash-consolidated budget totals only $4,000,000,000 because this budget excludes the accrual of interest on savings bonds and the payment of interest on Government bonds owned by Government trust funds and corporations.

[6] The Commission's Recommendation No. 1 on budgeting is as follows: "We recommend that the whole budgetary concept of the Federal Government should be refashioned by the adoption of a budget based upon functions, activities, and projects. This we designate as a performance budget."

present procedure, commitments grow out of authorizations which are not made by appropriations committees and which may involve little or no appropriation of money at the outset. The public works field provides the prime example of the dimly understood commitment which tends to grow, snowball fashion, as the years go by. The original estimate of the cost to complete the project may be based on limited data. Later revisions and expansions of the program may be cursorily approved merely as amendments to a decision already made. As the preliminary explorations are succeeded by engineering surveys and construction plans, the public should be informed of revised cost estimates and the Congress should exercise continuous surveillance of the broad outlines of the undertaking to insure that new decisions are consciously made. Quite apart from the merit of the project as such, the Missouri Basin development is a good example of a long-range undertaking which has tended to grow piecemeal without adequate congressional or public control of the project as a whole. When first approved by Congress in 1944, the estimated cost of completing the entire project was $1,300,000,000. An initial authorization of $400,000,000 was made at that time to get work started. Today, 5 years later, it is estimated that total Federal costs for the project and related activities may run to $6,000,000,000 over a 6-year period. Part of the increase in estimated costs is due to price rises since the first estimates were made. Most of it, however, appears to be a result of more detailed estimating and additions to the original plan. By June 30, 1949, construction will have begun, according to present plans, on work now estimated to cost $1,400,000,000 to complete. Some $300,000,000 has been appropriated for this work. These parts of the total project, at least, appear to have largely passed beyond the financial control of the public and Congress into the engineering control of the Bureau of Reclamation and the Corps of Engineers.

Even when the total size of a project is beyond effective control because of congressional authorizations, the rate of expenditure may still be subject to control. The impact of the Missouri Basin development on the economy for example, will obviously be quite different if it is rushed to completion in 5 years than if it is spread over 50 years. Here, the key to control seems to be the new units or segments of projects started. This stage requires approval by Congress through actual contract authorizations and appropriations. An annual summary in the budget document showing the status, proposed total outlay, and projected timing of the expenditure of all authorized long-run construction undertakings would contribute measurably to far-sighted control of Federal expenditures.

The Federal civil public works program and proposals shown in the current budget document are summarized below. Information on the timing of these expenditures beyond 1950 is not available.

[In billions of dollars]

	Estimated expenditures in fiscal 1950	Estimated expenditures after fiscal 1950
Projects begun before 1950	2.7	6.1
Projects proposed to start in 1950	.3	1.9
Projects authorized to start after 1950		12.8
Agency proposals not yet authorized		14.0
Total	3.0	34.8

Public works is only one of several fields in which activities are in fact authorized for many years in advance, thus making it difficult to exercise suitable public policy control by conventional annual budgeting. The 1950 budget offers examples from other fields. Universal military training is estimated to cost $600,000,000 for fiscal 1950, but the budget message mentions a figure of $2,000,000,000 for the next year. Evidence is lacking that this figure is founded on careful analysis. The social insurance proposals offer the paradox of presenting long-run cost information, but very little one can lay one's hands on for the years immediately following 1950. Insofar as possible, cost data should be set forth for the entire period involved in current decisions.

Achieving economy in government

With each billion dollars added to the Federal budget, economy becomes an issue of more direct concern to all taxpayers—which means the whole population. Inefficiency that might not have been heavily damaging in a $5,000,000,000 Government becomes intolerable at nine times that figure. It wastes resources that might otherwise have been put to good use privately or devoted to expansion of needed Government services. Inefficiency begins to be felt in higher taxes than seem justified. Or alternatively, it results in the vetoing of important new programs for which there might have been room taxwise in the absence of waste.

That waste has become a serious problem in government is substantiated by the findings of the Hoover Commission. The Commission's reports show that more efficient organization and procedures can, in the course of time, save hundreds of millions—perhaps even billions—of dollars.

The existence of waste in government is hardly surprising. Government is the Nation's biggest and most complex business. Its officials are spending not their own but other people's money. And it is not compelled to live within its income.

The person who is spending someone else's dollars—whether on a business expense account or on a Government job—will usually be less strict in his standards than if he were spending his own. When the consequences of spending unwisely or too much are borne by someone other than the spender, cost-consciousness usually lessens. As Government spends a larger and larger proportion of our income, this problem becomes increasingly serious.

At the same time, bigness and complexity make it difficult to control and gain accountability in Government spending. In a small business or a small unit of local government, identity, or close contact between the spender and the one who bears the consequences provides the needed incentive. But as that contact is lost either in the large corporation or the remote Federal Government, the incentive becomes weaker and wasteful spending tends to grow.

In private units tendencies toward waste are checked by the painful if not disastrous consequences of living beyond one's income. But Government, by its very nature, lives by different standards. Unlike private units, which must tailor spending to receipts, Government units first decide upon their expenditures and then raise the funds needed to finance them. Only if we adopt a budgetary policy which makes higher taxes a consequence of higher expenditures can we enlist the aid of the revenue test in tightening the expenditure standards of Government. If this general test could be supplemented by a personalized incentive scheme—one which would relate promotions and higher salaries directly to superior performance at least cost—we could make real inroads on the problem of cost-consciousness.

For the most part, inefficiency in Government takes intangible forms—bad organization, deficient procedures, and the lack of incentives to do things the least expensive way. To the extent that waste consists of multiplication of agencies doing uncoordinated and overlapping things, it will yield only slowly to reform. But the more tangible forms of duplication in physical facilities are a promising field for economy, even in the fairly short run. Duplicate inventories of materials throughout Government, for example, can be liquidated by centralizing both purchasing and supplies. As the Armed Services become more truly unified, duplication of air fields, training bases, and service establishments can be avoided or eliminated.

The President's recent attempt to cut back the veterans' hospital program illustrates, however, the resistance that frequently springs up when an attempt is made to economize. Veterans' groups immediately protested the cut-back. Local groups, in the geographic areas affected, quickly joined the hue and cry. As a result it appears probable that most of the cut will be restored.

Resistance of a different kind is encountered in trying to consolidate overlapping agencies, modernize obsolete procedures, and tighten up on the use of supplies. In part, the economizing process is slowed down by the resistance of Government employees who may lose their jobs or their power. But the usual vagueness of the issues and the general inertia of such a hugh organization as the Federal Government are more important obstacles.

The Hoover Commission has made an outstanding contribution in defining the issues, stimulating public awareness, and offering specific suggestions for reform. The most important of these reforms relate to such matters as the elimination of duplication, consolidation of units, improving lines of responsibility and strengthening procedures for budgeting and expense control.

Perhaps the most impressive case for economy is made by the Commission's report on national security. Judging by the report, the armed services provide examples of virtually every type of inefficiency and waste that exists in Government. But the studies of the Commission have suggested improvements and savings in many other areas as well. Only a few examples need be cited here. In the Veterans' Administration reorganization and procedural improvement can, it is held, accomplish a 10-percent increase in the average output of each employee, with consequent savings of as much as $75,000,000 a year. The task-force report on the Post Office states that "total annual expenditures in post offices having receipts of over $1,000,000 per year can be reduced by at least $90,000,000 if operations are placed under better management control," though at least $3,000,000 annually will have to be invested to achieve this economy.

The Research and Policy Committee commends the report of the Hoover Commission for early consideration and appropriate action. Giving the President appropriate powers, with safeguards deemed necessary, to consolidate and reorganize the executive arm of government would be a hopeful start.

Reliance for achieving economy must also be placed on exposures of waste, duplication, and inefficiency. Vigilance on the part of individual citizens, civic groups, and news organs in unearthing and publicizing examples of wasteful spending has a wholesome effect on the responsible officials.

The foregoing comments indicate that economy and efficiency in Government cannot be achieved either easily or quickly. But they show just as clearly that economy is not a mere will-o'-the-wisp. Given the stimulus to achieve economy—and the burdens of a $45,000,000,000 level of Federal spending should certainly provide that stimulus—it is clear that vigorous efforts in that direction can be very rewarding.

Controlling new items of expenditure

Apart from doing the existing jobs of Government at lower cost, can we effect significant savings by postponing or curtailing low-priority Government programs?

The search for savings will be most fruitful in those areas where we are currently being asked to undertake new or expanded commitments. We should focus our attention chiefly on new-item control rather than tilting at the windmill of commitments to which we are legally or morally bound by past actions.

Table IV shows the $8,076,000,000 of expenditures in the President's budget for 1950 which depend on proposed legislation.[2] The largest item in the table is the $4,655,000,000 for the European recovery program and other foreign aid. Although no legal commitment exists for these projects, failure to provide funds would be interpreted both at home and abroad as breaking a definite moral commitment. Leaving out this item, we find $3,421,000,000 of proposed expenditure which depends on new legislation, to which we are not yet committed. In this amount and in the expansion of programs already authorized by statute but for which appropriations are still required lie the best opportunities for free choices affecting the expenditure side of the budget. It should be noted that $1,665,000,000 of the expenditures under new legislation is for social insurance expansion to be financed by pay-roll tax increases.

In the field of public works, the committee thoroughly agrees with the following suggestions made by the President in his budget message: "Present high costs of construction and large competitive demands from various sectors of the economy make it necessary to undertake new river-basin projects only where urgency is evident." Further: "Because of the great increase in the estimated cost of the Missouri Basin development, the present plan should be reexamined to determine needed changes."

Parallel with these suggestions, the committee would raise two questions. First, is it good public business to spend as much as $3,000,000,000 of public money on construction in 1950 as recommended by the President? As long as costs are still high and demands for non-Federal construction of some types remain insistent, Federal construction should be slowed down. Slowing down now would make it easier to spend up later if esonomic activity should decline sufficiently to call for an increase of public works expenditure. Some will protest that a slow-down now would be uneconomical because it would interrupt work already under way. To this protest it may be answered that the large projects comprising the bulk of the $3,000,000,000 construction item break down into a series of individual works, especially in flood control and reclamation. The committee is convinced that a project-by-project engineering analysis could squeeze out a sizable sum for 1950 without impairing performance.

The second question regarding public works is this: Are decisions on the proposed $295,000,000 for new projects in 1950 being made with full regard to the total costs involved? We have in mind the total of $2,200,000,000 needed to complete these projects. This proposed expenditure should be evaluated not simply in terms of the benefits yielded to the particular area where the projects are located. It should also take into account for example, the housing or education projects (either public or private) which may have to be foregone to support the proposed public works. Particular attention should be given the projects which are at or approaching the stage of proposed authorizations, such as the St. Lawrence seaway and the Columbia River Basin development. It is at this stage that control can be most effective.

There are, of course, other areas in which diligent probing will reveal opportunities for savings. Such savings can and should be made without sacrificing essential elements of our programs for military security and social welfare. But constant vigilance will be needed to avoid the conversion of savings on one front into unwarranted expansion on another front.

IV. BUDGET POLICY

The proposals in the President's January budget message, excluding the recommended general tax increase, added up to a cash surplus of $1,500,000,000 to be achieved if total personal income remained at about the $215,000,000,000 level of October–December 1948. The President stated in January that he would send up at a later date a proposal for expenditure for military aid to the North Atlantic countries. Inclusion of an unofficial estimate of $600,000,000 for the purpose would reduce the cash surplus to $900,000,000.

The President recommended an increase of tax rates to yield $4,000,000,000 in a full year. He suggested that "the principal source * * * should be additional taxes upon corporate profits," supplemented by higher taxes on estates and gifts and possibly by an "increase of rates of individual income taxes in the upper and middle brackets." Because of the normal lag of tax collections the yield of the additional taxes in fiscal 1950 would be considerably less than $4,000,000,000, perhaps around $2,500,000,000.

Thus the President's budget recommendations would lead to a cash surplus of a little over $3,000,000,000 at a personal income level of $215,000,000,000, the surplus to be achieved by means of a tax increase, mainly on corporate profits, to offset expenditure increases.

This policy, as explained by the President reflects the belief that a surplus is necessary to combat inflation, that reduction of the debt is desirable in conditions of high employment, and that a tax increase is the best means to achieve the surplus.

The principles of budget policy

Any recommendation on budget policy for a particular year reflects, explicitly or implicitly, certain principles or attitudes about the nature of budget policy in general. Should we seek to balance the budget each year, or should the size of the surplus vary with economic conditions? Should policy each year be guided by a current economic forecast or should we rely on more objective standards? We must first arrive at general answers to such questions before we can agree upon, or even discuss usefully, year-by-year budget policy. Our budget is too big, the short-run pressures and uncertainties too great, to allow us to improvise budget policy as we go along.

In 1947 the committee developed the basic principles of a workable budget policy that would contribute to economic stability, Government economy and debt reduction. The key to the program is this:

"Set tax rates to balance the budget and provide a surplus for debt retirement at agreed high levels of employment and national income. Having set these rates, leave them alone unless there is some major change in national policy or condition of national life."

The meaning of this recommendation and the reasoning that lies behind it were explained in detail in our policy statement "Taxes and the budget." We shall spell out the main implications here only in brief and general terms.

If the recommended policy were followed, the size of the actual surplus would vary with the size of the actual national income. The lower employment and national income are, the smaller will be the yield of the existing tax rates and the higher the amount of payments for unemployment compensation. There would be an automatic rise or fall of the surplus that would tend to check any rise or fall of national income and so to help maintain stability. Thus, suppose we arrange our budget expenditure programs and tax rates so that there would be a cash surplus of $3,000,000,000 at a national income about the current level of $230,000,000,000. If the national income falls to, say, $215,000,000,000 or $200,000,000,000, tax revenues will decline and unemployment compensation payments rise. The budget will take less income away from private individuals and businesses and pay more to them. This will serve to cushion the decline of national income. In present conditions, when a large part of Federal revenue comes from corporate profits taxes and business break-even points are unusually high, a decline of national income would reduce tax collections especially sharply and could easily result in a substantial deficit.

In theory it would be possible to go beyond this automatic effect of economic fluctuations upon the budget and the corresponding effects of the budget in reducing fluctuations. That is, in theory it would be possible to cut taxes in depression and raise taxes in inflation and so make a greater contribution to stability. But such a policy can only be effective if the timing is right. It will contribute to instability, not to stability, if the tax rate changes come too soon or too late. The well known unreliability of economic forecasting, plus the difficulties of getting quick action on tax rates, lead us to conclude that such a program would be unlikely in fact to contribute to stability. In conditions of extreme depression or inflation it may be desirable to go beyond the automatic operation of the stable tax-rate program and reduce or increase tax rates. But in more moderate fluctuations the maximum contribution of the budget to stability will, we believe, be obtained from the general policy we have recommended.

Adherence to the stabilizing budget principle would promote economy in Government. To maintain taxes at the recommended level—enough to yield a reasonable surplus at agreed high levels of national income—would require that an increase in Government expenditure programs be matched by a corresponding increase in tax rates. This requirement would not, of course, serve as a substitute for the constant sifting and winnowing which is necessary to assure the maximum return per dollar of Government expenditure. Moreover, the committee recognizes that it may be undesirable to raise tax rates to meet a large and clearly temporary expenditure increase. But if the basic principle is followed the general aversion to higher taxes would be a valuable check on unnecessary expansion of the level of Government expenditure.

The committee's proposal would establish the reduction of the Federal debt as a recognized item on our fiscal agenda. Its policy would neither accept a constantly mounting debt as inevitable nor put us in the straitjacket of compulsory debt retirement each year. Rather, debt would be retired at and above satisfactory levels of national income and employment, i. e., when the economy could afford it. If, on the average, we achieve our goal of maintaining high employment, the debt would be gradually reduced.

The committee does not rely on budget or fiscal policy alone to achieve economic stability. As the committee pointed out in monetary and fiscal policy for greater economic stability, economic stability requires coordinated action on many fronts. Fiscal policy must be coupled with monetary and debt-management policy. Monetary-fiscal policy, in turn, needs to be buttressed by appropriate wage-price and agricultural policies and by greater contributions to economic stability than have hitherto been forthcoming from policies prevailing in construction, foreign trade, and international finance, banking and insurance, and in the management of individual businesses.

We wish particularly to emphasize that the effectiveness of budgetary policy as a force for economic stability depends on how well the debt is managed. A surplus of cash receipts over expenditures will be more deflationary if it is used to build up the Treasury's cash balance or to pay off Government bonds held by the Federal Reserve banks than if it is devoted to repayment of savings bonds. Similarly, a deficit financed by borrowing from commercial banks will be more expansionary than one financed by borrowing from individuals. Changes in composition of the debt can have significant economic effects. For example, during an inflation it would be appropriate to intensify the program for selling savings bonds.

The principle recommended here is that the relation between expenditures and tax rates be so adjusted as to yield a moderate surplus at agreed high levels of employment and national income. Application of the principle requires some definition of the size of the surplus and the high-level national income.

In 1947 the committee suggested that tax rates should be set at a level that would yield a $3,000,000,000 cash surplus under conditions of high employment.

The committee recognizes that it is impossible to determine now for the indefinite future how large a cash surplus will on the average be consistent with the maintenance of stability at high employment. We believe that in the prospective condition of the American economy an annual cash surplus of $3,000,000,000 will not ordinarily be too large for the achievement of prosperity, especially if we adopt policies with respect to the tax structure, money and the debt that stimulate private investment. If this belief should in the future prove clearly erroneous, if the $3,000,000,000 annual withdrawal from private incomes and liquid assets should prove an excessive drag upon the economy, it will be desirable to reduce the figure.

The revenue estimates included in the President's January budget message were based on the assumption that total personal income would continue at about $215,000,000,000 a year. This is approximately the level that prevailed in the second half of 1948, somewhat below the peak reached at the end of 1948, and probably close to the current (spring 1949) level. It is a level of income at which we have had high employment with an average level of prices near the present level. The personal income figure of $215,000,000,000 corresponds to a national income figure of $230,000,000,000. Conceivably with a sufficient decline in prices high employment could be maintained at a level of national income lower than $230,000,000,000. However, any considerable fall of national income carries with it the risk of unemployment. There is no strong reason for setting tax rates high enough to yield a cash surplus at a national income figure below that used in the preparation of the budget estimates. Therefore we consider it a reasonable interpretation of our general principle at the present time that the budget should be set to yield a $3,000,000,000 surplus at about $230,000,000,000 national income. It should be clear that this does not imply a forecast that the national income will actually be $230,000,000,000 in 1949–50. If the national income is lower the surplus would be, appropriately, lower.

Need for reform of the tax structure

Before turning to the application of our general principle to the question of the total level of taxes in 1949–50 we wish to emphasize that tax policy is not merely a question of totals. It is also a question of the character of the taxes that yield the total. Our present tax system has seriously detrimental effects upon the vitality and efficiency of our productive system. We have described these effects and made suggestions for remedying them in an earlier policy statement.[8] We shall not repeat them here. Major changes in the tax structure have often in the past been the byproducts of major changes in the level of taxes. However, this need not be the case. Important structural improvements can be achieved without any change in the over-all level of taxes. In fact, the prospect that we may have to live for some while with the present over-all level of taxes makes it especially urgent that we proceed with structural improvements. The present heavy burden of taxes aggravates the structural defects of the existing system.

Pay-roll taxes for social security

The President's proposals include $2,200,000,000 of pay-roll tax increase to finance broader social-security benefits. These benefits, in turn, are estimated by the budget to account for $1,600,000,000 of expenditures.

Without passing on the merits of the expansion of social insurance recommended by the President,[9] the committee would agree that higher pay-roll taxes are the appropriate means of financing it under present circumstances. Such taxes are appropriate here because (1) direct and recognizable benefits are being given in exchange; (2) they generate the feeling that benefits are received as a matter of right rather than charity. The committee is mindful, however, of the broad interest of society in the welfare of the aged and the consequent justification of a measure of financial support from the general revenue. Also, as benefits are increased and coverage is widened, making social insurance more truly a general government function, we will approach the point where, as the committee suggested in Taxes and the Budget, it becomes appropriate to reconsider the entire financial status of the system.

Budget policy for fiscal year 1950

The Choices Before the Country

The expenditure proposals now before the Congress confront the country with the necessity for choosing among three courses of action:

1. To hold expenditures down—so that a moderate cash surplus would be yielded by existing tax rates under conditions of high employment.

2. To allow expenditures to rise and to increase tax rates—so that tax revenue would cover the increased expenditures plus a moderate cash surplus at high employment.

3. To allow expenditures to rise and not to increase tax rates—so that there would be at most a very small surplus and possibly a deficit even at high employment.

The Need for Reduction of Expenditures

In the present situation the only acceptable course to follow is to reduce expenditures.

The committee recognizes the inescapable character of some of the largest Government-expenditure programs. It appreciates the grave risks that must be weighed by those who have to decide the amounts to be spent for national defense or foreign aid. These decisions cannot be governed entirely, or even primarily, by fiscal considerations.

But the existence of a large, hard core of expenditures in the budget does not mean that the budget as a whole is untouchable. On the contrary, the extraordinary demands that the current international situation make upon the Federal budget compel us to practice economy everywhere with more than ordinary rigor. The question is not whether we can find expenditure programs in the budget that are useless. The important questions are (1) can the most essential programs be trimmed and carried on more economically and (2) can the less essential programs be deferred, curtailed, or eliminated, in view of the great demands being made upon the budget?

Expert investigation has shown that large amounts can be saved by reorganization and more efficient operation of the Government. In this connection we have referred in section III to the finding of the Hoover Commission. It is critically imperative that these potential savings be realized quickly and fully. We have also pointed out that many of the expenditure programs, new and old, submitted to Congress represents decisions to be made, not necessities to be accepted. There is, for example, a choice in the rate at which we push ahead expanding public-works programs. There are choices in the rate at which we introduce other new programs and carry on old ones.

Whatever may be said for the need for certain projects that will increase expenditures, the need must surely be weighed against the cost. Under present conditions the cost is raising taxes or foregoing debt reduction. Either cost is too high.

The Cost of Higher Taxes

The burden of taxes in the United States is heavy. Federal taxes alone take about one-fifth of the national income. Federal, State, and local taxes together take about one-fourth of the national income. This heavy tax burden is a serious threat to the growth and efficiency of the American economy. The heavy tax burden reduces the supply of capital available for investment in expansion and improvement of productive capacity. It represses the incentives to use

[8] Taxes and the Budget, a statement on national policy by the Research and Policy Committee of the CED, November 1947.

[9] The committee has earlier recommended one large single element in the program, namely, the broadening of old-age and survivors insurance. We have also suggested broader coverage of unemployment compensation and liberalization of benefits. See Taxes and the Budget.

funds in risky, forward-looking enterprises, since the Government will take a large share of the rewards if the enterprise is successful but will only share in any losses to a much smaller extent, if at all. In some cases the high share that the Government takes of additional earnings weakens the drive to personal effort. A continuing, large flow of capital into additional productive capacity, a continuing search for new and better ways of using funds and personal talent are essential to the future strength of this country and to the well-being of the whole population, indeed of the whole democratic world. Adding to the existing tax burden would further weaken these basic supports and stimulators of our economy.

A tax increase would be particularly risky at the present time. There has already been a substantial softening from the boom economic conditions of a year ago. Employment and production are still high as this is written. We are not now in a depression. But no one can tell when the decline may stop or how far it may go. We should not, if we can avoid it, add the real and psychological impact of a tax increase to the forces making for the current readjustment.

The Cost of Not Providing for Debt Reduction

The principle that if expenditure levels are increased taxes should be increased sufficiently to provide for debt reduction during periods of high employment we regard as essential to the long-run stability of the American economy. Failure now to hold expenditures moderately below the revenues that would be yielded by our tax system under conditions of high employment would be a dangerous departure from that principle.

This principle is a necessary safeguard against excessive increase of Government expenditure. It should be abandoned only in the most extraordinary circumstances. It is not, and should not be, an insuperable barrier to any increase of expenditure. But it does impose upon the Government and the public the discipline of counting the costs of their expenditure decisions. Thus, it tends to confine expenditures to those of which the value is clear after the costs as well as benefits have been weighed. There is no practical substitute for the requirement that taxes be raised when expenditure programs are increased as a means of bringing the costs as well as the gains into the balance-of-expenditure decisions. Without this balancing, we would be exposed to the danger of continuous expansion of the scope of Government and uneconomical diversion of resources from private to Government use.

The principle that the debt should be reduced in periods of high employment is also a necessary safeguard against a long-run inflationary trend. The committee has recognized that the importance of combating economic instability makes it undesirable to attempt to reduce the debt during a period of depression. The same consideration points to the necessity of providing for a surplus in prosperous times. If we run deficits in depression and yet enforce no check against deficits in prosperity we shall get not stability but economic fluctuations around an inflationary trend.

We have indicated that to increase taxes would be especially risky now in view of the present business uncertainty. To allow expenditures to rise so far that existing taxes would not yield a surplus at high employment would add to the existing uncertainty. It would suggest an inability to manage our fiscal affairs.

The committee's conclusion is: The costs of not curtailing expenditures are too high to pay, in terms of their effects upon the stability and efficiency of the American economy. Congress and the President have the responsibility for weighing these costs. They cannot safely accept the position that because expenditure reduction is difficult the only choice lies between raising taxes and foregoing debt reduction. The course of least resistance may be to approve expenditure increases and not to raise taxes. However, if the effort to reduce expenditures finally fails, it is the committee's judgment that Congress must assume responsibility for raising taxes, as the least dangerous of the two other alternatives.[10] In our judgment, however, a tax increase is not necessary because, barring major unforeseen international developments, expenditures for the coming fiscal year can be reduced.

VISIT TO THE SENATE BY GEN. LUCIUS CLAY

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to make an announcement for the benefit of the RECORD, and also for the press.

Gen. Lucius Clay has been invited to speak tomorrow before the House of Representatives. Following his appearance and address in the House of Representatives, he will then come to the United States Senate and address Members of the Senate. I do not know the exact time, but I ask unanimous consent that General Clay be permitted to address Members of the Senate at some time early tomorrow afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERR in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I will state that I feel confident that I express the views of minority Members, as the majority leader expresses the views of Senators on his side of the aisle. We shall be only too happy to hear General Clay, who has made such an excellent record as an administrator in Berlin.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the able acting minority leader.

Mr. President, I cannot tell the Senate the exact time, but I have conferred with General Bradley, and General Bradley has agreed to have General Clay here immediately following his address in the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, a recess will be ordered at an appropriate time tomorrow so that General Clay may have the opportunity to address Members of the Senate.

RECESS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 17, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 16 (legislative day of April 11, 1949):

IN THE ARMY

Gen. Lucius DuBignon Clay, O9318, commander in chief and military governor, United States zone, Germany (major general, U. S. Army) to be placed on the retired list in the grade of general under the provisions of subsection 504 (d) of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947.

Maj. Gen. Abram Franklin Kibler, O6668, Army of the United States (brigadier general, U. S. Army), for appointment as major general in the Regular Army of the United States under the provisions of title V, Officer Personnel Act of 1947.

Brig. Gen. Ernest Marion Brannon, O12292, Army of the United States (colonel, Judge Advocate General's Corps, U. S. Army), for appointment as brigadier general, Judge Advocate General's Corps, in the Regular Army of the United States, under the provisions of title V, Officer Personnel Act of 1947, and title II, Public Law 759, Eightieth Congress.

Brig. Gen. George Leland Eberle, O6613, United States Army, for temporary appointment as major general in the Army of the United States under the provisions of section 515, Officer Personnel Act of 1947.

IN THE AIR FORCE

The following-named persons for appointment in the United States Air Force in the grade indicated, with dates of rank to be determined by the Secretary of the Air Force, under the provisions of section 506, Public Law 381, Eightieth Congress (Officer Personnel Act of 1947):

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 16, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou Christ who art the open door between two worlds, through which have come light, hope, and promise, unto Thee we offer our prayer.

Examine us and prove us, and help us to hold fast that which is good, that we may be true to ourselves and to Thee, and thus serve wisely our country. Prove to us that self-discipline is the most stable form of character building, and that integrity is the watchword not only for our Republic, but for the nations of earth; for the nation that breaks its promises and sows to the wind shall of that wind reap the whirlwind. Do Thou guide the world and save it. In the name of the Saviour of men. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, May 12, 1949, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed a joint resolution and bills of the House of the following titles:

On May 12, 1949:

H. J. Res. 226. Joint resolution making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1949, and for other purposes.

On May 13, 1949:

H. R. 1467. An act for the relief of Thomas O. Troth; and

H. R. 2605. An act for the relief of John C. Nunes.

On May 14, 1949:

H. R. 711. An act for the relief of Mrs. Margaret Gregg Dilnot;

H. R. 1508. An act for the relief of Peter Drozd;

H. R. 1876. An act for the relief of Ralph Martin Elzingre, also known as Ralph Seawell;

H. R. 1983. An act for the relief of Edward L. Barreras; and

H. R. 2231. An act for the relief of Marie E. Wright.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 59. Concurrent resolution providing for a joint session of Congress on May 19, 1949, for the purpose of hearing an address by the President of the United States of Brazil.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 42) entitled "Joint resolution granting the consent and approval of Congress to an interstate compact relating to the better utilization of the fisheries (marine, shell, and anadromous) of the Gulf coast and creating the Gulf States Marine Fisheries Commission."

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill H. R. 4009.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ELLIOTT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances.

Mr. DEGRAFFENRIED asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from the American Federationist.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

[Mr. FEIGHAN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURPHY (at the request of Mr. BREEN) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by Hon. James A. Farley, and in addition thereto certain other material.

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, for the past few days we have seen in the press and heard over the radio discussions in regard to the fellowship program administered by the Atomic Energy Commission. That program deals with the training of students in the fields of physics, biology, and medicine as well as other branches of science. Under the direction of Senator MCMAHON, who became chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy on January 23, 1949, which committee was headed by Senator HICKENLOOPER during the Eightieth Congress, the staff of this committee was authorized to investigate this program in preparation for committee hearings on the subject. A hearing was held on May 5 with the Commission and an open hearing is scheduled for this afternoon at 2:30.

The Commission has taken the position that students who receive a fellowship are not required to have FBI clearance before they are granted such a scholarship. Neither are they obligated in any way for future employment by the Commission. The position taken by the Commission is one that I disagree with. I believe that all students receiving this fellowship should be required to be cleared by the FBI before they are granted. Further, they should be required to render some service to the Federal Government in return for receiving their education. I am thoroughly aware of the need to train scientists and feel that the program could be of great benefit in providing more and better qualified men for the field of science, in which field there is a critical shortage here in America. The Atomic Energy Commission requires FBI clearance of all persons before they are employed by the Commission. Certainly if we are going to train these scientists with the expectation of using them later on I cannot believe it to be a wise policy to train them without FBI clearance first. I do not believe such requirements would trespass on academic freedom. I believe it would have been wise for the Commission to have corrected this, which they could have done under the authority of the Atomic Energy Act of 1946.

Certainly I am opposed to educating anyone out of public funds who admits that he is a Communist as Hans Freistadt has admitted and who has been awarded an Atomic Energy Commission fellowship, or to any other person who is not loyal to our form of government. I assure the Members of the House that I am going to do everything I can to correct this serious mistake of the Commission, so I am, today, introducing a bill which requires FBI clearance before a person may receive Atomic Energy Commission fellowship. I am deeply interested in the atomic energy program and I know of no Member of Congress who desires to take any action that would jeopardize the program but I do not intend to sit idly by and see the program destroyed by infiltration of Communists.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Williamson (W. Va.) Daily News.

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include certain statements and excerpts.

Mr. CLEMENTE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. BARTLETT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include several letters.

Mr. MURDOCK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances.

GEN. LUCIUS D. CLAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to announce that Gen. Lucius D. Clay, former military governor, United States zone of Germany, and commander in chief of the European command, will visit the Capitol on tomorrow and I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that it may be in order at any time on tomorrow for the Speaker to declare a recess so that the House may receive General Clay.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, it is anticipated that General Clay will arrive at the House at 12:30 noon, tomorrow. I make that announcement for the information of the Members.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include extraneous matter.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, revise and extend my remarks and include two news articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

[Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Boston Daily Record, lauding Mr. J. Edgar Hoover as a great American.

GRATEFUL AMPUTEES

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, do not let anybody think that the veterans forget. Every year since the passage of the veteran's automobile bill, amputees of World War II have come to the Capitol with flowers. This year they were represented by Mr. Wallace W. Daczkowski, national commander of the Amputees of World War II, Mr. Eugene F. Pasquini, adjutant, and Mr. Joseph S. Stryjewski, executive board member. They got up at 4 o'clock in the morning and drove by automobile from Philadelphia to Washington. They came with a basket of the most beautiful red, white, and blue flowers I have ever seen. It was presented to me as the author of the first veterans' automobile bill, but as the boys said to me, as they left, it was meant also for every Member of the House who helped in the passage of the bill—the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, the Appropriations Committee which every year has continued the provisions of their bill, and the entire membership of the House. I placed the basket of flowers in the House dining room in front of the large mirror so that all the Members may see them. We do not forget the amputee veterans and they certainly do not forget us.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

GERHART EISLER

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, Gerhart Eisler, the No. 1 Communist in the United States fled the country to avoid serving jail terms imposed by two courts for violating American laws. True, he was caught when the ship on which he was first a stowaway and then a luxury passenger reached Britain.

Now the question I want to ask, and to which Members of Congress want the answer is, How was it possible that Eisler was able to elude the surveillance he was supposed to be under and slip through the fingers of the Justice Department and board the ship?

If Eisler was able to walk unmolested aboard an ocean liner unbeknown to the Justice Department, what has he been doing all these months while out on bail? Has he been carrying out the orders of the Kremlin and has he been building up Communist cells of destruction?

Can the Justice Department say that he has not? And what does Attorney General Clark have to say about Eisler's slick trick?

It appears, Mr. Speaker, that the Attorney General has been more interested in other matters than seeing that the No. 1 Communist was made to live up to the laws of the United States as all of our citizens must do.

While Eisler was successfully fleeing the country we are told that the Attorney General was very busy bringing the might of his Department to influence the conduct of a committee of the House.

He wants to run the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Let me say I hope he never gets the opportunity to run that committee, or any other, as he runs the Department of Justice.

I want to say this. While the king pin of the Communist conspiracy in the United States was boarding a ship to flee the country the Attorney General was trying to get the House Committee on Un-American Activities to fire one of its investigators. This has been termed "Blundering interference." A tame label.

Now it is likely that the Attorney General will deny that he has been interfering with a congressional committee. But, Mr. Speaker, what is his answer to his failure to prosecute Communist spies in the United States?

Why does not the Attorney General put the power of his Department behind a drive to rid the Government and the country of these Communists instead of heckling an employee of a House committee?

Maybe Congress should make a little inquiry into the conduct of the Attorney General and his Department of Justice.

THE HOBBS BILL

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS] just made out a very strong case for the enactment of the so-called Hobbs bill.

Of course you all remember that at the time bail was fixed for Mr. Eisler in the District of Columbia the Attorney General endeavored to prevail upon the court not to fix any bail whatsoever, and when the court insisted that bail would be fixed, the Attorney General insisted that the amount be $100,000.

However, it does not make any difference what the bail is, because after a man has been released on bail then the FBI no longer places him under surveillance. He is free to go wherever he feels like throughout the United States. However, under the Hobbs bill which passed the House, it would be possible in cases of that sort to incarcerate the man pending final disposition of his appeal from an order of deportation. It certainly seems to me that in the light of what happened recently this House at least should insist that prompt action again be taken on the Hobbs bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENSEN asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. WOODRUFF asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by James H. McGraw, Jr.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and have them printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a speech by Dr. Paul B. Dunbar.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. KEEFE addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

WASTE AND EXTRAVAGANCE IN REPAIRING CAPITOL ROOF

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, those of us who believe in economy have often called attention to the Government's waste and extravagance. But we have been invariably accused of exaggeration.

Here—at the very door of this House—is a shocking example of waste and extravagance which every Member can step outside and see. I refer to the contractor's dream house, with auxiliary buildings and enclosing fence, that are being constructed on the Capitol lawn in connection with the work of remodeling this Chamber and repairing the roof. It appears that the same such elaborate estate is being built on the Senate wing.

As I say, it is a contractor's dream house. Take a close look at it. It was built with the best of lumber and in accordance with the best design. On the first floor there are several rooms, and on the second floor will be the most modern of offices.

And take a close look at the fence that has been erected. It is not made of discarded lumber or seconds. There are no knots in the boards. It is made of beautifully grained plywood that would make as fine a table top as any of us may hope to own.

I do not know how many thousands of dollars this elegant construction lay-out will cost. But I do know that the contractor has a cost-plus-fixed fee contract, and you may be quite sure that it will be the American taxpayer, and not the contractor, who will pay the cost of this unjustified waste and extravagance, which typifies this administration.

The Truman administration may call all this wasteful spending a Fair Deal, but it is a raw deal for the taxpayer. He is the forgotten man.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CHURCH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Chicago Daily News of last Saturday entitled "Reckless Public Spending Incites Taxpayers' Revolt."

Mr. TOLLEFSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. RIEHLMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a letter.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. DONDERO asked and was given permission to address the House for 30 minutes on tomorrow after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore granted.

Mr. BOGGS of Delaware asked and was given permission to address the House for 15 minutes today after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore granted.

MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, multiple sclerosis is a dreadful disease. For thousands of victims, multiple sclerosis is a tragic reality. For medical science, multiple sclerosis, with its many unanswered questions, is one of the most baffling diseases in existence. Only the combined efforts of the community and science can someday hope to solve the mystery of multiple sclerosis. In short, multiple sclerosis is a chronic nerve disease in which a patchy destruction of the nervous system occurs. Something must be done about this terrible disease. In response to a heartbreaking appeal from a young mother in my congressional district who is afflicted with the disease, I introduced H. R. 1573 on January 17, 1949. The bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Other bills of a like nature have also been introduced. I earnestly urge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to take prompt action on this type of legislation. My bill would amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research and investigation with respect to the causes, prevention, and treatment of multiple sclerosis and related neurological diseases. Perhaps there is yet hope for the thousands of victims of this dreadful disease. Let it not be said that the Congress of the United States has fallen short of its duty by doing everything it can to find the cause and the cure of a disease which is incapacitating thousands of young people in their prime of life.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SANBORN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. JENKINS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include editorials.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Wisconsin State Journal.

Mr. LODGE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

MEDICAL SERVICE TO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I read with much interest the column by Mr. Drew Pearson in this morning's Washington Post relative to the supposedly wonderful service along medical lines which the Members of Congress receive here at the Capitol, illustrating thereby that socialized medicine is a great thing.

My only contact with that particular office happened one time when I suffered an injury to my right wrist. I went down there to see what was wrong with that wrist and was told that it was a bad sprain. No X-rays were suggested. I was instructed to go ahead and soak my forearm in hot epsom salts water to alleviate the pain. Fortunately, I had occasion to go to Minnesota 3 weeks later and, as my wrist was still very painful, contacted my home-town doctor and he asked me: "Did you have an X-ray taken of the wrist after the accident?" I answered, "No, none was suggested." My doctor in Tyler, Minn., then took an X-ray and it was found that the wrist had been broken. He said that it was extremely fortunate that the bone had knitted together properly without medical attention.

All I have to say is that, if the medical service we have available here in the Capitol is a sample of socialized medicine, I certainly pity the people of America if that legislation is enacted into law.

ADDITIONAL CLERK HIRE FOR MEMBERS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of amusement to the remarks of both the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] this morning, and may I say to both these gentlemen that had they been listening to the proceedings in the House last Thursday they would have had every opportunity to prevent H. R. 4583 from being considered under the unanimous-consent request. So far as the gentleman from Michigan is concerned, he was present on the floor of the House but was very busy reading his newspaper and apparently paying no attention so did not hear the Clerk when he read the title of the bill.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. I was called to the telephone at the time the bill was called up, as I explained in my remarks that same afternoon at page 6151 of last Thursday's RECORD. I heard what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] said today, and I know there were other Members who did not understand what the gentlewoman from New Jersey was proposing. Regardless of the question of the merits of the bill, I think we ought to have opportunity to discuss it, and particularly bills involving additional expense.

Mrs. NORTON. I cannot be responsible for what the Members understood or did not understand. I may say to the gentleman also that if he does not want the additional clerk he does not have to hire the clerk. Each Member is the keeper of his own conscience. The work in our offices varies, depending upon what kind of service the Member renders to constituents. During my 24 years as a Member of the House I can say my work has doubled. Many Members have found it absolutely necessary to employ extra help at their own expense. Not many Members can afford to do this. Hearings were held by the Subcommittee on House Administration. The bill was carefully considered and a unanimous report was submitted from the committee.

ADVANCE WARNING OF TORNADOES

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and also to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, all of us sympathize deeply with the victims of that terrible tornado that struck Amarillo, Tex., and vicinity, yesterday.

I have communicated with Dr. Reichelderfer of the Weather Bureau in reference to the possibility of giving some sort of special warning of the approach of these tornadoes throughout the country. He tells me that the warning cannot be given as to the approach of an individual tornado, but warning may be given of the approach of tornadic weather. He is studying that matter, and I certainly hope he reaches a decision at an early date which decision will give the people of the tornado areas of the country some sort of special warning permitting the saving of hundreds of lives and millions of dollars in property.

ADDITIONAL CLERK HIRE

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I, too, am a member of the Committee on House Administration, and I would like to say to the gentleman from Michigan that since there has not been any opportunity to do any labor baiting here lately, this bill that passed the House last Thursday gave him a chance for a little publicity. But the proof of the pudding is in the eating, and if the gentleman from Michigan feels that he is giving efficient enough service to his constituents and does not need the additional clerk, that he does not have to hire that clerk. We will wait with interest to see whether he does or not, and that will be sufficient proof of whether or not he is sincere in his remarks to the newspapers.

JUDICIARY AND JUDICIAL PROCEDURE

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 3762) to amend title 18, entitled "Crimes and Criminal Procedure," and title 28, entitled "Judiciary and Judicial Procedure of the United States Code," and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. BRYSON (interrupting the reading of the Senate amendments). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from South Carolina a few pertinent questions? Have these Senate amendments been considered in the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. BRYSON. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Have they been taken up with the ranking minority member of the committee?

Mr. BRYSON. I do not know.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. He has not taken this matter up with me, and I do not know anything about it, so unless the gentleman from South Carolina withdraws his request, I am going to object.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. In view of that statement I suggest that the gentleman from South Carolina withdraw his request and take the matter up with the minority. I had assumed that the regular procedure had been gone through.

Mr. BRYSON. May I say that there is not a single substantive change in the law. This is purely corrective.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, the minority leader of the House, asked if the gentleman from South Carolina had taken it up with the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McCORMACK. I suggest the gentleman withdraw it for the present.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request for the present.

DREW PEARSON'S ATTACK ON PRESIDENT TRUMAN

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, while the Committee on the Judiciary is working on changing the law, I certainly hope they will take up my bill to protect the American people from these slimemongers of the air who are continuously attacking the characters of people who cannot defend themselves.

President Truman does not expect me to act as his defender, but last night Drew Pearson's attack on him was about the most loathsome and contemptible thing I ever heard.

How much longer are the American people going to stand for this kind of misconduct?

I hope the Committee on the Judiciary wakes up, and while I am at it, let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] that the Committee on Un-American Activities might wake up also and do some investigating at this time.

But, by all means, let us change the law to protect the American people from these slanderers, these slimemongers of the air, if you please, that are using the radio for the purpose of vilifying innocent Americans who have no way to protect themselves from such attacks.

ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 179)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed, with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I am transmitting herewith the third report of the Economic Cooperation Administration created by the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948, Public Law 472 of the Eightieth Congress, approved April 3, 1948.

The report covers activities under the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948 (title I of Public Law 472) and the China Aid Act of 1948 (title IV of Public Law 472). There is also included a summary of the status of the United States Foreign Relief Program (Public Law 84, 80th Cong.) and the United States Foreign Aid Program (Public Law 389, 80th Cong.).

This report is for the quarter ended December 31, 1948.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 16, 1949.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1949

Mr. CANNON submitted a confeernce report and statement on the bill (H. R. 2632) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, and for other purposes.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

RESIDENT COMMISSIONER FROM THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2988) to provide for a Resident Commissioner from the Virgin Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that a rule has been requested on this bill. I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

AMENDING HAWAIIAN ORGANIC ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 173) to amend the Hawaiian Organic Act to prevent the loss of nationality, by reason of continuous residence for 5 years in a foreign state, of certain persons declared to be citizens of the United States under such act.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATION

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3974) to promote the rehabilitation of the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe of Indians and better utilization of the resources of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, and for other purposes.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

EXCEPTING CERTAIN PERSONS FROM PAYING FEES FOR CENSUS DATA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 142) excepting certain persons from the requirement of paying fees for certain census data.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 18 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress", approved June 18, 1929 (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 13, sec. 218), is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the first sentence the following: ": And provided further, That no charge for supplying a certificate shall be made and no payment of the cost of searching the records shall be required in any case in which the individual requesting the data is a member of the land or naval forces of the United States or has been honorably discharged therefrom, or has been retired therefrom, or relieved from active duty therein, under honorable circumstances, or in any case in which the data is requested by an individual as proof of his age for the purposes of his eligibility for old-age assistance or old-age and survivor insurance benefits."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS IN ALASKA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3196) to authorize appropriations for roads, trails, and other aids to transportation serving lands and facilities under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in Alaska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, 2 weeks ago when the Consent Calendar was called, I asked that this bill be passed over without prejudice because there was nothing in the bill to inform us what the cost to the Federal Government would be. I am informed by the author of the bill, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORRIS] that he will offer an amendment placing a limitation on the amount of money to be spent by the Federal Government, which answers the objection made by the committee of objectors on the Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That appropriations are hereby authorized, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for material, equipment, supervision, including engineering, and employment of labor in the survey, improvement, repair, construction, and maintenance of roads, trails, village streets, emergency landing strips, roadside shelters, dock facilities, and other aids to transportation, serving people, lands, and facilities under the supervision of the Bureau of Indian Affairs within the Territory of Alaska. Preference in employment shall be given to natives of the Territory.

SEC. 2. Said appropriations shall be available for administrative expenses in the central office and in the field; for acquisition of rights-of-way, including payment of damages where necessary; and for cooperative work with other Federal or local governmental agencies in the accomplishment of the foregoing purposes: Provided, That no expenditures shall be made hereunder on projects for which other Federal aid is available.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior may prescribe such regulations as he may deem appropriate to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORRIS: On page 1, line 3, after the word "appropriations", insert "not to exceed $500,000 per annum."

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma some questions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may oppose the amendment which has been offered, but there is no unanimous consent request pending at the present time to which objection can be made.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I am not objecting to the amendment. I am objecting to the whole bill.

The SPEAKER. The time for such objection has passed. The gentleman can rise in opposition to the amendment, or, for that matter, he may speak against the bill itself.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I understood that the Chair asked whether there was any objection to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is right. There was no objection to the consideration of the bill. The gentleman from Oklahoma has now offered an amendment, since the bill is pending in the House.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I had not heard the Speaker say that the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair said no such thing. The bill is simply before the House, because there was no objection to its consideration. There is an amendment now pending.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I take this time to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma the purpose of this bill. After all, we appropriate great sums of money for roads and trails and highways and everything else in Alaska. In fact, during the Eightieth Congress we appropriated, as I remember, something in the neighborhood of $20,000,000 for roads in Alaska. I am wondering why it is necessary to come in here with a bill at this time giving the Indian Bureau authority to spend money for roads and trails in Alaska.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. MORRIS. The gentleman is certainly not only within his rights, but he is very proper in asking such a question. I think I can best answer it by reading the report, which is very short, on that point:

H. R. 3196 authorizes appropriations for roads, trails, and other aids to transportation serving lands and facilities in Alaska under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Only those facilities for which there is an urgent practical need and which do not come under the programs of any other Federal or Territorial agency would be furnished.

This legislation is deemed necessary by the Department of the Interior because the provisions and benefits of the basic Indian legislation contained in the act of May 26, 1928 (45 Stat. 750, 25 U. S. C., sec. 318a), as amended, do not grant authority to expend road funds in Alaska. Indian roads in Alaska are not covered by the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1948.

In other words, as I understand it, there is no way to get to these schools and hospitals and other Indian facilities without this legislation. That is the report of the Bureau, and I take it that is correct. I have not been there myself, but I am assuming that is correct. I think we have a right to assume that it is correct. Of course, as the gentleman knows, the Appropriations Committee will determine the matter when it comes up as to how much to grant.

Mr. JENSEN. Of course, the gentleman realizes that the Federal Government owns about 98 percent of all the land in Alaska. If we are to give the Indian Bureau permission to go in and build roads and trails to all these schools, they could spend $100,000,000.

Mr. MORRIS. But if the gentleman followed the amendment, the amendment provides that they cannot spend more than $500,000 per annum. Your Committee on Appropriations is so organized that it can keep them from spending anything unless it wants them to.

Mr. JENSEN. Well, the gentleman has been here long enough to know that this great spending party in power starts out with bills like this with a little sum, just to get the camel's nose under the tent, and then in a few years they amount to millions upon millions.

Mr. MORRIS. I hope the gentleman will not object to this meritorious bill.

Mr. JENSEN. I am certainly going to ask that this bill go over without prejudice. As much as I respect the gentleman from Oklahoma, I think he has got something to learn yet about this matter. I hope that other Members of the House will also take it upon themselves to find out something about this bill.

So I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the bill go over without prejudice.

I ask unanimous consent that we return to the bill for further consideration.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment again be reported.

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORRIS].

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3111) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; and to repeal subdivision b of section 64, subdivision h of section 70, and section 118 thereof and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent therewith.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONRONEY). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

FUNCTIONS AND ACTIVITIES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 162) to provide basic authority for the performance of certain functions and activities of the Department of Commerce, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That appropriations are hereby authorized for the following activities of the Department of Commerce:

(a) furnishing to employees of the Department of Commerce and other Federal agencies (including Army, Navy, and Air Force personnel where Army, Navy, or Air Force facilities or supplies are not available and upon request of the service concerned), and their dependents, in Alaska and other points outside the continental United States, free emergency medical services by contract or otherwise and free emergency medical supplies, where in the judgment of the Secretary furnishing of such supplies and services is necessary;

(b) when deemed necessary by the Secretary of Commerce, purchasing, transporting, storing, and distributing food and other subsistence supplies for resale to employees of the Department of Commerce and other Federal agencies (including Army, Navy, and Air Force personnel where Army, Navy, or Air Force facilities or supplies are not available and upon request of the service concerned), and their dependents, in Alaska and other points outside the continental United States at a reasonable value as determined by the Secretary of Commerce, the proceeds from such resales to be credited to the appropriation from which the expenditure was made: Provided, That a report of such transactions shall be made to Congress annually showing the total expenditures made for such supplies and the total proceeds from such resales;

(c) when deemed necessary by the Secretary of Commerce, the establishment, maintenance, and operation of messing facilities, by contract or otherwise, in Alaska and other points outside the continental United States where suitable family facilities are not available, such service to be furnished to employees of the Department of Commerce and other Federal agencies (including Army, Navy, and Air Force personnel where Army, Navy, or Air Force facilities are not available and upon request of the service concerned), and their dependents, in accordance with regulations established by the Secertary of Commerce, and at a reasonable value determined in accordance therewith, the proceeds from the furnishing of such services to be credited to the appropriation from which the expenditures are made: Provided, That a report of such transactions shall be made to Congress annually showing the total expenditures made for such services and the total proceeds therefrom;

(d) reimbursement, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, of officers and employees in or under the Department of Commerce, for food, clothing, medicines, and other supplies furnished by them in emergencies for the temporary relief of distressed persons in remote localities;

(e) providing motion-picture equipment and film for recreation of crews of vessels of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, for recreation of employees in remote localities where such facilities are not available, and for training purposes;

(f) erecting, altering, repairing, equipping, furnishing, and maintaining, by contract or otherwise, such living and working quarters and facilities as may be necessary to carry out its authorized work at remote localities not on foreign soil where such living and working accommodations are not otherwise available.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPEALING CERTAIN OBSOLETE LAWS RELATING TO SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3576) to repeal certain obsolete laws and parts of laws relating to the sale of public lands.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following statutory provisions are hereby repealed:

Revised Statutes section 2354, 43 United States Code section 673;

Revised Statutes section 2355, 43 United States Code section 674;

Section 2 of the act of May 18, 1898 (30 Stat. 418), 43 United States Code section 675;

Revised Statutes section 2365, 43 United States Code section 676;

Revised Statutes section 2357, 43 United States Code section 678;

Section 3 of the act of June 15, 1880 (21 Stat. 238), 43 United States Code section 679;

Section 4 of the act of June 15, 1880 (21 Stat. 238), 43 United States Code section 680;

Revised Statutes section 2363, 43 United States Code section 691.

SEC. 2. Section 1 of the act of March 2, 1839 (25 Stat. 854, 43 U. S. C. sec. 700), is amended by deleting the following: ", except those in the State of Missouri."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSOLIDATION OF PARKER DAM POWER PROJECT AND DAVIS DAM PROJECT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2984) to consolidate the Parker Dam power project and the Davis Dam project.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

LEASES AND LICENSES IN RECLAMATION LANDS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1922) to amend section 10 of the Reclamation Project Act of 1939.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2770) to amend section 77 of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. McGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McGUIRE and Mr. CUNNINGHAM objected.

AMENDMENT OF RECLAMATION PROJECT ACT OF 1939

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1770) to amend the Reclamation Project Act of 1939, and for other purposes.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that a rule is being granted on this bill. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

THE FOREST SURVEY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2001) to amend section 9 of the act of May 22, 1928, as amended, authorizing and directing a national survey of forest resources.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. D'EWART] has just explained to me the bill H. R. 1922, which I asked go over without prejudice. I ask that we return to consider it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair suggests that the gentleman wait until the conclusion of the call of the calendar when the gentleman may submit his request.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL CROP INSURANCE ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3825) to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, I understand that a rule has just been granted on this bill, and that it will come up for consideration under the rule. There may be amendments to be offered. I therefore ask that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

SURPLUS AIRPORT PROPERTY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3851) to amend Public Law 289, Eightieth Congress, with respect to surplus airport property and to provide for the transfer of compliance functions with relation to such property.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13 (g) (2) (A) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended, is further amended by striking out the following: "Provided, That no structures disposed of hereunder shall be used as an industrial plant, factory, or similar facility within the meaning of section 23 of this act, unless the public agency receiving title to such structures shall pay to the United States such sum as the Administrator shall determine to be a fair consideration for the removal of the restriction imposed by this proviso."

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the restriction against use of structures for industrial purposes, as contained in any deed or instrument of disposal pursuant to section 13 (g) (2) (A) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944 (58 Stat. 765), as amended by the act of July 30, 1947 (61 Stat. 678), shall, from and after the effective date of this act, be deemed extinguished and of no force and effect. The Administrator of Civil Aeronautics is hereby authorized to issue such instruments of release or correction, as may be necessary to effect removal of record of such restriction from any of such deeds or other instruments of disposal, without monetary consideration to the United States.

SEC. 3. The Administrator of Civil Aeronautics shall have the sole responsibility for determining and enforcing compliance with the terms, conditions, reservations, and restrictions contained in any instrument of disposal by which surplus property is or has been transferred to States and their political subdivisions, municipalities, and tax-supported institutions pursuant to the Surplus Property Act of 1944, for use in the development, improvement, operation, or maintenance of a public airport or to provide sources of revenue from nonaviation businesses at a public airport (including property transferred for any such use pursuant to such act prior to July 30, 1947), and the Administrator is authorized to reform, correct, or amend any instrument of disposal by which such property was conveyed by the issuance of a corrective, reformative, or amendatory instrument where such action is determined by him to be necessary to correct such instrument or to conform the transfer to the requirements of applicable law.

SEC. 4. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics is further authorized, without monetary consideration to the United States, to grant releases from any of the terms, conditions, reservations, and restrictions contained in, and to convey, quitclaim, or release any right or interest reserved to the United States by, any such instrument of disposal, if he determines that the property transferred by such instrument no longer serves the purpose for which it was transferred, or that such release, conveyance, or quitclaim will not prevent accomplishment of the purpose for which the property was transferred and is necessary to protect or advance the interests of the United States in civil aviation: Provided, That any such release, conveyance, or quitclaim may be granted on, or made subject to, such terms and conditions as the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics deems necessary to protect or advance the interest of the United States in civil aviation.

SEC. 5. Paragraph 4 of subsection 13 (g) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended, is repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING THE WAR CLAIMS ACT OF 1948

The Clerk called the bill (S. 326) to amend the War Claims Act of 1948.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the War Claims Act of 1948 (62 Stat. 1240) is amended in the following respects:

1. The last sentence of section 2 (c) is amended to read as follows: "The limit of time within which claims may be filed with the Commission shall in no event be later than March 1, 1951."

2. Section 8 (a) is amended by striking out the words "March 31, 1949" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 15, 1950."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, strike out "January 15" and insert "March 31."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CERTIFICATION OF CERTAIN DRUGS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3151) to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of June 25, 1938, as amended, by providing for the certification of batches of drugs composed wholly or partly of any kind of aureomycin, chloramphenicol, and bacitracin, or any derivative thereof.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 502 (l) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of June 25, 1938, as amended (U. S. C., 1946 ed., title 21, ch. 9), is amended by deleting the word "or" preceding the word "streptomycin" and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and by inserting after the word "streptomycin" the following: ", aureomycin, chloramphenicol, or bacitracin,".

SEC. 2. (a) The heading of section 507 of such act, as amended, is amended by deleting the word "or" preceding the word "streptomycin" and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and by adding at the end of such heading the following: ", aureomycin, chloramphenicol, or bacitracin".

(b) The first sentence of subsection (a) of such section 507 is amended by deleting the word "or" preceding the word "streptomycin" and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and by inserting after the word "streptomycin" the following: ", aureomycin, chloramphenicol, or bacitracin,".

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REGULATING THE HOURS OF DUTY AND PAY ON CERTAIN LIGHTSHIPS AND COAST GUARD VESSELS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4471) to regulate the hours of duty and the pay of civilian keepers of lighthouses and civilians employed on lightships and other vessels of the Coast Guard.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the civil service classification laws and titles II and III of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945 shall not apply to civilian keepers of lighthouses and to civilians employed on lightships and other vessels of the Coast Guard.

SEC. 2. Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Coast Guard may prescribe the hours of duty and the pay of civilian keepers of lighthouses and civilians employed on lightships and other vessels of the Coast Guard, but such personnel may be called upon for duty in emergency circumstances or otherwise at any time or all times. The existing system governing the pay of such employees may be continued or changed except that overtime compensation, night differential, and extra pay for duty on holidays shall not be paid to such employees. In lieu thereof additional annual compensation may be authorized, which may be prescribed either as a fixed differential or as a percentage of the basic compensation otherwise applicable to such employees. In no case shall basic compensation exceed $3,750 per annum, except that nothing contained in this act shall operate to decrease the basic compensation of any person employed by the Coast Guard on the date of enactment of this act, and in no case shall additions thereto exceed 25 percent of such basic compensation. Provision may be made for compensatory absence from duty when conditions of employment result in confinement because of isolation or in long periods of continuous duty; and provisions may likewise be made for extra allowance for service outside of the continental limits of the United States.

SEC. 3. The additional compensation authorized herein shall be included in any computation of compensation for purposes of the Lighthouse Service Retirement Act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SCHOOLS OPERATED BY THE BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3881) to provide for the use of the State course of study in schools operated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs upon petition therefor.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after July 1, 1950, the course of study taught in any school operated and maintained by the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall, upon petition by a majority of the parents of children enrolled therein, conform to the course prescribed by the department of public instruction for the public schools of the State in which said Indian school is located.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That on and after July 1, 1950, the course of study taught in any school operated and maintained by the Bureau of Indian Affairs on any Indian reservation in the State of South Dakota shall, upon a majority decision of the parents of children enrolled therein voting at a meeting called for that purpose by the superintendent of the reservation, meet the minimum education requirements prescribed by the department of public instruction for the public schools of that State."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the use of the State course of study in schools operated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs on Indian reservation in South Dakota when requested by a majority vote of the parents of the students enrolled therein."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INCREASES OF COMPENSATION FOR CERTAIN VETERANS WITH SERVICE-CONNECTED DISABILITIES WHO HAVE DEPENDENTS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2108) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide increases of compensation for certain veterans with service-connected disabilities who have dependents" to define the term "wife" to include "dependent husband."

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the act of July 2, 1948 (Public Law 877, 80th Cong.; 62 Stat. 805), is amended by striking out the period at the end and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and adding the following proviso: "Provided, That the term 'wife' as used in this act shall include 'dependent husband.'"

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on the first day of the second calendar month next succeeding its enactment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE ADMINISTRATOR OF VETERANS' AFFAIRS TO RECONVEY TO THE HELENA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE CERTAIN LAND

The Clerk called the bill (S. 460) to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to reconvey to the Helena Chamber of Commerce certain described parcels of land situated in the city of Helena, Mont.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized to reconvey by quitclaim deed to the Helena Chamber of Commerce, a corporation, two parcels of land in Helena, Mont., commonly designated as lot numbered 10 and the south 55 feet of lot numbered 9 of the Henry Thompson placer mining claim in Lewis and Clark County, Mont., which parcels were conveyed to the United States of America by the Helena Chamber of Commerce by deed dated February 7, 1947, and recorded among the land records of said county, in Book 140 of Deeds at page 63.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLARIFYING PROVISIONS OF SECTION 602 (U) OF THE NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE ACT OF 1940, AS AMENDED

The Clerk called the bill (S. 461) to clarify the provisions of section 602 (u) of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 602 (u) of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, as added by section 9 of the act of August 1, 1946 (60 Stat. 786; 38 U. S. C. 802 (u)), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(u) With respect to insurance maturing on or subsequent to the date of enactment of the Insurance Act of 1946, in any case in which the beneficiary is entitled to a lump-sum settlement but elects some other mode of settlement and dies before receiving all the benefits due and payable under such mode of settlement, the present value of the remaining unpaid amount shall be payable to the estate of the beneficiary; and in any case in which no beneficiary is designated by the insured, or the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured, or a designated beneficiary not entitled to a lump-sum settlement survives the insured, and dies before receiving all the benefits due and payable, the commuted value of the remaining unpaid insurance (whether accrued or not) shall be paid in one sum to the estate of the insured: Provided, That in no event shall there be any payment to the estate of the insured or of the beneficiary of any sums unless it is shown that any sums paid will not escheat."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EMPLOYEES OF THE VETERANS' CANTEEN SERVICE

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1185) to provide that all employees of the Veterans' Canteen Service shall be paid from funds of the Service, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsections (d) and (e) of section 2 of the act of August 7, 1946 (60 Stat. 888, 38 U. S. C. 13a), are amended to read as follows:

"(d) To transfer to the Service without charge, rental, or reimbursement such necessary equipment as may not be needed for other purposes, and furnish the Service such services and utilities, including light, water, and heat, as may be available and necessary for its use: Provided, That reasonable charges to be determined by the Administrator, shall be paid annually by the Service for the utilities so furnished.

"(e) To employ such persons as are necessary for the establishment, maintenance, and operation of the Service, and to pay the salaries, wages, and expenses of all such employees from the funds of the Service. Such personnel shall be excluded from the determinations and reports required by section 607 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended (5 U. S. C. 947), with respect to personnel ceilings. Personnel necessary for the transaction of the business of the Service at canteens, warehouses, and storage depots shall be appointed, compensated from funds of the Service, and removed by the Administrator without regard to civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended: Provided, That such employees shall be subject to the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944, the Civil Service Retirement Acts, and laws administered by the Bureau of Employees Compensation applicable to civilian employees of the United States."

SEC. 2. Section 2 of the act of August 7, 1946 (60 Stat. 888, 38 U. S. C. 13a), is amended by adding a new subsection (k) at the end thereof as follows:

"(k) To authorize the use of funds of the Service when available, subject to such regulations as he may deem appropriate, and without regard to the provisions of sections 3639 and 3651, Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (31 U. S. C. 521, 543), for the purpose of cashing checks, money orders, and similar instruments in nominal amounts for the payment of money presented by veterans hospitalized or domiciled at hospitals and homes of the Veterans' Administration, and by other persons authorized by section 3 of this act to make purchases at canteens. Such checks, money orders, and other similar instruments may be cashed outright or may be accepted, subject to strict administrative controls, in payment for merchandise or services, and the difference between the amount of the purchase and the amount of the tendered instrument refunded in cash."

SEC. 3. Section 4 of the act of August 7, 1946 (60 Stat. 869, 38 U. S. C. 13c), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. To finance the establishment, maintenance, and operation of the Service there is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time such amounts as are necessary to provide for (a) the acquisition of necessary furniture, furnishings, fixtures, and equipment for the establishment, maintenance, and operation of canteens, warehouses, and storage depots; (b) stocks of merchandise and supplies for canteens and reserve stocks of same in warehouses and storage depots; (c) salaries, wages, and expenses of all employees; (d) administrative and operation expenses and premiums on fidelity bonds of employees; and (e) adequate working capital for each canteen and for the Service as a whole. Amounts heretofore or hereafter appropriated under the authority contained in this act, as amended, and all income from canteen operations become and will be administered as a revolving fund to effectuate the provisions of this act, as amended."

SEC. 4. The provisions of this act shall take effect on the 1st day of July 1949.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 86) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act so as to make such act applicable to the officers and employees of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (a) of section 3 of the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 693 (a)), is amended by inserting before the colon preceding the first proviso thereof a comma and the following: "and to all officers and employees of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf at the election of such officers and employees as herein provided."

SEC. 2. Subsection (a) of section 3 of such act is further amended by adding at the end thereof two new sentences as follows: "In the case of any officer or employee in the service of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf on the effective date of this amendment, notice of desire to come within the purview of the act must be given to the disbursing officer by whom his salary is paid within 6 months from the date of enactment of this act. In the case of any officer or employee of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf who enters the service of such institution after the date of enactment of this amendment, such notice of desire to come within the purview of this act must be given within 6 months after the date of entrance into such service."

SEC. 3. The first paragraph of section 5 of such act is amended by inserting after "or the legislative branch of the Government" a comma and "and periods of service as an officer or employee of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf."

SEC. 4. Any service rendered prior to the effective date of this act as an officer or employee of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf shall be considered creditable service for the purposes of section 9 of such act.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, lines 8 and 9, strike out the following: "at the election of such officers and employees as herein provided."

Strike out section 2 in its entirety.

On page 2, line 13, strike out "SEC 3." and insert "SEC. 2.", and on page 2, line 18, strike out "SEC. 4." and insert "SEC. 3."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OAK CREEK CANYON, ARIZ.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2872) to protect scenic values along Oak Creek Canyon and certain tributaries thereof within the Coconino National Forest, Ariz.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 812) to protect scenic values along Oak Creek Canyon and certain tributaries thereof within the Coconino National Forest, Ariz., be substituted for the House bill.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter mining locations made under the mining laws of the United States within the following-described lands within the Coconino National Forest, Coconino County, Ariz.: Sections 14, 15, 19, 20, 22, 27, 28, 29, 34, of township 19 north, range 6 east; and sections 4, 5, 8, 9, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 27, 28, 33, and 34 of township 18 north, range 6 east; and sections 1, 2, 3, 4, southeast quarter of section 8, sections 9, 10, 11, and 12 of township 17 north, range 6 east; Gila and Salt River base and meridian, shall confer on the locator the right to occupy and use so much of the surface of the land covered by the location as may be reasonably necessary to carry on prospecting, mining, and beneficiation of ores including the taking of mineral deposits and timber required by or in the mining and ore-reducing operations, and no permit shall be required or charge made for such use or occupancy: Provided, however, That the cutting and removal of timber, except where clearing is necessary in connection with mining operations or to provide space for buildings or structures used in connection with mining operations, shall be conducted in accordance with the rules for timber cutting on adjoining national-forest land, and no use of the surface of the claim or the resources therefrom not reasonably required for carrying on mining and prospecting shall be allowed except under the national-forest rules and regulations, nor shall the locator prevent or obstruct other occupancy of the surface or use of surface resources under authority of national-forest regulations, or permits issued thereunder, if such occupancy or use is not in conflict with mineral development.

SEC. 2. That hereafter all patents issued under the United States mining laws affecting lands within the above-described area shall convey title to the mineral deposits within the claim, together with the right to cut and remove so much of the mature timber therefrom as may be needed in extracting and removing and beneficiation of the mineral deposits, if the timber is cut under sound principles of forest management as defined by the national-forest rules and regulations, but each patent shall reserve to the United States all title in or to the surface of the lands and products thereof, and no use of the surface of the claim or the resources therefrom not reasonably required for carrying on mining or prospecting shall be allowed except under the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture.

SEC. 3. That valid mining claims within the said lands, existing on the date of the enactment of this act, and thereafter maintained in compliance with the law under which they were initiated and the laws of the State of Arizona, may be perfected under this act, or under the laws under which they were initiated, as the claimant may desire.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION, WASH.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2432) restoring to tribal ownership certain lands upon the Colville Indian Reservation, Wash., and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the undisposed-of lands of the Colville Indian Reservation, Wash., dealt with by the act of March 22, 1906 (43 Stat. 80), are hereby restored to tribal ownership to be held in trust by the United States to the same extent as all other tribal lands on the existing reservation, subject to any existing valid rights.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of effecting land consolidations between the Colville Indians and non-Indians in Ferry and Okanagon Counties, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to sell or otherwise dispose of tribal lands, and to acquire in lieu thereof through purchase, exchange, or relinquishment, lands, or any interest in lands, water rights, or surface rights. The acquisition of lands pursuant to this act shall be limited to lands within the boundary of the reservation. Exchanges of lands, including improvements thereon, shall be made on the basis of approximate equal value. This section shall apply equally to trust or other restricted allotments, whether the allottee be living or deceased. In carrying out the provisions of this act if non-Indian lands are involved the proper county officials shall give their written consent before such non-Indian land is acquired for the tribe or an individual Indian.

SEC. 3. Title to lands or any interest therein acquired pursuant to this act shall be taken in the name of the United States of America in trust for the tribe or individual Indian and shall be nontaxable as other tribal and allotted trust Indian lands of the Colville Reservation.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 1, following the word "authorized", insert the words "with the consent of the tribal council as evidenced by a resolution adopted in accordance with the constitution and bylaws of the tribe."

Page 2, line 2, strike out all of line 2 and the words "lieu thereof" on line 3; insert in lieu thereof the words "sell tribal lands in connection with the acquisition of lieu lands, and to acquire."

Page 2, line 12, strike out the words "proper county officials shall give their written", insert in lieu thereof the words "board of county commissioners of counties in which land is located shall by proper resolution."

Page 2, line 14, add the following sentence: "No lands or interests in lands owned by the Confederated Tribes of the Colville Reservation shall be subject to disposition hereafter without the consent of the duly authorized governing body of the tribes, and no lands or interests in lands shall be acquired for the tribes without the consent of the said governing body."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMPACT RELATING TO WATERS OF CANADIAN RIVER

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3482) granting the consent of the Congress to the negotiation of a compact relating to the waters of the Canadian River by the States of Oklahoma, Texas, and New Mexico.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the Congress is hereby given to the States of Oklahoma, Texas, and New Mexico to negotiate and enter into a compact not later than June 30, 1953, providing for an equitable apportionment among the said States of the waters of the Canadian River and its tributaries, upon the condition that one suitable person, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States from the Department of the Interior, shall participate in said negotiations as the representative of the United States and shall make report to the Congress of the proceedings and of any compact entered into. Said compact shall not be binding or obligatory upon any of the parties thereto unless and until the same shall have been ratified by the legislature of each of the States aforesaid and approved by the Congress of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSENT OF UNITED STATES TO ARKANSAS RIVER COMPACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4151) to grant the consent of the United States to the Arkansas River compact.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the compact, signed (after negotiations in which a representative of the United States, duly appointed by the President, participated, and upon which he has reported to the Congress) by the Commissioners for the States of Colorado and Kansas on December 14, 1948, at Denver, Colo., and thereafter ratified by the legislatures of each of the States aforesaid, which said compact reads as follows:

"ARKANSAS RIVER COMPACT

"The State of Colorado and the State of Kansas, parties signatory to this compact (hereinafter referred to as 'Colorado' and 'Kansas,' respectively, or individually as a 'State,' or collectively as the 'States') having resolved to conclude a compact with respect to the waters of the Arkansas River, and being moved by considerations of interstate comity, having appointed commissioners as follows: 'Henry C. Vidal, Gail L. Ireland, and Harry B. Mendenhall, for Colorado; and George S. Knapp, Edward F. Arn, William E. Leavitt, and Roland H. Tate, for Kansas'; and the consent of the Congress of the United States to negotiate and enter into an interstate compact not later than January 1, 1950, having been granted by Public Law 34, Seventy-ninth Congress, first session, and pursuant thereto the President having designated Hans Kramer as the representative of the United States, the said commissioners for Colorado and Kansas, after negotiations participated in by the representative of the United States, have agreed as follows:

"ARTICLE I

"The major purposes of this compact are to:

"A. Settle existing disputes and remove causes of future controversy between the States of Colorado and Kansas, and between citizens of one and citizens of the other State, concerning the waters of the Arkansas River and their control, conservation and utilization for irrigation and other beneficial purposes.

"B. Equitably divide and apportion between the States of Colorado and Kansas the waters of the Arkansas River and their utilization as well as the benefits arising from the construction, operation, and maintenance by the United States of John Martin Reservoir project for water conservation purposes.

"ARTICLE II

"The provisions of this compact are based on (1) the physical and other conditions peculiar to the Arkansas River and its natural drainage basin, and the nature and location of irrigation and other developments and facilities in connection therewith; (2) the opinion of the United States Supreme Court entered December 6, 1943, in the case of Colorado v. Kansas (320 U. S. 383) concerning the relative rights of the respective States in and to the use of waters of the Arkansas River; and (3) the experience derived under various interim executive agreements between the two States apportioning the waters released from the John Martin Reservoir as operated by the Corps of Engineers.

"ARTICLE III

"As used in this compact:

"A. The word 'Stateline' means the geographical boundary line between Colorado and Kansas.

"B. The term 'waters of the Arkansas River' means the waters originating in the natural drainage basin of the Arkansas River, including its tributaries, upstream from the Stateline, and excluding waters brought into the Arkansas River Basin from other river basins.

"C. The term 'Stateline flow' means the flow of waters of the Arkansas River as determined by gaging stations located at or near the Stateline. The flow as determined by such stations, whether located in Colorado or Kansas, shall be deemed to be the actual Stateline flow.

"D. 'John Martin Reservoir Project' is the official name of the facility formerly known as Caddoa Reservoir Project, authorized by the Flood Control Act of 1936, as amended, for construction, operation, and maintenance by the War Department, Corps of Engineers, later designated as the Corps of Engineers, Department of the Army, and herein referred to as the 'Corps of Engineers.' 'John Martin Reservoir' is the water storage space created by 'John Martin Dam.'

"E. The 'flood control storage' is that portion of the total storage space in John Martin Reservoir allocated to flood-control purposes.

"F. The 'conservation pool' is that portion of the total storage space in John Martin Reservoir lying below the flood-control storage.

"G. The 'ditches of Colorado Water District 67' are those ditches and canals which divert water from the Arkansas River or its tributaries downstream from John Martin Dam for irrigation use in Colorado.

"H. The term 'river flow' means the sum of the flows of the Arkansas and the Purgatoire Rivers into John Martin Reservoir as determined by gaging stations appropriately located above said reservoir.

"I. The term 'the Administration' means the Arkansas River Compact Administration established under article VIII.

"ARTICLE IV

"Both States recognize that:

"A. This compact deals only with the waters of the Arkansas River as defined in article III.

"B. This compact is not concerned with the rights, if any, of the State of New Mexico or its citizens in and to the use in New Mexico of waters of Trinchera Creek or other tributaries of the Purgatoire River, a tributary of the Arkansas River.

"C. (1) John Martin Dam will be operated by the Corps of Engineers to store and release the waters of the Arkansas River in and from John Martin Reservoir for its authorized purposes.

"(2) The bottom of the flood-control storage is presently fixed by the Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army, at elevation 3,851 feet above mean sea level. The flood-control storage will be operated for flood-control purposes and to those ends will impound or regulate the streamflow volumes that are in excess of the then available storage capacity of the conservation pool. Releases from the flood-control storage may be made at times and rates determined by the Corps of Engineers to be necessary or advisable without regard to ditch diversion capacities or requirements in either or both States.

"(3) The conservation pool will be operated for the benefit of water users in Colorado and Kansas, both upstream and downstream from John Martin Dam, as provided in this compact. The maintenance of John Martin Dam and appurtenant works may at times require the Corps of Engineers to release waters then impounded in the conservation pool or to prohibit the storage of water therein until such maintenance work is completed. Flood-control operation may also involve temporary utilization of conservation storage.

"D. This compact is not intended to impede or prevent future beneficial development of the Arkansas River Basin in Colorado and Kansas by Federal or State agencies, by private enterprise, or by combinations thereof, which may involve construction of dams, reservoirs, and other works for the purposes of water utilization and control, as well as the improved or prolonged functioning of existing works. Provided, that the waters of the Arkansas River, as defined in article III, shall not be materially depleted in usable quantity or availability for use to the water users in Colorado and Kansas under this compact by such future development or construction.

"ARTICLE V

"Colorado and Kansas hereby agree upon the following basis of apportionment of the waters of the Arkansas River:

"A. Winter storage in John Martin Reservoir shall commence on November 1 of each year and continue to and include the next succeeding March 31. During said period all water entering said reservoir up to the limit of the then available conservation capacity shall be stored: Provided, that Colorado may demand releases of water equivalent to the river flow, but such releases shall not exceed 100 c. f. s. (cubic feet per second) and water so released shall be used without avoidable waste.

"B. Summer storage in John Martin Reservoir shall commence on April 1 of each year and continue to and include the next succeeding October 31. During said period, except when Colorado water users are operating under decreed priorities as provided in paragraphs F and G of this article, all water entering said reservoir up to the limit of the then available conservation capacity shall be stored: Provided, that Colorado may demand releases of water equivalent to the river flow up to 500 c. f. s., and Kansas may demand releases of water equivalent to that portion of the river flow between 500 c. f. s. and 750 c. f. s., irrespective of releases demanded by Colorado.

"C. Releases of water stored pursuant to the provisions of paragraphs A and B of this article shall be made upon demands by Colorado and Kansas concurrently or separately at any time during the summer-storage period. Unless increases to meet extraordinary conditions are authorized by the Administration, separate releases of stored water to Colorado shall not exceed 750 c. f. s., separate releases of stored water to Kansas shall not exceed 500 c. f. s., and concurrent releases of stored water shall not exceed a total of 1,250 c. f. s.: Provided, that when water stored in the conservation pool is reduced to a quantity less than 20,000 acre-feet, separate releases of stored water to Colorado shall not exceed 600 c. f. s., separate releases of stored water to Kansas shall not exceed 400 c. f. s., and concurrent releases of stored water shall not exceed 1,000 c. f. s.

"D. Releases authorized by paragraphs A, B and C of this article, except when all Colorado water users are operating under decreed priorities as provided in paragraphs F and G of this article, shall not impose any call on Colorado water users that divert waters of the Arkansas River upstream from John Martin Dam.

"E. (1) Releases of stored water and releases of river flow may be made simultaneously upon the demands of either or both States.

"(2) Water released upon concurrent or separate demands shall be applied promptly to beneficial use unless storage thereof downstream is authorized by the Administration.

"(3) Releases of river flow and of stored water to Colorado shall be measured by gaging stations located at or near John Martin Dam and the releases to which Kansas is entitled shall be satisfied by an equivalent in Stateline flow.

"(4) When water is released from John Martin Reservoir appropriate allowances as determined by the Administration shall be made for the intervals of time required for such water to arrive at the points of diversion in Colorado and at the Stateline.

"(5) There shall be no allowance or accumulation of credits or debits for or against either State.

"(6) Storage, releases from storage and releases of river flow authorized in this article shall be accomplished pursuant to procedures prescribed by the Administration under the provisions of article VIII.

"F. In the event the Administration finds that within a period of 14 days the water in the conservation pool will be or is liable to be exhausted, the Administration shall forthwith notify the State engineer of Colorado, or his duly authorized representative, that commencing upon a day certain within said 14-day period, unless a change of conditions justifies cancellation or modification of such notice, Colorado shall administer the decreed rights of water users in Colorado Water District 67 as against each other and as against all rights now or hereafter decreed to water users diverting upstream from John Martin Dam on the basis of relative priorities in the same manner in which their respective priority rights were administered by Colorado before John Martin Reservoir began to operate and as though John Martin Dam had not been constructed. Such priority administration by Colorado shall be continued until the Administration finds that water is again available in the conservation pool for release as provided in this compact, and timely notice of such finding shall be given by the Administration to the State engineer of Colorado or his duly authorized representative: Provided, that except as controlled by the operation of the preceding provisions of this paragraph and other applicable provisions of this compact, when there is water in the conservation pool the water users upstream from John Martin Reservoir shall not be affected by the decrees to the ditches in Colorado Water District 67. Except when administration in Colorado is on a priority basis the water diversions in Colorado Water District 67 shall be administered by Colorado in accordance with distribution agreements made from time to time between the water users in such district and filed with the Administration and with the State engineer of Colorado or, in the absence of such agreement, upon the basis of the respective priority decrees, as against each other, in said district.

"G. During periods when Colorado reverts to administration of decreed priorities, Kansas shall not be entitled to any portion of the river flow entering John Martin Reservoir. Waters of the Arkansas River originating in Colorado which may flow across the Stateline during each period are hereby apportioned to Kansas.

"H. If the usable quantity and availability for use of the waters of the Arkansas River to water users in Colorado Water District 67 and Kansas will be thereby materially depleted or adversely affected, (1) priority rights now decreed to the ditches of Colorado Water District 67 shall not hereafter be transferred to other water districts in Colorado or to points of diversion or places of use upstream from John Martin Dam; and (2) the ditch diversion rights from the Arkansas River in Colorado Water District 67 and of Kansas ditches between the Stateline and Garden City shall not hereafter be increased beyond the total present rights of said ditches, without the Administration, in either case (1) or (2), making findings of fact that no such depletion or adverse effect will result from such proposed transfer or increase. Notice of legal proceedings for any such proposed transfer or increase shall be given to the Administration in the manner and within the time provided by the laws of Colorado or Kansas in such cases.

"ARTICLE VI

"A. (1) Nothing in this compact shall be construed as impairing the jurisdiction of Kansas over the waters of the Arkansas River that originate in Kansas and over the waters that flow from Colorado across the Stateline into Kansas.

"(2) Except as otherwise provided, nothing in this compact shall be construed as supplanting the administration by Colorado of the rights of appropriators of waters of the Arkansas River in said State as decreed to said appropriators by the courts of Colorado, nor as interfering with the distribution among said appropriators by Colorado, nor as curtailing the diversion and use for irrigation and other beneficial purposes in Colorado of the waters of the Arkansas River.

"B. Inasmuch as the Frontier Canal diverts waters of the Arkansas River in Colorado west of the Stateline for irrigation uses in Kansas only, Colorado concedes to Kansas and Kansas hereby assumes exclusive administrative control over the operation of the Frontier Canal and its headworks for such purposes, to the same extent as though said works were located entirely within the State of Kansas. Water carried across the Stateline in the Frontier Canal or any other similarly situated canal shall be considered to be part of the Stateline flow.

"ARTICLE VII

"A. Each State shall be subject to the terms of this compact. Where the name of the State or the term 'State' is used in this compact these shall be construed to include any person or entity of any nature whatsoever using, claiming or in any manner asserting any right to the use of the waters of the Arkansas River under the authority of that State.

"B. This compact establishes no general principle or precedent with respect to any other interstate stream.

"C. Wherever any State or Federal official or agency is referred to in this compact such reference shall apply to the comparable official or agency succeeding to their duties and functions.

"ARTICLE VIII

"A. To administer the provisions of this compact there is hereby created an interstate agency to be known as the Arkansas River Compact Administration herein designated as 'the Administration'.

"B. The Administration shall have power to:

"(1) Adopt, amend and revoke bylaws, rules and regulations consistent with the provisions of this compact;

"(2) Prescribe procedures for the administration of this compact: Provided, that where such procedures involve the operation of John Martin Reservoir project they shall be subject to the approval of the district engineer in charge of said project;

"(3) Perform all functions required to implement this compact and to do all things necessary, proper or convenient in the performance of its duties.

"C. The membership of the Administration shall consist of three representatives from each State who shall be appointed by the respective Governors for a term not to exceed 4 years. One Colorado representative shall be a resident of and water right owner in Water District 14 or 17, one Colorado representative shall be a resident of and water right owner in Water District 67, and one Colorado representative shall be the Director of the Colorado Water Conservation Board. Two Kansas representatives shall be residents of and water right owners in the counties of Finney, Kearny or Hamilton, and one Kansas representative shall be the chief State official charged with the administration of water rights in Kansas. The President of the United States is hereby requested to designate a representative of the United States, and if a representative is so designated he shall be an ex officio member and act as chairman of the Administration without vote.

"D. The State representatives shall be appointed by the respective Governors within thirty days after the effective date of this compact. The Administration shall meet and organize within sixty days after such effective date. A quorum for any meeting shall consist of four members of the Administration: Provided, that at least two members are present from each State. Each State shall have but one vote in the Administration and every decision, authorization or other action shall require unanimous vote. In case of a divided vote on any matter within the purview of the Administration, the Administration may, by subsequent unanimous vote, refer the matter for arbitration to the Representative of the United States or other arbitrator or arbitrators, in which event the decision made by such arbitrator or arbitrators shall be binding upon the Administration.

"E. (1) The salaries, if any, and the personal expenses of each member shall be paid by the government which he represents. All other expenses incident to the administration of this compact which are not paid by the United States shall be borne by the States on the basis of 60 percent by Colorado and 40 percent by Kansas.

"(2) In each even numbered year the Administration shall adopt and transmit to the Governor of each State its budget covering anticipated expenses for the following biennium and the amount thereof payable by each State. Each State shall appropriate and pay the amount due by it to the Administration.

"(3) The Administration shall keep accurate accounts of all receipts and disbursements and shall include a statement thereof, together with a certificate of audit by a certified public accountant, in its annual report. Each State shall have the right to make an examination and audit of the accounts of the Administration at any time.

"F. Each State shall provide such available facilities, equipment and other assistance as the Administration may need to carry out its duties. To supplement such available assistance the Administration may employ engineering, legal, clerical and other aid as in its judgment may be necessary for the performance of its functions. Such employees shall be paid by and be responsible to the Administration, and shall not be considered to be employees of either State.

"G. (1) The Administration shall cooperate with the chief official of each State charged with the administration of water rights and with Federal agencies in the systematic determination and correlation of the facts as to the flow and diversion of the waters of the Arkansas River and as to the operation and siltation of John Martin Reservoir and other related structures. The Administration shall cooperate in the procurement, interchange, compilation and publication of all factual data bearing upon the administration of this compact without, in general, duplicating measurements, observations or publications made by State or Federal agencies. State officials shall furnish pertinent factual data to the Administration upon its request. The Administration shall, with the collaboration of the appropriate Federal and State agencies, determine as may be necessary from time to time, the location of gaging stations required for the proper administration of this compact and shall designate the official records of such stations for its official use.

"(2) The Director, United States Geological Survey, the Commissioner of Reclamation and the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, are hereby requested to collaborate with the Administration and with appropriate State officials in the systematic determination and correlation of data referred to in paragraph G (1) of this article and in execution of other duties of such officials which may be necessary for the proper administration of this compact.

"(3) If deemed necessary for the administration of this compact, the Administration may require the installation and maintenance, at the expense of water users, of measuring devices of approved type in any ditch or group of ditches diverting water from the Arkansas River in Colorado or Kansas. The chief official of each State charged with the administration of water rights shall supervise the execution of the Administration's requirements for such installations.

"H. Violation of any of the provisions of this compact or other actions prejudicial thereto which come to the attention of the Administration shall be promptly investigated by it. When deemed advisable as the result of such investigation, the Administration may report its findings and recommendations to the State official who is charged with the administration of water rights for appropriate action, it being the intent of this compact that enforcement of its terms shall be accomplished in general through the State agencies and officials charged with the administration of water rights.

"I. Findings of fact made by the Administration shall not be conclusive in any court or before any agency or tribunal but shall constitute prima facie evidence of the facts found.

"J. The Administration shall report annually to the Governor of the States and to the President of the United States as to matters within its purview.

"ARTICLE IX

"A. This compact shall become effective when ratified by the legislature of each State and when consented to by the Congress of the United States by legislation providing substantially, among other things, as follows:

"'Nothing contained in this act or in the compact herein consented to shall be construed as impairing or affecting the sovereignty of the United States or any of its rights or jurisdiction in and over the area or waters which are the subject of such compact: Provided, that the Chief of Engineers is hereby authorized to operate the conservation features of the John Martin Reservoir Project in a manner conforming to such compact with such exceptions as he and the Administration created pursuant to the compact may jointly approve.'

"B. This compact shall remain in effect until modified or terminated by unanimous action of the States and in the event of modification or termination all rights then established or recognized by this compact shall continue unimpaired.

"In witness whereof, the Commissioners have signed this compact in triplicate original, one of which shall be forwarded to the Secretary of State of the United States of America and one of which shall be forwarded to the Governor of each signatory State.

"Done in the city and county of Denver, in the State of Colorado, on the 14th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1948.

SETTLERS IN ALASKA TO RECORD NOTICE OF THEIR CLAIMS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4289) to require settlers on public lands in Alaska to record notice of their settlement claims in the land office for the district in which the lands are situated, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the part of the act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat. 1029, 48 U. S. C., sec. 371), which reads: "that the record of said location shall, within 90 days from the date of settlement, be filed for record in the recording district in which the land is situated. Said record shall contain the name of the settler, the date of the settlement, and such a description of the land settled upon, by reference to some natural object or permanent monument, as will identify the same; and, if after the expiration of the said period of 5 years, or at such date as the settler may desire to commute, the public surveys of the United States have not been extended over the land located, a patent shall nevertheless issue for the land included within the boundaries of said location as thus recorded, upon proof to be submitted to the register and receiver of the proper land office, upon proof that he is a citizen of the United States, and upon the further proof required by section 2291 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as heretofore and herein amended, and under the procedure in the obtaining of patents to the unsurveyed lands of the United States, as provided for by section 10 of the act hereby amended, and under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior as hereinbefore provided, without the payment of any purchase price or other charges except the ordinary office fees and commissions of the register and receiver except $1.25 per acre on land commuted:" is hereby amended to read as follows: "that within 90 days from the date of settlement on surveyed or unsurveyed lands a notice shall be filed by or on behalf of the settler for record in the United States land office for the district in which the land is situated. Said notice shall contain the name of the settler and the date of the settlement, and such a description of the land settled upon, if surveyed, by legal subdivisions, section, township, and range, or, if unsurveyed, by reference to some natural object or permanent monument and by a statement if desired, of the approximate latitude and longitude determined from a map of Alaska, as will identify the land; and, if after the expiration of the period of 3 years, or at such date as the settler may desire to commute, the public surveys of the United States have not been extended over the land located, a patent shall nevertheless issue for the land included within the boundaries of said location as thus recorded, upon proof to be submitted to the manager of the proper land office that the settler is a citizen of the United States, and upon the further proof required by section 2291 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as heretofore and herein amended, and under the procedure in the obtaining of patents to the unsurveyed lands of the United States, as provided for by section 10 of the act hereby amended, and under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior as hereinbefore provided without the payment of any purchase price or other charges, except the ordinary office fees and commissions, and except $1.25 per acre on the land commuted:".

SEC. 2. Any person who at the effective date of this act is maintaining a settlement claim on surveyed or unsurveyed public land in Alaska shall file notice of the location of his settlement claim in the United States land office for the district in which the land is situated, (a) within 90 days from the effective date of this act, if notice of the location has not heretofore been filed in the recording district in which the land is situated, or (b) within 2 years from the effective date of this act, if notice of the location has heretofore been filed in such recording district.

SEC. 3. Unless notice of a settlement claim is filed in the proper district land office within the time prescribed by sections 1 and 2 of this act, the claimant, in making homestead proof or submitting a showing of residence, cultivation, and improvements as a basis for a free survey, shall not be given credit for such residence and cultivation as may have taken place prior to the filing of (a) a notice of the claim in the proper district land office, (b) a petition for survey, or (c) an application for homestead entry, whichever is the earlier.

SEC. 4. A homestead settler on unsurveyed public lands shall make proof of residence, cultivation, and improvements within 5 years from the date of the filing of notice of the settlement claim in the district land office, as a basis for a free survey under section 2 of the act of July 8, 1916 (39 Stat. 352, 48 U. S. C., 375), and thereafter shall submit final or commutation proof in accordance with regulations of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. All qualified persons, associations, or corporations now holding or hereafter initiating claims subject to the provisions of section 10, act of May 14, 1898 (30 Stat. 413, 48 U. S. C., sec. 461), as amended, shall file a notice describing such claim in the manner specified by section 1 of this act in the United States land office for the district in which the land is situated within 90 days from the effective date of this act or within 90 days from the date of the initiation of the claim, whichever is later. Unless such notice is filed in the proper district land office within the time prescribed the claimant shall not be given credit for the occupancy maintained in the claim prior to the filing of (1) a notice of the claim in the proper district land office, or (2) an application to purchase, whichever is earlier. Application to purchase claims, along with the required proof or showing, must be filed within 5 years after the filing of the notice of claim under this section.

EXPENDITURES FOR LAND FOR RADIO MONITORING STATIONS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4251) to amend section 4 (g) of the Communications Act of 1934 to permit the Federal Communications Commission to make expenditures for land for radio monitoring stations, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 (g) of the Communications Act of 1934 be amended to read as follows:

"(g) The Commission may make such expenditures (including expenditures for rent and personal services at the seat of government and elsewhere, for office supplies, lawbooks, periodicals, and books of reference, for printing and binding, for land for use as sites for radio monitoring stations and related facilities, including living quarters where necessary in remote areas, for the construction of such stations and facilities, and for the improvement, furnishing, equipping, and repairing of such stations and facilities and of laboratories and other related facilities (including construction of minor subsidiary buildings and structures not exceeding $25,000 in any one instance) used in connection with technical research activities) as may be necessary for the execution of the functions vested in the Commission and as from time to time may be appropriated for by Congress."

With the following committee amendments:

REVISION OF TITLE 14, UNITED STATES CODE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4566) to revise, codify, and enact into law, title 14 of the United States Code, entitled "Coast Guard."

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That title 14 of the United States Code, entitled, "Coast Guard," is hereby revised, codified, and enacted into law, and may be cited as "Title 14, United States Code, section —," as follows:

Chapter 1—Establishment and duties

Sec.
1. Establishment of Coast Guard.
2. Primary duties.
3. Relationship to Navy Department.
4. Operation as a service in the Navy.
5. "Secretary" defined.

§ 1. Establishment of Coast Guard

The Coast Guard as established January 28, 1915, shall be a military service and a branch of the armed forces of the United States at all times. The Coast Guard shall be a service in the Treasury Department, except when operating as a service in the Navy.

§ 2. Primary duties

The Coast Guard shall enforce or assist in the enforcement of all applicable Federal laws upon the high seas and waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; shall administer laws and promulgate and enforce regulations for the promotion of safety of life and property on the high seas and on waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States covering all matters not specifically delegated by law to some other executive department; shall develop, establish, maintain, and operate, with due regard to the requirements of the national defense, aids to maritime navigation, ice-breaking facilities, and rescue facilities for the promotion of safety on and over the high seas and waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; and shall maintain a state of readiness to function as a specialized service in the Navy in time of war.

§ 3. Relationship to Navy Department

Upon the declaration of war or when the President directs, the Coast Guard shall operate as a service in the Navy, and shall so continue until the President, by executive order, transfers the Coast Guard back to the Treasury Department. While operating as a service in the Navy, the Coast Guard shall be subject to the orders of the Secretary of the Navy who may order changes in Coast Guard operations to render them uniform, to the extent he deems advisable, with Navy operations.

§ 4. Operation as a service in the Navy

Whenever the Coast Guard operates as a service in the Navy:

(a) applicable appropriations of the Navy Department shall be available for the expense of the Coast Guard;

(b) applicable appropriations of the Coast Guard shall be available for transfer to the Navy Department;

(c) precedence between commissioned officers of corresponding grades in the Coast Guard and the Navy shall be determined by the date of rank stated by their commissions in those grades;

(d) personnel of the Coast Guard shall be eligible to receive gratuities, medals, and other insignia of honor on the same basis as personnel in the naval service or serving in any capacity with the Navy;

(e) the Secretary may place on furlough any officer of the Coast Guard and officers on furlough shall receive one-half of the pay to which they would be entitled if on leave of absence, but officers of the Coast Guard Reserve shall not be so placed on furlough; and

(f) personnel of the Coast Guard shall be subject to the laws prescribed for the government of the Navy.

§ 5. "Secretary" defined

As used in this title, the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the respective department in which the Coast Guard is operating.

Chapter 3—Composition and organization

41. Grades and ratings.
42. Number and distribution of commissioned officers.
43. Relative rank of commissioned officers with respect to Army and Navy.
44. Commandant; appointment.
45. Permanent grade of Commandant on expiration of term.
46. Retirement of Commandant.
47. Assistant Commandant and Engineer in Chief; appointment.
48. Permanent grade of Assistant Commandant and Engineer in Chief on expiration of term.
49. Retirement of Assistant Commandant and Engineer in Chief.

§ 41. Grades and ratings

In the Coast Guard there shall be a vice admiral, rear admirals, captains, commanders, lieutenant commanders, lieutenants, lieutenants (junior grade), ensigns, commissioned warrant officers, cadets, warrant officers, and enlisted men. Enlisted men shall be distributed in ratings established by the Secretary.

§ 42. Number and distribution of commissioned officers

The total number of commissioned officers, including permanent, temporary, temporary service, and reserve officers on active duty and excluding commissioned warrant officers, on the active list of the Coast Guard shall not exceed 2,250. Included in this number are the extra numbers in grade which under law operate to increase the authorized number of line officers upon separation or retirement of the person holding that number, and the members of the permanent commissioned teaching staff of the Coast Guard Academy, who shall not be considered as extra numbers in grade. The commissioned officers shall be distributed in the grades of rear admiral, captain, commander, lieutenant commander, lieutenant, lieutenant (junior grade), and ensign in the same percentages as prescribed by act of Congress for the Navy. To determine the authorized number of officers in the various grades as provided in this section the computation shall be based on the actual number of officers on active duty, including permanent, temporary, and reserve officers on active duty, but not including extra numbers in the Coast Guard at the date of making the computation. The Secretary shall, at least once each year, make such a computation, and the resulting numbers in the various grades as so computed shall be held and considered for all purposes as the authorized number in such various grades. The nearest whole number shall be regarded as the authorized number in case fractions result in the computation. The Secretary may, however, as he may from time to time determine the needs of the Coast Guard require, reduce the percentages applicable to any grade above lieutenant commander, and in order to compensate for such reduction increase correspondingly the percentages applicable to any grade or grades below the grade or grades in which such percentages are so reduced. No officer shall be reduced in permanent grade or pay or removed from the active list of the Coast Guard as the result of any computation or determination made by the Secretary to establish the number of officers in the various grades.

§ 43. Relative rank of commissioned officers with respect to Army and Navy

The commissioned officers of the Coast Guard rank as follows: Vice admirals with vice admirals in the Navy and lieutenant generals in the Army and the Air Force; rear admirals of the upper half with rear admirals of the upper half in the Navy and major generals in the Army and the Air Force; rear admirals of the lower half with real admirals of the lower half in the Navy and brigadier generals in the Army and the Air Force; captains with captains in the Navy and colonels in the Army and the Air Force; commanders with commanders in the Navy and lieutenant colonels in the Army and the Air Force; lieutenant commanders with lieutenant commanders in the Navy and majors in the Army and the Air Force; lieutenants with lieutenants in the Navy and captains in the Army and the Air Force; lieutenants (junior grade) with lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy and first lieutenants in the Army and the Air Force; and ensigns with ensigns in the Navy and second lieutenants in the Army and the Air Force.

§ 44. Commandant; appointment

The President may appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Commandant for a period of 4 years, who may be reappointed for further periods of 4 years, who shall act as Chief of the Coast Guard. The Commandant shall be appointed from the active list of line officers who hold a permanent commission as commander or above, and who have completed at least 10 years of service as a commissioned officer in the Coast Guard. The Commandant, while so serving, shall have the grade, pay, and allowances of vice admiral. The position vacated by an officer appointed Commandant shall be filled by promotion according to law.

§ 45. Permanent grade of Commandant on expiration of term

If the Commandant is not retired during or on the expiration of his term of service as Commandant, such officer, at the expiration of such term of service, shall have the permanent grade of rear admiral, with the pay and allowances of a rear admiral (upper half) and shall be carried as an additional number in that grade until the number of rear admirals (upper half) is reduced to the number authorized by law.

§ 46. Retirement of Commandant

Upon completion of 3 years or more of service as Commandant, any officer who is so serving or who has so served may, at any time thereafter without regard to total length of service, upon his own application, in the discretion of the President, be retired from active service and, unless entitled by law to retirement with higher grade or pay, shall be placed on the retired list with the grade and retired pay of vice admiral. A Commandant who is retired for physical disability during his term of service as Commandant shall, unless entitled by law to retirement at a higher grade or pay, be placed on the retired list with the grade and retired pay of vice admiral.

§ 47. Assistant Commandant and Engineer in Chief; appointment

The President may appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one Assistant Commandant for a period of 4 years, who may be reappointed for further periods of 4 years, and one Engineer in Chief for a period of 4 years, who may be reappointed for further periods of 4 years. The Assistant Commandant shall rank next after the Commandant, shall perform such duties as the Commandant may prescribe and shall act as Commandant during the absence or disability of the Commandant or in the event that there is a vacancy in the office of Commandant. The Assistant Commandant shall be selected from the active list of officers not below the grade of commander, and the Engineer in Chief shall be selected from the active list of officers not below the grade of commander who have qualified for engineering duty. The Commandant shall make recommendations for such appointments. The Assistant Commandant and Engineer in Chief shall, while so serving, have the grade of rear admiral and the pay and allowances of rear admiral (upper half). The position vacated by officers appointed Assistant Commandant or Engineer in Chief shall be filled by promotion according to law.

§ 48. Permanent grade of Assistant Commandant and Engineer in Chief on expiration of term

Officers whose terms of service as Assistant Commandant or Engineer in Chief have expired shall take their place on the lineal list in the permanent grade that they would have attained had they not served as Assistant Commandant or Engineer in Chief, and shall be additional numbers in those grades.

§ 49. Retirement of Assistant Commandant and Engineer in Chief

Upon retirement any officer who is serving, or has served not less than 2½ years, as Assistant Commandant or Engineer in Chief, unless entitled to retire at a higher grade or pay under other provisions of law, shall retire with the grade of rear admiral and with the retired pay of a rear admiral (upper half).

89. Law enforcement.
90. Ocean stations.
91. Safety of naval vessels.
92. Secretary; general powers.
93. Commandant; general powers.

§ 81. Aids to navigation authorized

In order to aid navigation and to prevent disasters, collisions, and wrecks of vessels and aircraft, the Coast Guard may establish, maintain, and operate:

(1) aids to maritime navigation required to serve the needs of the armed forces or of the commerce of the United States;

(2) aids to air navigation required to serve the needs of the armed forces of the United States as requested by the Secretary of the appropriate department within the National Military Establishment; and

(3) Loran stations (a) required to serve the needs of the armed forces of the United States; or (b) required to serve the needs of the maritime commerce of the United States; or (c) required to serve the needs of the air commerce of the United States as determined by the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics.

Such aids to navigation other than Loran stations shall be established and operated only within the United States, its Territories and possessions, and beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the United States at places where naval or military bases of the United States are or may be located, and at other places where such aids to navigation have been established prior to June 26, 1948.

§ 82. Cooperation with Administrator of Civil Aeronautics

The Coast Guard in establishing, maintaining, or operating any aids to air navigation herein provided shall solicit the cooperation of the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics to the end that the personnel and facilities of the Civil Aeronautics Administration will be utilized to the fullest possible advantage. Before locating and operating any such aid on military or naval bases or regions, the consent of the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of the Air Force, as the case may be, shall first be obtained. No such aid shall be located within the territorial jurisdiction of any foreign country without the consent of the government thereof. Nothing in this title shall be deemed to limit the authority granted by the provisions of section 458 of title 5, or by sections 175 (f) or 451–458 of title 49.

§ 83. Unauthorized aids to maritime navigation; penalty

No person, or public body, or instrumentality, excluding the armed services, shall establish, erect, or maintain any aid to maritime navigation without first obtaining authority to do so from the Coast Guard in accordance with applicable regulations. Whoever violates the provisions of this section or any of the regulations issued by the Secretary in accordance herewith shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than $100 for each offense. Each day during which such violation continues shall be considered as a new offense.

§ 84. Interference with aids to navigation; penalty

It shall be unlawful for any person, or public body, or instrumentality, excluding the armed forces, to remove, change the location of, obstruct, willfully damage, make fast to, or interfere with any aid to navigation established, installed, operated, or maintained by the Coast Guard pursuant to section 81 of this title, or with any aid to navigation lawfully maintained under authority granted by the Coast Guard pursuant to section 83 of this title, or to anchor any vessel in any of the navigable waters of the United States so as to obstruct or interfere with range lights maintained therein. Whoever violates the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than $500 for each offense. Each day during which such violation shall continue shall be considered as a new offense.

§ 85. Failure to maintain lights; penalty

Any person, firm, company, or corporation required by law to maintain lights upon any bridge or abutment over or in any navigable waters who shall fail or refuse to maintain such lights, or to obey any of the lawful rules and regulations relating to the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than $100 for each offense. Each day during which such violation shall continue shall be considered as a new offense.

§ 86. Marking of obstructions

The Coast Guard may mark for the protection of navigation any sunken vessel or other similar obstruction existing on any navigable waters of the United States, whenever the owner thereof has, in the judgment of the Coast Guard, failed suitably to mark the same in accordance with the provisions of section 409 of title 33. Until the abandonment of any such obstruction has been established in accordance with the provisions of section 414 of title 33, the owner thereof shall pay to the Coast Guard the cost of such marking. As soon as the abandonment of any such obstruction has been so established, the Secretary of the Army shall keep the same so marked pending removal thereof in accordance with the provisions of section 414 of title 33, but the Coast Guard may at the request of the Department of the Army continue the suitable marking of any such obstruction for and on behalf of that Department; and the cost of any such marking shall be borne by the Department of the Army. All moneys received by the Coast Guard from the owners of obstructions, in accordance with the provisions of this section, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts. No provision of this section shall be construed so as to relieve the owner of any such obstruction from the duty and responsibility suitably to mark the same in accordance with the provisions of section 409 of title 33.

§ 87. Buoys; color and numbering; passing

All buoys along the coast, or in bays, harbors, sounds, or channels, shall be colored and numbered so that passing up the coast or sound, or entering the bay, harbor, or channel, red buoys with even numbers shall be passed on the starboard hand, black buoys with uneven numbers on the port hand, and buoys with red and black horizontal stripes on either hand. Buoys in channel ways shall be colored with alternate white and black vertical stripes.

§ 88. Saving life and property

(a) In order to render aid to distressed persons, vessels, and aircraft on the high seas and on waters over which the United States has jurisdiction and in order to render aid to persons and property imperiled by flood, the Coast Guard may:

(1) Perform any and all acts necessary to rescue and aid persons and protect and save property;

(2) take charge of and protect all property saved from marine or aircraft disasters, or floods, at which the Coast Guard is present, until such property is claimed by persons legally authorized to receive it or until otherwise disposed of in accordance with law or applicable regulations, and care for bodies of those who may have perished in such catastrophies;

(3) furnish clothing, food, lodging, medicines, and other necessary supplies and services to persons succored by the Coast Guard; and

(4) destroy or tow into port sunken or floating dangers to navigation.

(b) The Coast Guard may render aid to persons and protect and save property at any time and at any place at which Coast Guard facilities and personnel are available and can be effectively utilized.

§ 89. Law enforcement

(a) The Coast Guard may make inquiries, examinations, inspections, searches, seizures, and arrests upon the high seas and waters over which the United States has jurisdiction, for the prevention, detection, and suppression of violations of laws of the United States. For such purposes, commissioned, warrant, and petty officers may at any time go on board of any vessel subject to the jurisdiction, or to the operation of any law, of the United States, address inquiries to those on board, to examine the ship's documents and papers, and examine, inspect, and search the vessel and use all necessary force to compel compliance. When from such inquiries, examination, inspection, or search it appears that a breach of the laws of the United States rendering a person liable to arrest is being, or has been committed, by any person, such person shall be arrested or, if escaping to shore, shall be immediately pursued and arrested on shore, or other lawful and appropriate action shall be taken; or, if it shall appear that a breach of the laws of the United States has been committed so as to render such vessel, or the merchandise, or any part thereof, on board of, or brought into the United States by, such vessel, liable to forfeiture, or so as to render such vessel liable to a fine or penalty and if necessary to secure such fine or penalty, such vessel or such merchandise, or both, shall be seized.

(b) The officers of the Coast Guard insofar as they are engaged, pursuant to the authority contained in this section, in enforcing any law of the United States shall:

(1) be deemed to be acting as agents of the particular executive department or independent establishment charged with the administration of the particular law; and

(2) be subject to all the rules and regulations promulgated by such department or independent establishment with respect to the enforcement of that law.

(c) The provisions of this section are in addition to any powers conferred by law upon such officers, and not in limitation of any powers conferred by law upon such officers, or any other officers of the United States.

§ 90. Ocean stations

(a) The Coast Guard is authorized to operate and maintain floating ocean stations for the purpose of providing search and rescue, communication, and air navigation facilities, and meteorological services in such ocean areas as are regularly traversed by aircraft of the United States.

(b) The Coast Guard is authorized, subject to approval by the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics, to operate, on floating ocean stations authorized herein, such air navigation facilities as the Administrator may find necessary or desirable for the safe and efficient protection and control of air traffic. The Coast Guard, in establishing, maintaining, or operating such air navigation facilities shall request the cooperation of the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics to the end that the personnel and facilities of the Civil Aeronautics Administration will be utilized to the fullest possible advantage.

§ 91. Safety of naval vessels

The captain of the port, Coast Guard district commander, or other officer of the Coast Guard designated by the Commandant thereof, or the Governor of the Panama Canal in the case of the territory and waters of the Canal Zone, shall so control the anchorage and movement of any vessel, foreign or domestic, in the territorial waters of the United States, as to insure the safety or security of such United States naval vessels as may be present in his jurisdiction. In territorial waters of the United States where immediate action is required, or where representatives of the Coast Guard are not present, or not present in sufficient force to exercise effective control of shipping as provided herein, the senior naval officer present in command of any naval force may control the anchorage or movement of any vessel, foreign or domestic, to the extent deemed necessary to insure the safety and security of his command.

§ 92. Secretary; general powers

For the purpose of executing the duties and functions of the Coast Guard the Secretary may within the limits of appropriations made therefor:

(a) establish, change the limits of, consolidate, discontinue, and re-establish Coast Guard districts;

(b) arrange with the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force to assign officers and enlisted men of the Coast Guard to any school maintained by the Army, Navy, and Air Force, for instruction and training, including aviation schools;

(c) construct, or cause to be constructed, Coast Guard shore establishments, and sell or otherwise dispose of unsuitable or unserviceable shore establishments, the monies received, less amount of expenses incurred from any such disposition (exclusive of governmental personal services), to be covered into the Treasury;

(d) design or cause to be designed, cause to be constructed, accepted as gift, or otherwise acquire vessels, and dispose of them, the monies received, less the amount of expenses incurred from any such disposition (exclusive of governmental personal services), to be covered into the Treasury;

(e) exchange vessels and parts thereof in part payment for new vessels;

(f) acquire land or interests in land, including acceptance of gifts thereof, where required for the purpose of carrying out any project or purpose for which an appropriation has been made;

(g) exchange land or interests in land in part or in full payment for such other land or interests in land as may be necessary or desirable, the balance of such part payment to be defrayable in accordance with other provisions of this section;

(h) exercise any of the powers vested by this title in the Commandant in any case in which the Secretary deems it appropriate; and

(i) do any and all things necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

§ 93. Commandant; general powers

For the purpose of executing the duties and functions of the Coast Guard the Commandant may:

(a) maintain water, land, and air patrols, and ice-breaking facilities;

(b) establish and prescribe the purpose of, change the location of, consolidate, discontinue, re-establish, maintain, operate, and repair Coast Guard shore establishments;

(c) assign vessels, aircraft, vehicles, aids to navigation, equipment, appliances, and supplies to Coast Guard districts and shore establishments, and transfer any of the foregoing from one district or shore establishment to another;

(d) conduct experiments, investigate, or cause to be investigated, plans, devices, and inventions relating to the performance of any Coast Guard function and cooperate and coordinate such activities with other Government agencies and with private agencies;

(e) conduct any investigations or studies that may be of assistance to the Coast Guard in the performance of any of its powers, duties, or functions;

(f) collect, publish, and distribute information concerning Coast Guard operations;

(g) conduct or make available to personnel of the Coast Guard such specialized training and courses of instruction, including correspondence courses, as may be necessary or desirable for the good of the service;

(h) design or cause to be designed, cause to be constructed, accept as gift, or otherwise acquire patrol boats and other small craft, equip, operate, maintain, supply, and repair such patrol boats, other small craft, aircraft, and vehicles, and dispose of them, the monies received, less the amount of expenses incurred from any such disposition (exclusive of governmental personal services), to be covered into the Treasury;

(i) acquire, accept as gift, maintain and repair aids to navigation, appliances, equipment, and supplies, and discontinue, or otherwise dispose of obsolete, unsuitable, or unserviceable aids to navigation, appliances, equipment, and supplies, the moneys received, less amount of expenses incurred from any such disposition (exclusive of governmental personal services), to be covered into the Treasury;

(j) equip, operate, maintain, supply, and repair Coast Guard districts and shore establishments;

(k) exchange aircraft, vehicles, and parts thereof, and obsolete, unsuitable, or unserviceable machines, tools, aids to navigation, appliances, equipment, and supplies in part payment for new items of the same or similar character as those proposed to be exchanged;

(l) establish, equip, operate, and maintain shops, depots, and yards for the manufacture and construction of aids to navigation, equipment, apparatus, vessels, vehicles, and aircraft not normally or economically obtainable from private contractors, and for the maintenance and repair of any property used by the Coast Guard;

(m) accept and utilize, in times of emergency in order to save life or protect property, such voluntary services as may be offered to the Coast Guard;

(n) rent or lease, under such terms and conditions as are deemed advistable, for a period not exceeding 5 years, such real property under the control of the Coast Guard as may not be required for immediate use by the Coast Guard, the moneys received from any such rental or lease, less amount of expenses incurred (exclusive of governmental personal services), to be covered into the Treasury;

(o) grant, under such terms and conditions as are deemed advisable, permits, licenses, easements, and rights-of-way over, across, in, and upon lands under the control of the Coast Guard when in the public interest and without substantially injuring the interests of the United States in the property thereby affected; and

(p) establish, install, abandon, reestablish, reroute, operate, maintain, repair, purchase, or lease such telephone and telegraph lines and cables, together with all facilities, apparatus, equipment, structures, appurtenances, accessories, and supplies used or useful in connection with the installation, operation, maintenance, or repair of such lines and cables, and acquire such real property, rights-of-way, easements, or attachment privileges as may be required for the installation, operation, and maintenance of such lines, cables, and equipment.

(q) establish, install, abandon, reestablish, change the location of, operate, maintain, and repair radio transmitting and receiving stations.

150. Coast Guard officers as attachés to missions .
151. Contracts with Government-owned establishments for work and material.

§ 141. General

(a) The Coast Guard may, when so requested by proper authority, utilize its personnel and facilities to assist any Federal agency, State, Territory, possession, or political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, to perform any activity for which such personnel and facilities are especially qualified.

(b) The Coast Guard, with the consent of the head of the agency concerned, may avail itself of such officers and employees, advice, information, and facilities of any Federal agency, State, Territory, possession, or political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia as may be helpful in the performance of its duties. In connection with the utilization of personal services of employees of State or local governments, the Coast Guard may make payments for necessary traveling and per diem expenses as prescribed for Federal employees by the standardized Government travel regulations.

§ 142. State Department

The Coast Guard, through the Secretary, may exchange information, through the Secretary of State, with foreign governments and suggest to the Secretary of State international collaboration and conferences on all matters dealing with the safety of life and property at sea, other than radio communication.

§ 143. Treasury Department

Commissioned, warrant, and petty officers of the Coast Guard are deemed to be officers of the customs and when so acting shall, insofar as performance of the duties relating to customs laws are concerned, be subject to regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury governing officers of the customs.

§ 144. Department of the Army and Department of the Air Force

(a) The Secretary of the Army or the Secretary of the Air Force at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury may, with or without reimbursement for the cost thereof, as agreed, receive officers and enlisted men of the Coast Guard for instruction in any school, including any aviation school, maintained by the Army or the Air Force, and such officers and enlisted men shall be subject to the regulations governing such schools.

(b) Officers and enlisted men of the Coast Guard shall be permitted to purchase quartermaster supplies from the Army at the same price as is charged the officers and enlisted men of the Army.

(c) Articles of ordnance property may be sold by the Chief of Ordnance to officers of the Coast Guard for their use in the public service in the same manner as these articles are sold to officers of the Army.

§ 145. Navy Department

(a) The Secretary of the Navy, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury may, with or without reimbursement for the cost thereof, as agreed:

(1) build any vessel for the Coast Guard at such Navy yards as the Secretary of the Navy may designate; and

(2) receive officers and enlisted men of the Coast Guard for instruction in any school, including any aviation school maintained by the Navy, and such officers and enlisted men shall be subject to the regulations governing such schools.

(b) Officers and enlisted men of the Coast Guard shall be permitted to purchase quartermaster supplies from the Navy and the Marine Corps at the same price as is charged the officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps.

(c) When the Coast Guard is operating in the Treasury Department, the Secretary shall provide for such peacetime training and planning of reserve strength and facilities as is necessary to insure an organized, manned, and equipped Coast Guard when it is required for wartime operation in the Navy. To this end, the Secretary of the Navy, for the Navy, and the Secretary of the Treasury, for the Coast Guard, may from time to time exchange such information, make available to each other such personnel, vessels, facilities, and equipment, and agree to undertake such assignments and functions for each other as they may agree are necessary and advisable.

§ 146. Post Office Department

Coast Guard facilities and personnel may be utilized for the transportation and delivery of mail matter during emergency conditions or at isolated locations under such arrangements as may be satisfactory to the Secretary and the Postmaster General.

§ 147. Department of Commerce

In order to promote the safety of life and property on and over the high seas and waters over which the United States has jurisdiction, and to facilitate the preparation and dissemination by the Weather Bureau of the weather reports, forecasts, and warnings essential to the safe and efficient conduct of domestic and international commerce on and over such seas and waters, the Commandant may coperate with the Chief of the Weather Bureau by procuring, maintaining, and making available, facilities and assistance for observing, investigating, and communicating weather phenomena and for disseminating weather data, forecasts and warnings, the mutually satisfactory terms of such cooperation in weather service to be agreed upon and arranged between the Commandant and the Chief of the Weather Bureau.

§ 148. Maritime instruction

The Coast Guard may, when so requested by proper authority, detail officers and enlisted men for duty in connection with maritime instruction and training by the several States, Territories, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico, and when requested by the United States Maritime Commission, detail persons in the Coast Guard for duty in connection with maritime instruction and training by the United States. The service rendered by any person so detailed shall be considered Coast Guard duty.

§ 149. Detail of officers and men to assist foreign governments

The President may upon application from the foreign governments concerned, and whenever in his discretion the public interests render such a course advisable, detail officers and enlisted men of the Coast Guard to assist foreign governments in matters concerning which the Coast Guard may be of assistance. Officers and enlisted men so detailed may accept, from the government to which detailed, offices and such compensation and emoluments thereunder appertaining as may be first approved by the Secretary. While so detailed such officers and enlisted men shall receive, in addition to the compensation and emoluments allowed them by such governments, the pay and allowances to which they are entitled in the Coast Guard and shall be allowed the same credit for longevity, retirement, and for all other purposes that they would receive if they were serving with the Coast Guard.

§ 150. Coast Guard officers as attachés to missions

Commissioned officers may, with the consent of the Secretary of State, be regularly and officially attached to the diplomatic missions of the United States in those nations with which the United States is extensively engaged in maritime commerce. Expenses for the maintenance of such Coast Guard attachés abroad, including office rental and pay of employees and allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, may be defrayed by the Coast Guard.

§ 151. Contracts with Government-owned establishments for work and material

All orders or contracts for work or material, under authorization of law, placed with Government-owned establishments by the Coast Guard, shall be considered as obligations in the same manner as provided for similar orders or contracts placed with private contractors, and appropriations for such work or material shall remain available for payment therefor as in the case of orders or contracts placed with private contractors.

193. Advisory committee.
194. Annual Board of Visitors.

§ 181. Administration of Academy

The immediate government and military command of the Coast Guard Academy shall be in the Superintendent of the Academy, subject to the direction of the Commandant under the general supervision of the Secretary. The Commandant may select a superintendent from the active list of the Coast Guard who shall serve in the pleasure of the Commandant.

§ 182. Cadets; number, appointment, obligation to serve

The number of cadets appointed annually to the Academy shall be as determined by the Secretary but the number appointed in any 1 year shall not exceed 300. Appointments to cadetships shall be made under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, who shall determine age limits, methods of selection of applicants, term of service as a cadet before graduation, and all other matters affecting such appointments. The Secretary may summarily dismiss from the Coast Guard any cadet who, during his cadetship, is found unsatisfactory in either studies or conduct, or may be deemed not adapted for a career in the Coast Guard. Previous to his admission each cadet shall obligate himself, in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe, to serve at least 4 years as an officer in the Coast Guard after graduation, if his service be so long required. Cadets shall be subject to rules governing discipline prescribed by the Commandant.

§ 183. Cadets; initial clothing allowance

Each cadet, upon admission to the Academy, shall be credited with the sum of $250 to cover the cost of his initial clothing and equipment issued, to be deducted subsequently from his pay in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

§ 184. Cadets; degree of bachelor of science

The Superintendent of the Academy may, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary shall prescribe, confer the degree of bachelor of science upon all graduates of the Academy and may, in addition, confer the degree of bachelor of science upon such other living graduates of the Academy as shall have met the requirements of the Academy for such degree.

§ 185. Cadets; appointment as ensign

The President may, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint as ensigns in the Coast Guard all cadets who shall graduate from the Academy. Ensigns so commissioned on the same date shall take rank according to their proficiency as shown by the order of their merit at date of graduation.

§ 186. Civilian instructors

The Secretary may appoint in the Coast Guard, subject to the competitive provisions of the civil-service laws and regulations, such number of civilian instructors as the needs of the service require, not to exceed eight, whose compensation shall be fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. Leaves of absence and hours of work for such civilian instructors shall be governed by regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, without regard to sections 29a, 30b–30m, 84, 663, 667, 672a–673, and chapter 18, of title 5.

§ 187. Permanent commissioned teaching staff; composition

The permanent commissioned teaching staff at the Academy shall consist of not more than three professors who may serve as heads of departments, and not more than 12 associate professors, assistant professors, and commissioned instructors, one of whom shall be the librarian. They shall perform duties as prescribed by the Commandant, and exercise command only in the academic department of the Academy.

§ 188. Appointment of permanent commissioned teaching staff

The President may appoint in the Coast Guard, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the professors, associate professors, assistant professors, and commissioned instructors who are to serve on the permanent commissioned teaching staff of the Academy. An original appointment to the permanent commissioned teaching staff, unless the appointee has served as a civilian instructor, regular commissioned officer, temporary commissioned officer, or reserve commissioned officer in the Coast Guard, shall be a temporary appointment until the appointee has satisfactorily completed a probationary term of 4 years of service; thereafter he may be regularly appointed and his rank shall date from the date of his temporary appointment in the rank in which permanently appointed.

§ 189. Grade of permanent commissioned teaching staff

Professors shall be commissioned officers with grade not above captain, associate and assistant professors with grade not above commander, and commissioned instructors with grade not above lieutenant commander. All officers of the permanent commissioned teaching staff shall receive the pay and allowances of other commissioned officers of the same grade and length of service. When any such professor, associate professor, or assistant professor is appointed or commissioned with grade less than the highest grade permitted, he shall be promoted under regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

§ 190. Retirement of permanent commissioned teaching staff

Professors, associate professors, assistant professors, and commissioned instructors in the Coast Guard shall be subject to retirement from active service for any cause on the same basis as other permanent commissioned officers of the Coast Guard, and service as a civilian instructor or civilian librarian at the Academy in addition to creditable service authorized by any other law in any of the military services rendered prior to an appointment as a professor, associate professor, assistant professor, or commissioned instructor shall be credited in computing length of service for retirement purposes. The provisions of law relating to retirement for disability in line of duty shall not apply in the case of a professor, associate professor, assistant professor, or commissioned instructor serving under a temporary appointment.

§ 191. Credit for service as civilian instructor

Service as a civilian instructor or civilian librarian at the Academy in addition to creditable services authorized by any other law in any of the military services rendered prior to an appointment as professor, associate professor, assistant professor, or commissioned instructor shall be credited in computing length of service as a professor, associate professor, assistant professor, or commissioned instructor for purposes of pay and allowances.

§ 192. Assignment of personnel as instructors

The Commandant may assign any commissioned officer, warrant officer, or enlisted man to appropriate instruction duty at the Academy.

§ 193. Advisory committee

The Secretary may appoint an Advisory Committee to the Academy, consisting of not more than seven persons of distinction in education and other fields relating to the purposes of the Academy, who shall serve without pay. Members of the Advisory Committee shall be appointed for terms of not to exceed 3 years and may be reappointed. The Secretary shall, in June of each year, appoint one of the members to serve as chairman. The members so appointed shall visit the Academy at least once during the academic year on the call of the Chairman and may convene once each year at Headquarters, at the call of the Commandant, for the purpose of examining the course of instruction and advising the Commandant relative thereto. Each member of the Committee shall be reimbursed from Coast Guard appropriations in conformity with section 73b–1 of title 5, or such actual expenses as permitted by section 73b–2 of title 5 shall be defrayed by the Coast Guard.

§ 194. Annual Board of Visitors

(a) In addition to the Advisory Committee, there shall be appointed in January of each year a Board of Visitors to the Academy, consisting of two Senators and three Members of the House of Representatives, appointed by the chairmen of the committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, having cognizance of legislation pertaining to the Academy, the chairmen of said committees being ex officio members of the Board, and of one Senator and two Members of the House of Representatives appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively. Whenever a member or an ex officio member is unable to attend the annual meeting as provided in this section another member may be appointed in his stead in the manner as herein provided but without restriction as to month of appointment.

(b) Such Board shall visit the Academy annually on a date to be fixed by the Secretary. Each member of the Board shall be reimbursed from the Coast Guard appropriations under Government travel regulations for the actual expense incurred by him while engaged in duties as a member of such Board, or such actual expenses as permitted under such regulations shall be defrayed by the Coast Guard.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS

§ 221. Filling of vacancies

Whenever a vacancy occurs in the active list of regular commissioned officers, in the grade of ensign or above, which the Secretary determines shall be filled, such vacancy shall be filled either by promotion through appointment by the President to a higher grade as hereinafter provided or by appointment by the President from among the groups set forth in section 225 of this title.

§ 222. Promotion of officers to flag rank

Commissioned officers, including extra numbers in grade, shall be promoted to the grade of rear admiral by selection, under such regulations as the Secretary shall prescribe. The precedence on the list of rear admirals shall be determined by the date of first appointment to that grade, except that the Assistant Commandant shall, while holding such office, be next in precedence to the Commandant.

§ 223. Filling of vacancies by promotion

(a) When a vacancy below the grade of rear admiral is to be filled by promotion as determined by the Secretary, the senior officer of the next lower grade, not out of line of promotion, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to fill such vacancy as of the date such vacancy occurred. No commissioned officer shall be promoted to a higher grade on the active list until his mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform the duties of such higher grade have been established to the satisfaction of the Secretary, and until he has been pronounced physically qualified to perform the duties of such higher grade.

(b) The Secretary may prescribe regulations dealing with the filling of vacancies by promotion, including, but not limited to, the scope and method of conducting professional and physical examinations, the number of reexaminations permitted, the circumstances under which an officer may be excused from being examined in a particular subject, and the passing marks required; and dealing with the placing of officers out of, and the restoring of officers to, the line of promotion.

(c) An ensign who has completed 3 years' service in his grade shall be eligible for promotion to lieutenant (junior grade) if he is qualified therefor in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary shall prescribe.

§ 224. Filling of vacancies by appointment

(a) Vacancies in the grade of captain and below may be filled by appointment. When a vacancy is to be filled by appointment thereto from among the groups set forth in section 225 of this title as determined by the Secretary, such officer shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(b) The Secretary may prescribe regulations dealing with the filling of vacancies by appointment, including, but not limited to, the scope and method of conducting professional and physical examinations and the passing marks required.

(c) Any person thus appointed as a permanent commissioned officer shall take precedence in the grade in which he is appointed in accordance with the date of his commission as a permanent commissioned officer in such grade. Appointees whose dates of commission are the same shall take precedence with each other as the Secretary shall determine.

§ 225. Permanent appointments

(a) The President may appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, permanent commissioned officers in the Coast Guard in grades appropriate to their qualifications, experience, and length of service, as the needs of the Coast Guard may require, from among the following categories:

(1) Graduates of the Coast Guard Academy;

(2) Temporary commissioned officers of the Coast Guard who have served at least 2 years as such;

(3) Commissioned warrant officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Coast Guard;

(4) Members of the Coast Guard Reserve who have served at least 2 years as such; and

(5) Licensed officers of the United States merchant marine who have served 4 or more years aboard a vessel of the United States in the capacity of a licensed officer, but any person of this category, commissioned pursuant to this section, shall serve a probationary period of 2 years, during which time his commission may be revoked if his services are unsatisfactory, under such regulations as the Secretary shall prescribe.

(b) No person shall be appointed a commissioned officer until his mental, moral, physical, and professional fitness to perform the duties of a commissioned officer has been established as the result of such examinations as the Secretary shall prescribe.

§ 226. Temporary appointments

(a) The Secretary may appoint temporary commissioned officers in the grade of lieutenant commander or below, appropriate to their qualifications and experience, who, while in service, shall receive the same pay, allowances, and benefits as permanent commissioned officers of corresponding grade and length of service, except that no temporary commissioned officer as such shall be entitled to retirement while serving under his temporary commission. Temporary appointments shall be made only after the candidate has satisfactorily passed such examination as the Secretary shall prescribe. The names of all persons who are appointed temporary commissioned officers shall be placed on a special list of temporary commissioned officers, as distinguished from the list of permanent commissioned officers.

(b) Any warrant officer or enlisted man in the regular Coast Guard may be appointed as a temporary commissioned officer. Notwithstanding such temporary appointment, any such warrant officer or enlisted man shall be entitled to retirement in his permanent grade or rating in the same manner as though he had continued to hold his permanent grade or rating, and upon the termination of such temporary appointment shall be entitled to revert to such grade or rating.

Service under any such temporary appointment shall be included in determining length of service as a warrant officer or enlisted man.

§ 227. Promotion and dismissal of temporary commissioned officers

The Secretary may, without regard to length of service or seniority, promote any temporary commissioned officer to a grade not above that of captain, and may call for the resignation of, dismiss, or reduce in grade, any temporary commissioned officer for unfitness, or misconduct, or when his services are no longer required.

§ 228. Appointment of commissioned warrant officers

(a) The President may appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, permanent commissioned warrant officers in the Coast Guard, as the needs of the Coast Guard may require, from among the following categories:

(1) temporary commissioned officers of the Coast Guard;

(2) temporary commissioned warrant officers of the Coast Guard;

(3) temporary and permanent warrant officers of the Coast Guard;

(4) enlisted men of the Coast Guard;

(5) members of the Coast Guard Reserve; and

(6) licensed officers of the United States Merchant Marine.

(b) No person shall be appointed a commissioned warrant officer until his mental, moral, physical, and professional fitness to perform the duties of a commissioned warrant officer has been established as the result of such examination as the Secretary shall prescribe.

(c) Appointees under this section shall take precedence with other commissioned warrant officers in accordance with the dates of their commissions. Appointees whose dates of commission are the same shall take precedence with each other as the Secretary may determine.

§ 229. Revocation of commissions during first 3 years of commissioned service

The President, under such regulations as he may prescribe, may revoke the commission of any officer on the active list who, at the date of such revocation, has had less than 3 years of continuous service as a commissioned officer in the Coast Guard, and each officer whose commission is so revoked shall revert to his former status or be separated from the Coast Guard.

§ 230. Compulsory retirement at age of 62

Any commissioned officer who has reached the age of 62 shall be retired from active service, with retired pay of the grade with which retired.

§ 231. Voluntary retirement after 30 years' service

Any commissioned officer who has completed 30 years' service may, upon his own application, in the discretion of the Secretary, be retired from active service with retired pay of the grade with which retired.

§ 232. Voluntary retirement after 20 years' service

Any commissioned officer who has completed 20 years' active service in the Coast Guard, Navy, or Marine Corps, or the reserve components thereof, including active duty for training, at least 10 years of which shall have been active commissioned service, may, upon his own application, in the discretion of the President, be retired from active service, with retired pay of the grade with which retired.

§ 233. Retirement for disabilities incident to service

Any commissioned officer found by a retiring board to be incapacitated for active service because of infirmities of age or physical or mental disability, which is incident to service, shall if the findings of the retiring board are approved by the Secretary, be retired from active service, with retired pay of the grade with which retired.

§ 234. Retirement for failure in physical examination for promotion

Any commissioned officer who fails in his physical examination for promotion shall immediately be brought before a retiring board and if found incapacitated for service by reason of disability contracted incident to service shall be retired from active service with the grade for which he was examined for promotion, with retired pay of such advanced grade.

§ 235. Personnel Board; procedure; recommendations

The Secretary shall designate and assemble annually a Coast Guard Personnel Board of not less than five commissioned officers of the grade of captain or above on the active list. The Personnel Board shall—

(1) recommend for retirement such commissioned officers of the Coast Guard who have 30 years of service as it determines, upon the basis of the needs of the service, should be retired from active service,

(2) recommend for retirement such commissioned officers of the Coast Guard who have been placed out of line of promotion and who have 10 years of commissioned service as the Personnel Board determines, in its discretion, should be retired from active service, and

(3) recommend for placing out of line of promotion such lieutenant commanders on the active list as the Personnel Board determines, in its discretion, should be placed out of line of promotion.

The proceedings, findings, or recommendations of the Personnel Board shall be transmitted to the Commandant for review. If the Commandant approves the recommendations of the Personnel Board, notification thereof shall be given by him in writing to each officer concerned who for the first time under this section is recommended for retirement or for placing out of line of promotion; any such officer who, within 30 days after receipt of such notification, files with the Commandant a written protest of the action taken by the Personnel Board in his case, shall not be retired involuntarily or placed out of line of promotion under this section unless a subsequent annual Personnel Board, none of the members of which was a member of the previous Personnel Board which recommended such officer's retirement or placing out of line of promotion, determines, in its discretion, and recommends that such officer should be retired or placed out of line of promotion, in which case such officer may, upon approval by the President, be retired from active service, or be placed out of line of promotion, as the case may be. At the expiration of 30 days after receipt by an officer of notice as aforesaid, in the event that no such protest is filed by him, such officer may, upon approval by the President, be retired from active service or be placed out of line of promotion, as the case may be, as hereinafter provided. If the Commandant disapproves any recommendation of the Personnel Board, the officer concerned shall retain his status in the Coast Guard to the same extent as if his case had not been considered by such Personnel Board. Except as hereinbefore provided, each recommendation of the Personnel Board which is finally approved by the Commandant, together with the proceedings and findings of the Personnel Board, shall be transmitted to the Secretary for further review, and if the Secretary shall disapprove any recommendation of the Personnel Board, the officer concerned shall retain his status in the Coast Guard to the same extent as if his case had not been considered by such Personnel Board. Each recommendation of the Personnel Board which is not disapproved by the Secretary shall be laid before the President by the Secretary with his recommendation in the case. The President may, in any calendar year, pursuant to recommendations so laid before him:

(1) place out of line of promotion such number of lieutenant commanders on the active list as the needs of the service require;

(2) retire from active duty such number of commissioned officers who have 30 or more years of service as the needs of the service require; and

(3) retire from active duty any officer who has been placed out of line of promotion and who has 10 years or more of commissioned service.

§ 236. Pay and grade upon involuntary retirement after 30 years' service

Any commissioned officer who has completed 30 years' service and who has been retired from active duty by the President pursuant to the action of a Personnel Board shall, unless entitled to retire at a higher grade or pay under other provisions of law, receive the retired pay of the grade with which retired.

§ 237. Pay and grade upon involuntary retirement after 10 years' service

Any commissioned officer who has completed 10 years' commissioned service and who has been retired from active duty by the President pursuant to the action of a Personnel Board shall, unless entitled to retire at a higher grade or pay under other provisions of law, be retired in the permanent grade held at the time of such retirement, with retired pay of the grade with which retired.

§ 238. Voluntary retirement when out of line of promotion

Any commissioned officer who, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, is placed out of line of promotion, and who has completed 10 years commissioned service, may, at his own request and with the approval of the Secretary, be retired from active service with the permanent grade held at the time of such retirement, with retired pay of the grade with which retired.

§ 239. Retirement in case of special commendation

Any commissioned officer who has been specially commended for his performance of duty in actual combat prior to December 31, 1946, by the head of the executive department under whose jurisdiction the duty was performed, shall, upon retirement, be placed on the retired list one grade higher than the grade in which serving at the time of retirement, with 75 percent of the active-duty pay of the grade in which serving at the time of retirement and the grade in which serving at the time of retirement shall be construed to mean the highest grade in which so serving whether by virtue of permanent or temporary appointment therein.

§ 240. Recall to active duty during war or national emergency
